BLACK ICARUS

SEP 19 1942

In the first airplane fashioned of wood and wax by his ingenious father, Daedalus, young Icarus sought to flee from Crete to Greece, but he soared too near the sun, the wax wings melted and he hurtled to earth and to his death.

Today we have many black Icaruses trained to fly in cunningly fashioned machines, the best airplanes in the world, but they are kept on the ground because the sun of racial segregation is so hot that it immobilizes their planes.

The 99th Pursuit Squadron, composed entirely of Negroes (and the only Air Corps unit in which black aviators may serve) was set up at Tuskegee, Alabama, in July, 1941, over a year ago, with capacity for training only 33 aviators at a time while the Army was crying for hundreds of thousands of aviators.

This move was highly praised by almost everyone except a critical minority distrustful of any racial segregation for no matter what allegedly "good" reason. A few months later the first black Air Corps officers were trained and commissioned. Others are being commissioned from time to time, and according to Lieut. Gen. Henry H. Arnold, chief of the Army Air Corps, the number trained and commissioned is now 34, or sufficient for a completely manned pursuit squadron.

Now comes Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson with the information that the Tuskegee school is "being expanded" and that by June 30, 1943, a year hence and two years after establishment of the school, "a complete fighter group with all necessary crew and base services will be ready for combat."

If this snail's pace were general throughout the U.S. Air Corps, the war would soon be lost and we would have to sue the Axis powers for peace.

While the War Department has been stalling along with its segregated Tuskegee set-up trying to turn out one all-Negro pursuit squadron, thousands of American, Dutch, British, Canadian and Chinese pilots have been trained at air fields all over the United States, are displaying their wings and participating in bombing and combat in actual warfare.

Black Icarus requires two years for training, it seems, while white Icarus is ready for the front in a year or less because his wings are not warped by segregation growing out of official adherence to the hated race and blood theory which the Nazis flaunt.

To reasonable people not blinded by racial prejudice and wedded to a policy of jim crowism, the sensible thing to have done would have been to send black cadets to air schools along with whites and Mongolians, commission them together, assign them as pilots, bombers and/or navigators together wherever needed regardless of the vicious racial theory.

It must please Reichfuehrer Hitler and Herr Doktor Goebbels to know that the bombing of Axis cities and convoys, and the strafing of Axis troops are lessened by Allied acceptance of the racial theories which Anglo-American politicians, professors and propagandists publicly denounce.

FIRST NEGRO PARACHUTE UNIT TRAIN FOR SERVICE

SEP 25 1942

DOTHAN, Ala., Sept. 25—Colored citizens throughout Alabama are thrilled at the progress being made by the sturdy and loyal Negro soldiers stationed at Camp Rucker and who are trainees in the First Air Base Security Training batallions.

Under command of Col. L. B. Wyant, these men are training vigorously as part of the army ground forces, their special duty being to oppose and destroy enemy parachute troops and protect air fields and bases wherever they are needed in the present world-wide war on six continents.

The air base security batallions are said to be the first units in a war department plan to organize more of this type, and one soldier out of every 10 trainees will wear the stripes of a sergeant. Scarcely a third of them will remain privates, and many, through special qualifications, will rise to the six higher grades of enlisted men.

The air base security troops must be self-reliant. They will fight as small, self-contained combat teams. Their mission, many times, will be to clean out stubborn little knots of enemy parachutists who have landed on the edge of an airfield and dug in solidly in machine gun nests.

Communication between combat teams will be vitally important. Thus many of the troops must learn not only to be skilled in fighting, but also technically proficient with field radios and telephones. They are learning, four hours a day, in the group's clicking communication school.

They will have for communication the best equipment the signal corps can supply. They will have the latest model walkie-talkies — those little black portable radios you carry on your back, with a fish-pole antenna reaching up six feet over your head. They will have, too, a newly-designed type of telephone which doesn't even require batteries or outside electric power.

DOES AMERICA NEED AVIATORS?

AUG 22 1942

With ambitious plans afoot for building sufficient war planes to cloud the skies over Germany and Japan, one would imagine that the Government would be doing everything under the sun to train as many aviators as possible, male and female.

Unfortunately there is no evidence of any such effort so far as qualified colored citizens are concerned, and since these citizens constitute ten per cent of the population, a stranger to the American scene would conclude that America does NOT need aviators.

A handful of colored pilots and ground crewmen have been trained at the Tuskegee air base, but because of racial segregation (which is ignored when most people praise the Tuskegee "experiment"), none has been trained elsewhere.

If white pilots fail to qualify as Army aviators, they can get training as bombadiers, navigators, etc., but when black pilots fail to qualify at Tuskegee they are out of luck.

White pilots handle all type of planes from fighters to flying fortresses, but black pilots are restricted to fighter planes, and to very few of them.

Because of the racial quota system which limits Negroes to only one squadron, hundreds of qualified Negroes are left on the waiting list so long, according to the NAACP, that they are drafted into the Army before they are reached, while white youths wait only 90 days at most.

Of course Negro pilots can only get fighter plane training because that is the only kind of training given at Tuskegee air base, and colored cadets are barred because of their color from other air bases where youngsters without Negro ancestry train as bombadiers and navigators.

The experience at Tuskegee proves again that segregation ALWAYS means discrimination and is therefore a menace no matter how attractive it may appear to optimists.

If American Negroes are to play a full part in the prosecution of the war, the color line will have to go, in the armed services, in war industries, in all civilian enterprises and undertakings.

AUG 22 1942

The first step in that direction, of course, is for Secretary of War Stimson to work up sufficient courage to admit Negro cadets to all air fields in all parts of the country for all available training.

If Negro and white officers and candidates can be trained together, as they are, in officer training schools, then Negro and white air cadets can be trained together at various air bases.

Surely not even the most hard-headed Negrophobe would contend that the West Point Military Academy is socially inferior to Randolph Field, and yet many Negroes have attended the former while none is permitted to attend the latter.

While trying to successfully prosecute a war to maintain white supremacy in the Army and Navy, the Government is in grave danger of losing the war for democracy through an insufficient supply of Air Corps personnel.

More and more the conviction grows that a lot of people in charge of the United States war effort are not as bright as they should be.

STIMSON BARES PLAN FOR MORE NEGRO PILOTS

SEP 5 1942

McKeough Gets A Reply On Complaint Made

By Willa Brown

WASHINGTON, D. C.—In a letter made public this week, Henry L. Stimson, secretary of war, confirmed an exclusive report published in the Chicago Defender over a month ago that more Negroes were to be admitted for training as pilots by the army.

The Stimson letter was written to Rep. Raymond S. McKeough, of Illinois, who had on July 21 forwarded to the War Department secretary a letter from Miss Willa Brown complaining about the exclusion of Negroes from the army air forces.

To date the number of Negroes admitted as army air cadets has been limited to approximately 200 a year.

In his letter Stimson said "just recently final approval was given to a plan which calls for the pilot training of a further limited number of Negroes, but the details of this plan have not been evolved completely."

Prior to the release of Stimson's letter, the Defender which has cooperated with Miss Brown in the breaking down of the army regulation which has diverted hundreds of potential flyers from the air corps because of their race, indicated that such action would be taken.

Following up a report made to the House by Rep. Milton West of Texas, the Defender learned that Negro units were to be stationed at a number of air fields throughout the country.

These units, the War Department told the Defender, would in addition to ground crews include flying squadrons.

As far back as May, the Defender sought confirmation of increased aeronautical training for Negroes when it learned that the United States Civil Service Commission was recruiting Negroes to train as student instructors for the air corps technical service.

It was believed then that a carbon copy of the giant army air corps technical school at Chanute field, Rantoul, Ill., was to be established at Tuskegee. This, though a further extension of the army's jim crow policy in the air corps, has not been denied by the War Department.

As a matter of fact, Truman K. Gibson Jr., acting civilian aide to Stimson, has been strangely silent on requests for confirmation.

Recently, however, in a letter to Miss Brown, Gibson wrote that "the army is desirous of obtaining pilots in connection with field artillery air observation units."

Stimson's letter confirms these other reports which were regarded as reliable but not official.

Miss Brown, who might be logically called the "mother" of Negro aviation so far as the army is concerned, is director of the largest privately owned aeronautics school operated by the Race.

Known as the Coffey School of Aeronautics, after its president, Cornelius R. Coffey, the institution is located on Harlem airport, a few miles southwest of Chicago.

McKeough who was foremost among congressmen to fight for protective clauses guaranteeing the participation of Negroes in the civilian pilot training program when it was launched in 1939, has continued to show a marked interest in Negro aviation.

The plan now being evolved by the War Department is expected to open a "bottleneck" caused by recent changes in the administration of the civilian pilot training program which has eliminated young Negroes not only from military flight training but from government-sponsored civilian flying as well.

During the next 12 months, the Coffey school and the civilian school at Tuskegee are expected to carry the brunt of training so far as Negroes are concerned.

This concentration of training in the two schools resulted from the elimination of several colleges, mostly in the East, from the program because of restrictions placed on civilian flying by army officials.

Little Randall Bruce Webb, son of Capt. and Mrs. George W. Webb, holds the signal honor of being the first infant to be christened in the new chapel.

The new chapel is equipped with an outer vestry where free literature might be obtained upon entering the building. A varied assortment of religious booklets and periodicals was donated by the David Cook company, Elgin, Ill.; the American Bible society of New York City, and the Moody Bible institute of Chicago, Ill. Other rooms within the building include a reception room, a room for private consultation, chaplain's office, secretarial office, choir loft and a cooling system.

Army Uses Handbook By Negro

OCT 3 - 1942

TUSKEGEE, Ala.—Announcement was made this week that a military handbook entitled "Chemical Warfare Simplified," written by Lt. Don B. Owens Jr., is currently being used by certain units of the United States Army. The author of the book is assigned to the army flying school here as post chemical property officer and assistant post chemical officer.

The handbook is said to encompass much vital military information providing a working knowledge of the essentials of protective measures such as would ordinarily be obtainable only from the study of numerous volumes.

Lt. Owen has had close to 15 years service as a chemical warfare officer and is a veteran of World War No. 1.

Lt. Cassius Harris Becomes City's 1st Army Air Pilot

TUSKEGEE, Ala.—Second lieutenant Cassius A. Harris became Philadelphia's first Army pilot when he received his wings last Wednesday morning with other members of the fifth class of Tuskegee Army Flying School. Eight men were commissioned.

COMPLIMENTS CADETS

Leading the military procession were Colonel Frederick V. H. Kimble, post commander; and Lieutenant-Colonels Noel F. Parrish and Benjamin O. Davis, Jr., director and executive officer of the school respectively.

"It is but natural that in the happiness and satisfaction which you feel today at having completed your courses as Aviation Cadets and becoming rated pilots in the Air Forces of the Army you should think back over the road which you have traveled since your thoughts first centered on a desire to fly," declared Col. Kimble in his address to the candidates.

LAUDS DETERMINATION

"Your desire and determination to master the air are typical of the many discoveries and tremendous developments which have marked man's history," he said.

"You have been trained in this school for assignment to fighter squadrons, single aircraft with individual pilots. You and your plane are one. It calls for great individual prowess. To acquire that, fighter pilots must have courage, confidence, and ability. Your graduation is indicative of the fact that trust is placed in you to carry out this mission."

In closing, the Colonel advised, "As your work progresses, you will find that your successful operation depends not only on these factors but on the work of others—the men who sustain the ships and others on the ground who make it possible for the fighter pilot to take the air.... It is a peculiar combination: one of individualism and self-reliance, and other of realizatiton and respect for teamwork.... Without team cooperation, no great success can be accomplished."

The diplomas and commissions were awarded by Colonel Kimble, while Colonels Parrish and Davis presented the successful graduates with their wings.

Flying Base Has Mammoth Scope

TUSKEGEE—(A N P)—Few persons outside the Tuskegee Flying field realize the scope of this organization which is feverishly busy turning out army aviators. There are actually [illegible] different units here, each of them necessary to the making of this unit a complete self sustained whole.

Among these units are:

In addition to the above there are numerous civilian instructors being trained at Chanute Field, Ill. These men will be transferred to set up a training school at Tuskegee for airplane mechanics and ground crews. It is expected that when it is finished the Tuskegee Flying field will be another Chanute, capable of training every man necessary to the development of complete aviation units.

There are [illegible] P-40 planes on order in addition to those already at the field. It is predicted that the Tuskegee Flying field will have a force of 3,500 people by October 1st.

New Doors Open to Us

Thirty-four Negro flyers have completed their training for army service and twice as many are in the process. The head of aviation says the training of these men has been in the nature of an experiment which if successful will lead to sending other units to European service. Wonders never cease. The day once was when a Negro was refused by an air line operating in Kansas. Today they not only are passengers, but pilots trained to the perfection required for combat service.

Looking forward, the goal is afar off. But looking back, we have climbed a long way. Our progress is a double tribute, one to us for our ambition and stick-to-it-iveness, and another to whites, who in spite of lack of faith in us as their heritage, have given us a chance. The American way works!

England is before the United States in trying Negroes as flyers. Long before our first unit was set up, boys from its colonies were being trained as flyers at Harwich, England's West Point. If the work of our trainees does lead to the formation of units at all our schools for flyers, then the battle fronts of the world will see Negroes in service from bottom to top. From being infantrymen, artillerymen, pioneers and the like, Negroes have emerged into nearly every kind of fighter Uncle Sam has. They made good before! They will make good again!

Racial Quota System Bottleneck in Training Flyers, NAACP Claims

Ask Secretary Stimson to Abolish Segregated Air Base; Whites Wait 90 Days, Negroes Year and a Half

NEW YORK.—The quota system for training Negro army pilots at Tuskegee institute has resulted in "hundreds and hundreds" of young Negroes being put on waiting lists "a year and a half long," the N.A.A.C.P. said this week in a letter to Henry L. Stimson, Secretary of War.

Asking that the quota system and the segregated base be abolished and Negroes trained at all bases, the N.A.A.C.P. said white applicants for air cadet training were kept waiting a maximum of 90 days.

Many Negro applicants who had passed all tests for the air corps were so far down on the list that they were inducted by the draft and forced to serve in other branches, through no fault of their own, the protest said.

At the Tuskegee segregated air base, the only capacities in which Negroes are being trained are as ground srewmen and fighter pilots. "It is our understanding that many white men who fail to make the grade in pilot training schools are able to get training as bombardiers, navigators, etc.

In addition, of course, many white men enlist originally for these types of training," the N.A.A.C.P. told Stimson, and continued, "We wish to urge that our men be given traniing in handling multi-engined craft and in other types of training listed above."

Also urged was the training of Negro and white flying officers together, just as army officers are trained together for other divisians of the service.

The N.A.A.C.P. renewed its request that Negroes be allowed to train wherever there is a training base, and mentionad the "discouragement, despair and cynicism which the limited segregated facilities at Tuskegee are spreading among Negro young men eligible for service in the Air Corps."

In making the suggestions," Stimson was told, "this Association wishes to emphasize that it does so in a sincere effort to assist in mobilizing the maximum fighting man power of our nation to assure the quickest and most decisive victory over the Axis countries.

Musicians May Try For Air School Band

TUSKEGEE, Ala. — Musicians of draft age who expect early call to the service have an excellent opportunity to become connected with the Tuskegee Army Flying School Band at Tuskegee. Musicians who have been inducted into the service may, while waiting at the Reception Center for instructions, make application for assignment to the Tuskegee Army Flying School Band, it has been announced.

The band is under the command of First Lieutenant Frank L. Drye, who for more than 27 years served as bandmaster and orchestra leader at Tuskegee Institute. Under his direction the Tuskegee band became known as one of the best college bands in the country and received offers to be featured in a series of engagement in New York City and other points in the East. As leader of the Tuskegee Institute Band, Lieut. Drye became known from coast to coast as a musician of outstanding ability.

Since Lieut. Drye assumed command of the Tuskegee Army Flying School Band, July 15, it has shown marked improvement and the officials feel that the pipers from the Tuskegee Army Flying School, under Lieut. Drye's command, will become one of the best musical organiaztions in the service.

This organization boasts of several outstanding musicians in its personnel, among whom are Tech. Sgt. James O. B. Mosely, graduate of Morehouse College, Chicago Musical College; graduate study at Chicago Musical College; and at the University of Michigan.

Sgt. George D. Thompson, study in music department, Mastbaum Vocational School, Philadelphia, Penn., further study at the University of Pennsylvania.

Pilots Not To Fight And Fly Until June, '43

Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson In Announcement

NEW YORK—(S N S)—Negro pilots in training at the Tuskegee air base will not be fighting and flying for their country before June 30, 1943, according to Henry L. Stimson, secretary of war.

This information was contained in a letter from the Secretary to the NAACP under date of September 1. Said Secretary Stimson:

"At Tuskegee, Alabama, the Army Air Forces have a school engaged in training fighter pilots from the graduates of which a complete fighter group is in the process of formation. This school is being expanded and additional schools for the training of technicians are being established so that not later than June 30, 1943, a complete fighter group with all necessary crew and base services will be ready for combat. As soon as this group is thoroughly trained and prepared for combat, it will be committed."

Mr. Stimson said also that by the end of 1942 there would be 100,000 Negroes in the Army Air Forces. This total, however, will include technical specialists, administrative personnel, airdrome defense battalions, aviation squadrons for general work on air bases, quartermaster truck companies, medical detachments, etc.

NO FIGURE ON PILOTS

No figures are given on the actual number of pilots, but on August 15 Lieut. Gen. Henry H Arnold, chief of the Army Air Forces, released an official statement saying 34 Negro pilots had been trained and commissioned at Tuskegee. This was a year's production, since the actual pilot training at Tuskegee did not begin until August 1941.

In its letter to the War department the NAACP had asked for a lifting of the quota system on Negro air cadets and their admission to all air training bases, pointing out that many young colored men were anxious to serve, but could not get in because of the quota.

Secretary Stimson wrote that the War department is now limiting both white and Negro air cadet applicants to one year's supply and that all above this number would be subject to Selective Service. He pointed out, also, that Negroes are now being accepted and trained in the field artillery as liaison pilots, for duty with Negro field artillery units, observing and spotting field gunfire. These men will fly small unarmored and unarmed planes with a speed of about 80 miles per hour.

Although the NAACP letter asked for the training of Negroes as bomber pilots on multi-engined aircraft, as bombardiers, and navigators, no reference to this type of training was made by Secretary Stimson in his reply. So far as is known, Negroes at present are being trained only as pilots of fast, single-seat fighter planes. SEP 16 1942

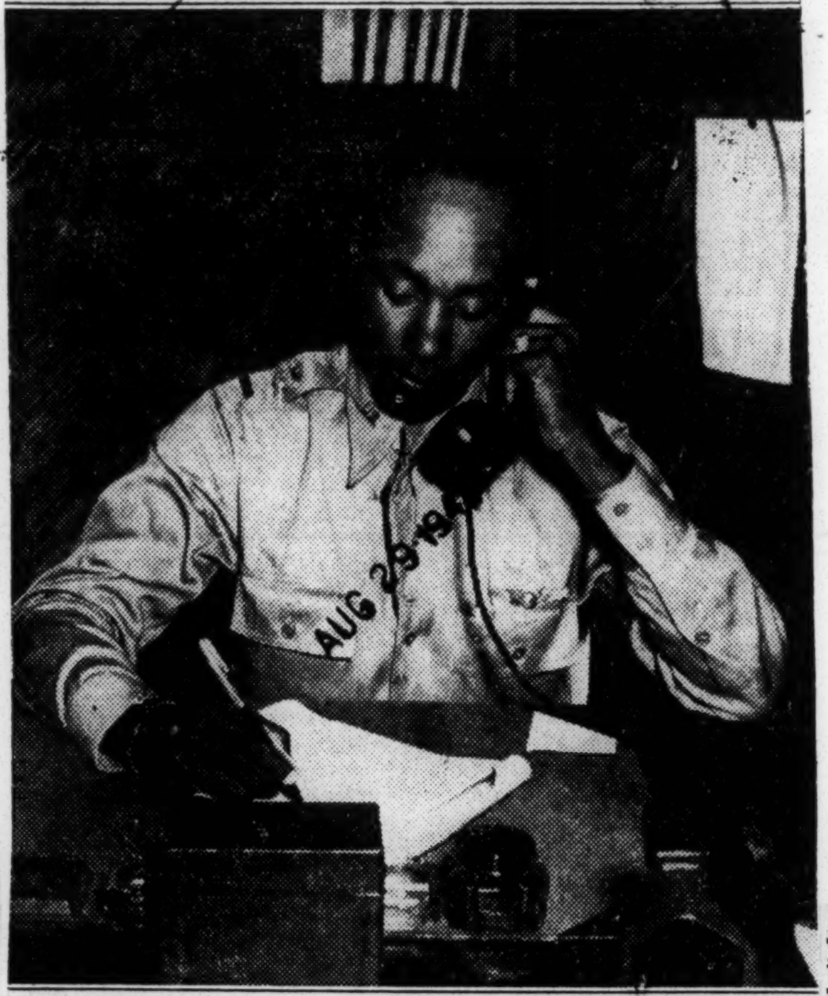
Commands New Pursuit Squadron



Now that he has learned to fly pursuit ships, Second Lieutenant Mac Ross takes up another phase of Army life. He is now commanding officer for the new pursuit squadrons at the Tuskegee Army Flying School.

Although he is only 25, this officer, like other graduate pilots of the Army Air Forces, learns there are other duties besides flying P-40's. So this graduate of the West Virginia State College has been assigned his new job "in addition to other duties." This last phrase means that he still flies so many hours every day, instructing cadets in the basic stage.

Yes, Tuskegee Army Flying School not only trains them how to fly but also is training these same young pilots how to handle squadrons of men—all a part of the rigid training which is fast whipping them into combat units. Lt. Ross calls Dayton, Ohio, his home town. His residence is at 955 Card Avenue.

SCOTT FIELD ALL - COLORED, SAVE COMMANDING OFFICER

"The Informer" Houston, Tex.

SCOTT FIELD, Ill.—With its entire personnel, except commanding officer, comprised of Negro soldiers, the first half of a new aviation squadron has arrived at Scott Field, radio university of the Army Air Forces, Colonel Wolcott P. Hayes, commanding officer of the post, disclosed this week.

The men, coming from all parts of the middlewest, will be assigned to squadron duty and work in the hangars, according to Capt. O. D. Loomis, squadron commander.

He said that another contingent of Negro soldiers will complete the squadron, making it the first Negro detachment to take up permanent quarters in the history of the post.

From All Walks

Acting First Sergeant Roosevelt Hunt of Atlanta, Georgia, majored in mathematics at Clark University at Atlanta and was an instructor in the linen department of the Pullman Company when he was inducted April 8.

Private Thernell R. Anderson of Chicago, Illinois, who studied at Morehouse College, in Atlanta, Georgia, was a civil service statistician for the U. S. Treasury Department, stationed in the Merchandise Mart in Chicago.

A bugler who would as soon blow "boogie-woogie" as sound reveille is Pvt. James Cross of Chicago, formerly a trumpeter with Erskine Tate and Louis Armstrong.

Crack Boxer

A welterweight who can look back at fights as an amateur and professional without ever having been knocked out is Pvt. Ely Thomas of Detroit. Boxing under the name "Indian Joe," Pvt. Thomas fought in Grand Rapids and Detroit, Michigan.

Aware of the wealth of musical talent in his squadron, Captain Loomis said he has plans for the swing artists in his squadron.

"We're getting a piano from a generous person in Belleville," he said, "and then I'll see what the boys can do."

The new squadron will undergo about six weeks of rigid basic training, Capt. Loomis said, after which men will be assigned to permanent duties.

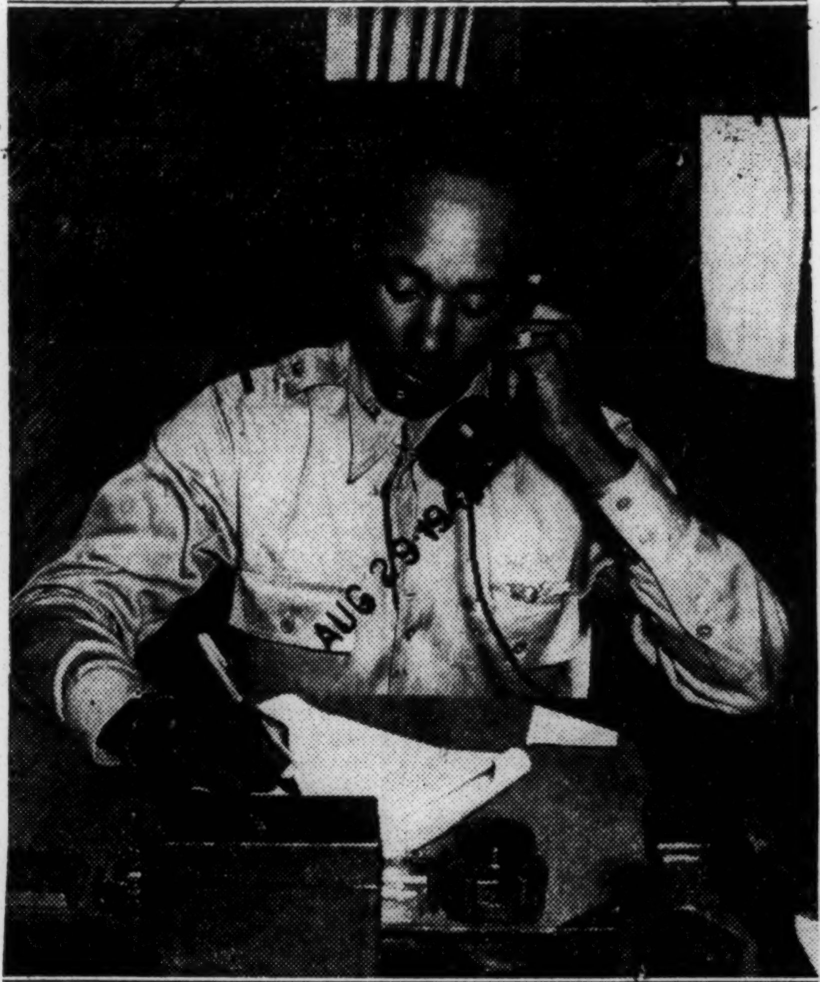
Commands New Pursuit Squadron



Now that he has learned to fly pursuit ships, Second Lieutenant Mac Ross takes up another phase of Army life. He is now commanding officer for the new pursuit squadrons at the Tuskegee Army Flying School.

Although he is only 25, this officer, like other graduate pilots of the Army Air Forces, learns there are other duties besides flying P-40's. So this graduate of the West Virginia State College has been assigned his new job "in addition to other duties." That last phrase means that he still flies so many hours every day, instructing cadets in the basic stage.

Yes, Tuskegee Army Flying School not only trains them how to fly but also is training these same young pilots how to handle squadrons of men—all a part of the rapid training which is fast whipping them into combat units. Lt. Ross calls Dayton, Ohio, his home town. His residence is at 955 Card Avenue.

SCOTT FIELD ALL - COLORED, SAVE COMMANDING OFFICER

"The Informer"
Houston, Tex.

SCOTT FIELD, Ill.—With its entire personnel, except commanding officer, comprised of Negro soldiers, the first half of a new aviation squadron has arrived at Scott Field, radio university of the Army Air forces. Colonel Wolcott P. Hayes, commanding officer of the post, disclosed this week.

The men, coming from all parts of the middlewest, will be assigned to squadron duty and work in the hangars, according to Capt. O. D. Loomis, squadron commander.

He said that another contingent of Negro soldiers will complete the squadron, making it the first Negro detachment to take up permanent quarters in the history of the post.

From All Walks

Acting First Sergeant Roosevelt Hunt of Atlanta, Georgia, majored in mathematics at Clark University at Atlanta and was an instructor in the linen department of the Pullman Company when he was inducted April 8.

Private Thernell R. Anderson of Chicago, Illinois, who studied at Morehouse College, in Atlanta, Georgia, was a civil service statistician for the U. S. Treasury Department, stationed in the Merchandise Mart in Chicago.

A bugler who would as soon blow "boogie-woogie" as sound reveille is Pvt. James Cross of Chicago, formerly a trumpeter with Erskine Tate and Louis Armstrong.

Crack Boxer

A welterweight who can look back at ... fights as an amateur and professional without ever having been knocked out is Pvt. Ely Thomas of Detroit. Boxing under the name "Indian Joe," Pvt. Thomas fought in Grand Rapids and Detroit, Michigan.

Aware of the wealth of musical talent in his squadron, Captain Loomis said he has plans for the swing artists in his squadron.

"We're getting a piano from a generous person in Belleville," he said, "and then I'll see what the boys can do."

The new squadron will undergo about six weeks of rigid basic training, Capt. Loomis said, after which men will be assigned to permanent duties.

Pilot Training for More Negroes Planned

AUG 3 1 1942

Washington Bureau of Chicago Sun

The War Department is evolving a plan for the air pilot training of a larger number of Negroes.

This was revealed yesterday by Secretary of War Stimson in a letter to Representative McKeaugh (Democrat) of Illinois, who has transmitted to Simson a letter from Mis Willa B. Brown, coordinator of civilian pilot training, Coffey School of Aeronautics at the Harlem Airport, Oakland, Ill.

Secretary Stimson asid the War Department has no jurisdiction over civilian flying schools under the scope of the Civil Aeronautics Autohrity.

Stimson's letter follows in part:

"It is the policy of the War Department to utilize the services of Negroes on a fair and equitable basis in each branch of the service, combatant as well as noncombatant, and Negroes have ben given the opportunity to qualify for commissions in officer candidate schools.

"Not until recently have Negroes been given an opportunity to serve as pilots in the armed forces. The program established for them, accordingly, has been a limited one. As results warrant, the program will be accelerated.

"Just recently final approval has been given to a plan which calls for the pilot training of a further limited number of Negroes, but the details of this plan have no been evolved completely.

"While the War Department prescribes the type of training desired under the civilian pilot training program to serve current needs best, it does not attempt to interfere with the internal administration and policies of civilian training projects.

"Under the current revised civilian pilot training program, it has been decided to liimt the training of personnel for the Army Air Forces to men other than those who have qualified for aviation cadet (air crew) appointments."

SEP 1 2 1942

Another 75 To Be Trained At Tuskegee Base

CHICAGO—(ANP)—Seventy-five of 150 Negroes to be given basic aviation training by the Civil Aeronautics authority to prepare them to serve with the army will be trained at the Coffey School of Aeronautics at Harlem airport it was learned here last week. The other 75 will be trained at Tuskegee institute, it was announced by Charles L. Stanton, acting Civil administrator.

Miss Willa B. Brown, pioneer in the field of air training for Negroes, is coordinator of the civilian pilot training course at the school. She told reporters that the policy in regard to Negro pilot training is a partial victor 'in freeing the bottleneck which prevented the training of Negroes as pilots.'

The program for Negroes was temporarily halted, she said, when the army took over civilian pilot training on July 1 and many civilian training schools were closed. Negro students had to qualify as aviation cadets, but their training was held up because of the limited facilities of Negro army training programs, she said.

Quarters for housing the students, who will begin training about Oct. 1, are being constructed now, and $60,000 worth of government equipment will be moved from the ground school at Wendell Phillips high school to the airport, Miss Brown said. The students at the Coffey school will receive upon graduation the same enlisted ratings granted other graduates.

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE —(ANP)—The men of the 99th Pursuit squadron are champing at the bit. The first unit, feeling rather confident of their flying ability, having passed their firing tests, but realizing that far wider experience awaits them before they are actually able to enter aerial battle, are anxious to be on the move.

May Leave Soon

Rumors indicate that the group will be leaving the local air field where they received their training and won their wings, within a very short time. No announcement regarding where they will go or the exact time they will leave has been revealed, neither has the exact personnel been made known.

There is a general understanding however that Lt. Col. Benjamin O. Davis will be the leader of the squadron when it moves on from Tuskegee field toward the fields of action. The 100th squadron will move into the 99th's berth as soon as it is vacant.

Fighter Pilots Earn Diplomas At Army School

"Must Have Courage," Men Are Told

TUSKEGEE, Ala.—On Wednesday morning, August 5, at 10 a.m., another page in the annals of American aviation was written when the fifth class of aviation cadtes at the Tuskegee Army Flying School, received wings.

Characteristic of this ceremony, as previous graduation ceremonies, was the usual marked simplicity and deep sincerity, indicative of the life and ideals of the aviation cadet at this base.

Following the military procession led by the Post Commander, Colonel Frederick V. H. Kimble, and Lt. Colonels Noel F. Parrish and Benjamin O. Davis, Jr., Chaplain Douglas L. T. Robinson offered the invocation.

"It is but natural that in the happiness and satisfaction which you feel today at having completed your courses as aviation cadets and becoming rated pilots in the air forces of the Army you should think back over the road which you have traveled since your thoughts first centered on a desire to fly," declared Col. Kimble in his address to the candidates as he began a retrospective history of transportation including man's innate desires to conquer the air.

HIGHLIGHTS OF SPEECH

Some of the highlights taken from the Colonel's speech are as follows:

"Your desire and determination to master the air are typical of the many discoveries and tremendous developments which have marked man's progress throughout the ages. In most instances these great scientific and mechanical advances have come as a result of the desire and determination to improve health, living conditions and to extend the span of life. In some instances these developments have occurred as a necessary means of protecting one group of men from aggressor peoples.

"So far as I have been able to find out through research," he continued, "man's desire to conquer the air was born of a sincere desire to widen his sphere of influence, peaceful pursuit and with no thought of turning this development into a destructive impliment of war.

"Airplanes were developed with no thought of their military power, but with an eye to their tremendous value as a mode of transportation. I believe that I am safe in saying that transportation has been one of the great problems of man throughout history, and no form of transportation which has been devised has ever been abandoned. To this day, all the crude forms of transportation which have ever been used are still in existence for practical purposes at some point in the world.

TRAINED AS FIGHTERS

". . . But few young men lived who did not wish to fly . . . Air power is not the only weapon, but it has paved the way for success. You have been trained in this school for assignment to fighter squadrons, single air-craft with individual pilots. You and your plane are one. It calls for great individual prowess. To acquire that, fighter pilots must have courage, confidence, and ability, the fact that trust is placed in your graduation is indicative in your ability to carry out this mission."

In closing, the Colonel advised, "As your work progresses, you will find that your successful operation depends not only on these factors, but on the work of others; the men who sustain the ships and others on the ground who make it possible for the fighter pilot to take the air. . . . It is a peculiar combination: one of individualism and self-reliance, and another of realization and respect for teamwork. . . . Without team cooperation, no great success can be accomplished."

The diplomas and commissions were awarded by Colonel Kimble, while Colonels Parrish and Davis presented the successful graduates with their wings.

AUG 22 1942

NAACP Makes Demand For Integration Of Race Flyers

AUG 22 1942

NEW YORK — The quota system for training Negro army pilots at Tuskegee Institute has resulted in "hundreds and hundreds" of young Negroes being put on waiting lists "a year and a half long," the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People said this week in a letter to Henry L. Stimson, Secretary of War.

Asking that the quota system and the segregated base be abolished and Negroes trained at all bases, the N.A.A.C.P. said white applicants for air cadet training were kept waiting a maximum of 90 days. AUG 22 1942

Many Negro applicants who had passed all tests for the air corps were so far down on the list that they were inducted by the draft and forced to serve in other branches, through no fault of their own, the protest said.

At the Tuskegee segregated air base, the only capacities in which Negroes are being trained are as ground crewmen and fighter pilots.

"It is our understanding that many white men who fail to make the grade in pilot training schools are able to get training as bombardiers, navigators, etc. In addition, of course, many white men enlist originally for these types of training," the N.A.A.C.P. told Stimson, and continued, "We wish to urge that our men be given training in handling multi-engined craft and in other types of training listed above."

Also urged was the training of Negro and white flying officers together, just as army officers are trained together for other divisions of the service.

The N.A.A.C.P. renewed its request that Negroes be allowed to train wherever there is a training base and mentioned the "discouragement, despair and cynicism which the limited segregated facilities at Tuskegee are spreading among Negro young men eligible for service in the Air Corps."

In making the suggestions, Stimson was told, "this association wishes to emphasize that it does so in a sincere effort to assist in mobilizing the maximum fighting man power of our nation to assure the quickest and most decisive victory over the Axis countries."

West Point Cadet Training At Tuskegee Flying School

AUG 22 1942

Cadet Tresville, who will enter his fourth year at U. S. Military Academy at West Point in September, 1942, came to Tuskegee Institute June 1 as an aviation cadet. He completed his primary training last week and is now taking basic army pilot training at the Tuskegee Army Flying School.

All West Point cadets who elect the air branch of the service pursue the primary and basic training at the several training schools about the country. If they are not washed out in basic training they continue their advanced flying training at West Point.

Cadet Tresville is enthusiastic about swimming, a sport that he has enjoyed, as he stated to Eugene Jones, Red Cross staff water safety instructor. "Ever since I can remember, I have been swimming." He added with a characteristic, ingenuous grin, "I guess it was pretty poor swimming some of the time, but it was a lot of fun all of the time." Mr. Jones commended Cadet Tresville's water technique and demonstrated teaching ability.

TENNIS FAN

Young Tresville is a tennis fan of long standing too, having carried off a number of junior trophies at southern and American Tennis Association meets. He gained recognition on the tennis courts and on the cinder path at Penn State in which he was enrolled when he received his appointment to West Point.

Cadet Tresville became enthusiastic over flying last summer while visiting Tuskegee Institute to renew his acquaintance with friends, brush up on his tennis and see the annual A. T. A. Tournament. He made his first flight from the C. A. field where Tuskegee Institute was training civilian pilots. The civilian pilot who gave Cadet Tresville his first sky thrill is now Lt. William Campbell, of the Tuskegee Army Flying School. AUG 22 1942

ELATED OVER APPOINTMENT

Cadet Tresville and Lt. Campbell have played tennis together, swum together and learned Scouting together since they were in the grades at Ft. Benning, Tresville's home and at Tuskegee. Naturally Campbell and the rest of their "gang" were elated when Tresville was appointed to West Point "to be an officer." There was a good deal of good natured jesting about Campbell and the others having to salute Tresville, when he finished West Point. On July 3 when Campbell received his wings and commission as 2nd Lieutenant, Cadet Tresville was one of the first to salute him. "Well, you beat me to it Lieut. Campbell." AUG 22 1942

SON OF SOLDIER

Cadet Tresville is the son of Warrant Officer R. B. Tresville, bandmaster of the famous 24th Infantry stationed for many years at Ft. Benning, Georgia, but now "somewhere on the war front."

Cadet Tresville and Richard C. Pullam were able to take the water safety instruction at Tuskegee Institute through the interes of Colonel F. V. H. Kimble, commanding officer of the Tuskegee Army Flying School, who made it possible for them to leave the Post to come into the institute for the classes.

Sixth Class Receives Wings At Tuskegee Flying School

"The Informer" Houston, Tex.

TUSKEGEE, Ala.—On Saturday morning, September 5, at 10:00 a. m., another page in the annals of American aviation was written when the sixth class of aviation cadets received their wings at the Tuskegee Army Flying School.

Characteristic of this ceremony, as previous graduation exercises, was the marked simplicity and deep sincerity, indicative of the life and ideals of the aviation cadet at this base.

Following the military procession led by the post commander, Colonel Frederick V. H. Kimble, and Lieutenant Colonels B. O. Davis, Jr., and Noel F. Parrish, Chaplain Douglas L. T. Robinson offered the invocation.

"November eighth of last year marked the opening of flying operations on this field. The flying area proper from which ships could take off and on which they could land was a small, flat area roughly between what is now the North-end of the North-South runway and the West end of the Northwest-Southwest runway.

Field Has Grown

"The first paved runway, the Northeast Southwest runway, was opened at the end of the year and at the time the ships were moved over to the maintenance area in Northeast end, the field was so muddy that some of them were taken into the air and flown across.

"From that beginning the field has grown on through the months that followed until you see it as it stands today . . . still uncompleted in many details but certainly its form, utility and purpose are now well established," declared Col. Kimble in his address to the candidates as he began a retrospective history of the transition of the field since its activation.

Speech Highlights

"A day seldom passes that between the opening of operations in the morning and the closing flights in the evening does not find two or three runways frequently utilized at various periods to take advantage of the shifting winds.

"The first class to graduate did all of its flying on the field on one runway, regardless of wind. Crosswind landings were habitual. It cannot be said that anyone relished this handicap, but there was never a word of complaint.

"It was accepted as one of the difficulties which must be encountered and overcome, where the utmost advantage must be taken of every moment to further the defense program.

". . . Motors were changed not in hangers as today but with movable tripods and in the open. Frequently the work was carried on in the rain. As all of you know, footing is insecure in this area after much water has fallen; but the work went on.

99th Has Grown

"The 99th Fighter Squadron has grown and come into being under these conditions. The spirit which will go with that Squadron is the feeling built up by men occupied and devoting themselves to a greater cause.

"It is in no sense a test of ability to insist on initial deevolpment being undertaken under trying conditions, but it is a splendid indication of the loyalty of the men who have gone through the developing period at the Tuskegee Army Flying School that we face today the graduation of another class destined to follow the 99th into the Army Air Forces."

". . . Today we can see from the moment of your arrival in the Cadet Reception Center the whole span of your flying training. Today you have reached the goal for which you started on February 25, 1942."

". . . That service fighter, the P-40, awaits you on the apron. It is no longer a mere distant desire and hope on your part, it is no longer necessary to stand outside the barracks or the Ground School building and see the high speed service craft go by, nor to hear the sound of that motor as you sit over class work and wish that you could be outside and up.

Rated As Pilots

"Those days of preparation are over, and through your efforts you have successfully completed the course in flying training; you are being rated pilots; you are being commissioned in the Air Corps Reserve and will join the line of graduates and move not to service air craft.

". . . Your responsibilities will be tremendously increased . . . more flying than ever before and in addition the necessity for becoming an active part in the busy life which operates this station and keeps the aircraft aloft.

". . . It is my pleasure to welcome you into the Army of the United States as officers and pilots and to assure you that those who have been concerned with your progress through the school feel every confidence in your ability to go into the future, carrying the standards you so well set as cadets."

The diplomas and commissions were awarded by Colonel Kimble, while Colonels Davis and Parrish presented the successful with their wings.

Second Lieutenants John H. Morgan of Box 347, Cartersville, Georgia, and Edward L. Toppins of 1519 Baker Street, San Francisco, California; Second Lieutenants James L. ARMY AIR FORCES NEED SKILLED MEN

TUSKEGEE, Ala., Sept. 17—Vital need to enlist approximately 100,000 skilled mechanics and technicians immediately in the Army Air Forces, Signal Corps and Ordnance Department was announced by the War Department recently.

Keeping pace with the mounting flow of war material from the industrial reservoir of the nation, these specialists are needed now to keep equipment in operating order. So great is the present emergency that a special recruiting campaign has been launched to find men who can step immediately into important maintenance jobs.

Army training schools are already teaching thousands of men this kind of work, and later in the year their rate of output should be sufficient to keep pace with the need. But between now and October 15, when the campaign will close, the gap must be stopped by voluntary enlistments.

To be eligible, men must be between the ages of 18 and 44 inclusive, citizens of the United States and physically qualified according to general standards for military service. They will enlist as privates, but non-commissioned officer or technician ratings are often given men doing jobs of this sort. Skilled men are needed and promotion should be rapid with commensurate increases in pay. Whereas a private receives $50 a month, a master sergeant, the highest non-commissioned grade receives $138 to which certain allowances may be added. In considering these amounts, it should be remembered that the Army pays all a man's expenses—food clothing, shelter and medical care.

To make sure that industry's production program is not upset, all men who wish to enlist as mechanics and technicians now must be cleared by their local Selective Service Board before acceptance by the Army.

For a limited period this recruiting program offers trained men an opportunity to choose any one of the three branches, Air Forces, Signal Corps, or Ordnance Department, for which their experience and skill qualifies them.

Tuskegee Trainer Plane Crash Kills Occupants

OCT 3 - 1942

OCT 3 - 1942

BALTIMORE, Md.—A Tuskegee trainer plane crashed late Sunday afternoon near Linthicum Heights, Md., when an Army flier, white, and his Negro mechanic, were killed.

The plane crashed in an open field, only a few miles from the pilot's home.

The pilot was identified by his parents as Lieut. Luther W. Cartwright, Jr., 22. Army authorities said the other occupant of the plane was Sergeant Eli Williams of Tuskegee Flying Field, Ala.

OCT 3 - 1942

Isaac Gordon, an eyewitness, said the plane had been flying about the area for about a quarter of an hour when it suddenly plummeted to earth.

"The plan seemed to go into a tailspin," Isaac said. "Two little puffs of smoke came from the motor but the plane didn't pull up and it crashed across the road from my house."

Another witness stated that all the neighbors had been out watching the plane.

Williams is 22 years old and entered the army April, 1941, from Birmingham, Ala. His body has been sent to Littleton, Ohio, for burial, where his wife and mother lives.

Handy Publishes Hughes' Negro Songs Of Rivers

OCT 19 1942

Four Artists Join With Composer In New Production

NEW YORK.—(ANP)))— Handy Brothers Music company has just announced the publication of one of the most important numbers it has produced, "The Negro Speaks of Rivers." Four outstanding artists joined with W. C. Handy in the production. The poem is by famed Langston Hughes. The music was composed by the talented Margaret Bonds.

On the cover is a reproduction of a painting by Richmond Barthe of Etta Moten, contralto. Miss Moten has presented the song as one of the most popular numbers on her concert programs from one end of the country to the other during the past two years, but it was unpublished. Continued demand for it encouraged Mr. Handy to make it a de luxe publication.

Hughes' lyrics are:

'I've known rivers—I've known rivers
Ancient as the world
And older than the flow of human blood in human veins
My soul has grown deep like the rivers

OCT 19 1942

I bathed in the Euphrates— when dawns were young
I built my hut near the Congo and it lull'd me to sleep
I looked upon the Nile—and raised the Pyramids above it
I heard the singing of the Mississippi
When Abe Lincoln went down to
  New Orleans
And I've seen its muddy bosom turn all Golden in the sunset
I've known rivers Acient dusky
  rivers
My soul has grown deep—like the rivers

What Happens Within A Negro Aviation Squadron

By SGT. ROBERT L. DRAKE

GOWEN FIELD, Boise, Idaho.—Yours truly reporting once again on the activities of the 90th Aviation Squad. This week another link has been added to the steadily growing chain of accomplishments which we hope shall soon be used to pull the gates of segregation downward in a thundering crash.

Nov. 21, 1942

We men here at Gowen Field consider it an honor to be in uniform. We are proud that we possess a definite something that can be of use of our country in this great conflict.

But we cannot appreciate the uncalled for attitude, of the business concerns here in Boise who refuse to accept our patronage. The white boys in uniform are living in an earthly heaven while their darker brothers are sweltering from the flaring fires of prejudice, which confront them from every direction.

If the men care to buy a decent meal or a drink, they have to endure the old southern system of buying and taking the commodity off the immediate premise for consumpton. In most places it is impossible to get waited on if you are a Negro. The restaurants have refused to serve Negro soldiers and their wives. The trouble seems to be brewing from numerous white Southerners who have migrated westward since the war began.

Internal disorder and disruption of morale among Negro Soldiers would be gleefully appreciated by Hitler and Hirohito. We realize this factor and have pledged to refrain from participation in any damaging conflicts which might arise. We are not inclined to be pacifist, but we do believe that through true understanding of each others' characteristics, moods and desires the two races can live in closer harmony with each other.

My committee and I have met with the leading civic organizations and even the mayor himself. We presented to these individuals the problem confronting the Negro soldier in this vicinity. This small group of citizens took a solemn vow to assist us in every possible manner. Our initial step was the opening of the YMCA to Negro soldiers.

YMCA FACILITIES OPEN

All facilities of the YMCA have been open to the men. The churches and various clubs have also extended invitations to the men to participate in their functions. This marks the first step in our efforts to exterminate racial prejudice and segregation against our boys in uniform. There are still many more steps to climb before we reach the pedistal of "freedom." With a faith presented to us by our forefathers who sought the same identical "equality" that we are seeking. We feel and believe that our efforts will not be in vain.

There are only a few Negroes in the City of Boise. Of these few there are ten women. The soldiers outnumber the women here by a ratio of fifty to one, thus there is no outlet along social lines. Social facilities have been presented to us, but they are of little value. We have the largest Army club in the northwest, but this club can only be used for stag purposes, due to a lack of women. Even the most pious soldier soon tires of continuous stag affairs.

FOOTBALL TEAM

Three cheers for the squadron's football team coached by Sgt. Bob Drake. The Bears, as the team is called have clawed themselves into possession of a beautiful loving cup as champions of the Base League. The Squadron now leads the entire base in athletic achievements.

Our musical aggregation under the direction of Sgt. Bob Drake and Pfc. Chas. Rogers have become a "must" on radio and stage. The group appears weekly every Wednesday at 6:30 p. m. over the local network. They will soon be heard twice monthly over a nation wide hook-up.

We praise Edison for his invention of the recording disc. Playing recordings while their minds become imbued with thoughts of the girl back home, seems to be the favorite "pass time" with the boys. If you know a soldier who is in camp purchase and send to him his favorite recording, it might help soothe a lonely heart.

SOLDIERS OUT OF SCHOOL

After an interview with various soldiers, who were securing an education in some particular institution or school, upon being drafted to the service; eight out of every ten interviewed expressed hopes of continuing and furthering their search of knowledge after this conflict is over. I sincerely hope that not only these men, but all men now in the armed forces will endeavor to grasp for themselves further educational advantages. Many men who gave up such chances before the war began are now regreting it.

There is a time in every man's life when he seeks guidance of some kind. The guiding hand in our squadron happens to belong to 1st Sgt. William H. Buford. At intervals doing the day, he can be seen uttering fatherly advice to men who possess some difficulty that has to be ironed out.

It is a pleasant and enjoyable scene, watching our boys saunter along faithfully each Sunday afternoon to the Base Chapel. At the chapel their voices are lifted reverently in sublime devotion, giving thanks for divine memories of the past, and hopes for a brightened future.

A friendly reminder, ship presents to men in the armed forces for Christmas as soon as possible. This will help to keep the Christmas rush at a minimum.

Glancing skyward I cannot but see the flurring snow, upon the wind swept Rockies; which reminds me it is about time to climb into my red flannels. Times a-wasting and colds acatching. See you next week.

Army Negro Show Is Highly Lauded

NOV. 27, 1942

Utilizing its own talent, the Fourth Aviation Squadron at Maxwell Field, composed of negro troops, has banded together in a bright musical revue which, judging by recent successes, may be taken on a tour of neighboring camps. Nov. 27, 1942

The show is already booked for engagements at Maxwell Field's recreation hangar No. 6, and also the Maxwell Field Officers Club.

Sponsored by Maj. Dwight M. Wilhelm, commanding officer of the Fourth Aviation Squadron, and actively directed by Lieut. Harry E. McCardell, it is comprised of soldiers who are veterans of the entertainment world. The troupe prepares its own script and improvises many of the musical numbers.

The headliners are Pvt. Bethel Gibson of Los Angeles, Calif., and Pfc. Rudolph Mills, of Philadelphia, Penn., who call their act "Gib and Milly." Scion of a family of troupers and one time performer in motion picture shorts and West Coast theaters, Gibson authors the routine for the team. He has tutored Mills, a graduate of amateur ranks, whose recent performances have had the "professional" ring. In fact, Lieut. McCardell is seriously considering giving Mills a solo number in the show.

The vocal portion of the revue is contributed mostly by the "Gold Brickers" Quartet and the squadron's glee club composed of 15 voices. Corp. Troy R. Bartlett, baritone, is the soloist.

Master of ceremonies is Sergt. Eugene Edwards, the squadron's very able mess sergeant, who at one time was a singing waiter at the Hotel New Yorker's famed Manhattan room.

station. Aside from the payroll, service records and morning reports, additional clerical work is needed to handle ammunition shipment records.

Sergeant Dixon is assisted by Sergeant Lofton W. Wilson of Dallas, Texas, who entered the service on May 11, and is a graduate of the Army Ordnance school. Corporal Alonzo Martin of Nashville, who graduated from Tennessee State college, is the company clerk.

The receiving and distributing of ammunition is in charge of Technical Sergeant William Reed, Staff Sergeant Robert L. Davis. and Sergeants Julian E. Hoard and Cooperas Coleman.

Sergeant Reed enlisted May 19, 1942, at Nashville, After a short newspaper career. He is a graduate of Fisk university and the Army Ordnance school. Sgt. Davis of Albermarle, N. C., entered the service on May 19, and Sergeant Hoard, another Nashville man, worked for the International Harvester company in civilian life. He has been in the Army since May 27, and is a graduate of the Ordnance school. Sgt. Coleman, also an Ordnance schol graduate, hails from Dallas, Texas. He attended Langston university for two years and enlisted in the service on May 11.

The success of all operations in the field hinges on food. For that important job, Lieut. Rule has Sergeant James Netherland of Muskogee, Okla. A cook in civilian life, he attended and was graduated from the Army Cooks and Bakers school. Sergeant Netherland enlisted August 15, 1940, with the 25th Infantry, later transferring to his present outfit. From the looks of the men and the praise handed out about their mess sergeant, it appears that he has the situation well in hand.

If you don't believe so, ask any one of the hundreds of specialists at the Army Air Base at MacDill Field, Tampa, Fla., who have earned their ratings through proficiency. Ask the gunner, the mechanic, or the armorer—any one of the large group of men who serve as ground and combat crews. Or, better yet, drop in at the 8th Aviation Squadron where soldiers are training for ground work overseas.

Just inside the door you will find a veteran of 29 years' service in the army. He is Master Sergeant Clarence Jones, of Jackson, Miss.

Sergeant Jones is typical of the efficient, soldierly non commissioned officers produced from the ranks. He is a veteran of the World War, and his service since then has taken him to Hawaii and to many posts in the United States. He has handled every job from kitchen police to paymaster and he still thinks that the army has a lot to offer.

Glance around Sergeant Jones' office and you will find ample proof. You will see other sergeants of various grades, corporals, technicians, first class privates; and, besides these there is an entire corps of clerical help developed through this training.

Air Force Not to Be 10 Per Cent Colored

WASHINGTON

The deliberate exclusion of colored inductees from the air corps cropped up in the press conference of Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson on Thursday.

Applying the 10 per cent quota fixed for the induction of colored selectees into the army, a reporter asked Stimson whether one man in ten in the expanded air forces would be colored. By 1943 the air force will include 2¼ million men. Few are colored.

Stimson Vehement

"I said nothing like that," the Secretary replied vehemently. The 10 per cent quota, he said, "does not apply to the air forces. I does not apply to any particular branch. The number in each branch will be determined by the number that proves appropriate to the particular characteristics of that branch of training.

"As far as possible," Mr. Stimson said, "the proportion will be maintained, but, as you must know, there are some branches which require specialists and for which the number of men have to be determined by the number and capacity o' the recruits who are available for it."

Disproportionate Assignment

Disproportionate assignment of colored selectees to service organizations, like quartermaster and engineer units, with only token representation in specialized branches like the air corps, is one form of race discrimination which has drawn criticism from colored organzations.

In World War I likewise most colored fellows were assigned to labor battalions.

How Query Arose

The question arose quite innocently. A reporter naively asked Mr. Stimson about turning over some camps for the exclusive training of colored troops. Hidden in this question was the opposition of white citizens of St. Louis, Mo., to the use of Jefferson Barracks for the training of colored technicians.

After Jefferson Barracks was identified as the post the reporter had in mind when he asked the question, Mr. Stimson said a plan was being studied for turning that post over to the training of colored troops solely.

H. E. Ostrom Insisted 'Negro Youth Can Fly'

INDIANAPOLIS—It was Henry E. Ostrom, Hoosier financier and philanthropist, who first conceived the idea that Negro youth should learn to fly and did something about it. He went to Washington, offered federal authorities his personal airplane, set up a committee to perfect plans that later led to the establishment of the Tuskegee Flying School where Negro youth get their wings.

While serving needy citizens by financing hundreds of homes when building and loan associations refused to supply funds, Mr. Ostrom developed a special interest in Negro youth. He went to Washington, held conferences with federal authorities concerning the establishment of a flying school that Negroes could attend, then offered his personal airplane if the government would supervise operation of the school and supply instructors.

When Mr. Ostrom had convinced some of the persons concerned that Negro youth were not afraid to fly, he had won the first round. He returned to Indianapolis, organized a citizens committee to secure students for flight training, and did such a splendid job the U. S. War Department commissioned him Civilian Aid to the Commanding General of the Fifth Corps Area for the Procurement of Flying Cadets, covering Indiana, Ohio, Kentucky, and West Virginia area.

Today the Tuskegee Flying School is graduating Negro youth with wings, and Hoosiers are proud of Henry E. Ostrom and the outcome of his endeavor. He is the son of an Interdenominational Evangelist, product of De Pauw University, a devout Methodist; and in cooperation with Mrs. Ostrom's father, Felix F. McWhirter, founder of People's State Bank, has contributed much aid to worthy Negro projects.

LT. M. S. CABINESS

TUSKEGEE, Ala.—(SNS)—Bailing out at 4,000 feet altitude when his pursuit training ship suddenly caught fire, Second Lieutenant Marshall S. Cabiness, Tuskegee Army Flying School pilot, became the second colored officer in history to join the famous caterpillar club.

Lieutenant Cabiness, whose home is 413 North Oakland St., Gastonia, N. C. recently married a grand-daughter of the late Booker T. Washington, founder of Tuskegee Institute. He was 24 years old on Armisticce Day, having been born on the day that the World War I. ended.

The first colored officer to join the caterpillar club was Lieutenant Mac Ross, of Cleveland, Ohio, one of the first class of flyers to graduate at this station last March 7th.

Number Of 'Washouts' Reported Lower Than General Average Among White Flying Cadets; Officers Praise Way Fledglings Take To Army Life

FEB 6 - 1942

By Frederick Williams
United Press Staff Correspondent

TUSKEGEE, Feb. 6.—In a few days the Army's first class of Negro fliers become commissioned officers, and their instructors revealed today that the number of "washouts" was lower than the general average of white flying cadets.

Far back in a secluded country area, miles from Tuskegee, the Negro fliers are being trained.

The success of the experiment with Negro aviators is indicated by a War Department announcement several days ago that a new squadron, the 100th, would be formed by Negro cadets, and that other such pursuit units were being planned. The young men in training as cadets of the 99th Pursuit Squadron will serve as instructors of the new air units.

Constructed Last Year

The Army school for Negro flying cadets was put under construction last Summer and the first class began flying in the Fall. The reports sent Washington of the success of the new venture has led to a three-fold expansion of facilities at the base, and the addition of Col. Frederick V. Kimble as commanding officer.

Since there are no commissioned Negro pilots in the Army, instructions to the first class have been by white officers. They say that "these men have met the same physical and mental requirements as set forth for all cadets. They seem to catch on rapidly to the art of flying pursuit style, although none of them are being trained as pilots for bombers."

Must Meet Every Test

Down here in Alabama, the Negro cadets complete their primary training on one field, and then move nearby to a main base, for basic and advanced training. They must meet every standard, every test required of white pilots.

Officers say they have no trouble with these men. "They take to military life like a duck to water," they add. "They walk around very proudly in their uniforms, their morale is at the very highest and we have had no trouble with them at all. They play basket ball, and occasionally go on visits, but for the most part they study and dream of the day they will get their wings."

Black Death Coming

Officers say the cadets' eyes are very good, their sense of depth and perception all that could be asked. "But it is the men's discipline and love for the Army that has made them stick and hang up the record on which future action will be taken."

As one pilot put it, "those Japs are going to find out pretty soon what's meant by black death."

All-American Son Of All-American Dad Becomes Cadet

CHICAGO (ANP).—Fritz Pollard, Jr., 26-year-old All-American gridironer of 1937, enlisted in the Army Air Corps here last Friday. The circumstances surrounding his enlistment were made interesting by the fact that the recruiting officer was an old friend of young Pollard's father, also an All-American football star.

Before the first World War, Fritz Pollard, Sr., played baseball and football at Eugene Field Elementary School with Frederick H. Chetlain, white. Chetlain went to Yale and Pollard enrolled at Brown University, becoming an All-American football player and helping to defeat Yale three seasons running.

Last week, Chetlain, who is now a lieutenant colonel in the Army Air Corps, interviewed a young man for enlistment in the air force.

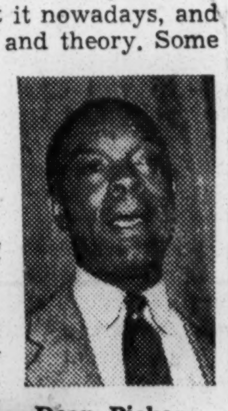
Pursuit Squadron....

By William Pickens

JAN 31 1942

TUSKEGEE.—The Negro in the Army and in the air: so much said about it nowadays, and so much on mere imagination and theory. Some people's passion against "racial segregation," for example, blinds them to any excellence in the Negro's American military record and to his starting participation in the air forces.



Dean Pickens

Go to Arizona and look at Fort Huachuca, its thousands of Negro soldiers and their daily routine and combat practice: a Negro Army post and as real an Army post as our Army has. Drill, machine-gun practice, hill and mountain and prairie terrain; clean barracks, sanitary fixtures, recreation halls. At Fort Huachuca one feels the cordial relationship between soldier and officer. In December there was in process of construction one of the most commodious USO centres, hard by the fort's main entrance gates. The USO centre is being dedicated today, as I write. The guards at those gates are polite and prompt—but efficient and positive. Fort Huachuca is not a plot for getting rid of Negroes who want to join the Army. It is an efficient institution for integrating colored Americans into our armed forces. To any man with guts in his body and brains in his head, it is a thrill.

Construction at Tuskegee

And then there is, still in process of construction at Tuskegee, the great air field of the 99th Pursuit Squadron, Negro unit. I had read so much belly-aching complaint against this three million dollar Army project, that until I went to Tuskegee a few days ago and looked at it, I had the feeling that it was a white man's device to keep Negroes from learning to fly and fight.

It seemed strange that the Army would spend three million dollars, and more, of our money just to spoil Negroes' chances, when the Army could do that for three cents. The old American mischiefmaker, segregation, is still in the Army, and will be there for some generations to come—but, by heaven, this 99th Pursuit Squadron field is nothing to increase or promote segregation, but will make a dent in it. These black boys are going to get into the air and prove their equality.

No Expensive Sham

Since racial segregation is based on or implies the theory or the fact of inequality, there can be no argument against segregation as convincing as the establishment of the actual fact of equality. This 99th Pursuit Squadron base is no expensive sham; it is a great training field—two runways that cross each other at right angles, to facilitate take-off and landing, whichever way the winds may be blowing.

One of those smoothly paved run-ways measured exactly nine-tenths of a mile on the speedometer of my car. A great community: fine barracks, recreation halls, power plants, hangars, library; reservoir, sewerage disposal plant. They have even changed the course of a river to make room for a corner of this field—as General Grant rerouted the Mississippi to by-Pass Pittsburgh.

Segregation based on skin-color or eye-color is damned nonsense, of course—but this man's Army is not planning to break or to make segregation: it is planinng to win a war, in spite of segregation or of those who oppose segregation.

Something Gained— More to Be Done

JAN 24 1942

• When a Negro air squadron, the 99th, was formed several months ago, this was a new development in the armed services. A Negro divison had existed during the World War, but never had Negroes been permitted into the air service. Now, in addition to the recently formed 99th air squadron, the War Department announces the formation of a second Negro air squadron—the 100th Pursuit Squadron, plus a Negro infantry division.

JAN 24 1942

All this marks the breaking down to some extent of the barriers which have limited the participation of the Negroes in the armed services. It is due no doubt to the expanding protest movement against the discrimination which is still a blot upon our military endeavors.

However, the main issue has still to be faced. This is the question of the practice of jim-crow which even receives further sanction by the procedure followed in setting up the Negro air squadron and division. The dangerous consequences of this policy can be seen in the recent shameful attacks on Negro soldiers in the South which can be traced to the practice of jim crow in the armed forces.

apacities of the Negro people and of the ation.

JAN 24 1942

The barriers which have been partially broken down in the Army should be completely destroyed. This especially applies to the Navy which is even way behind the Army in this respect. Such discrimination is in flagrant opposition to the policies of equality which the President has declared for employment in industry.

Discrimination in any form becomes an obstacle to the mobilizing of the full fighting

Drill, machine-gun practice, hill and mountain and prairie terrain; clean barracks, sanitary fixtures, recreation halls. At Fort Huachuca one feels the cordial relationship between soldier and officer. In December there was in process of construction one of the most commodious USO centres, hard by the fort's main entrance gates. The USO centre is being dedicated today, as I write. The guards at those gates are polite and prompt—but efficient and positive. Fort Huachuca is not a plot for getting rid of Negroes who want to join the Army. It is an efficient institution for integrating colored Americans into our armed forces. To any man with guts in his body and brains in his head, it is a thrill.

And then there is, still in process of construction at Tuskegee, the great air field of the 99th Pursuit Squadron, Negro unit. I had read so much belly-aching complaint against this three million dollar Army project, that until I went to Tuskegee a few days ago and looked at it, I had the feeling that it was a white man's device to keep Negroes from learning to fly and fight.

It seemed strange that the Army would spend three million dollars, and more, of our money just to spoil Negroes' chances, when the Army could do that for three cents. The old American mischiefmaker, segregation, is still in the Army, and will be there for some generations to come—but, by heaven, this 99th Pursuit Squadron field is nothing to increase or promote segregation, but will make a dent in it. These black boys are going to get into the air and prove their equality.

No Expensive Sham

Since racial segregation is based on or implies the theory or the fact of inequality, there can be no argument against segregation as convincing as the establishment of the actual fact of equality. This 99th Pursuit Squadron base is no expensive sham; it is a great training field—two runways that cross each other at right angles, to facilitate take-off and landing, whichever way the winds may be blowing.

One of those smoothly paved run-ways measured exactly nine-tenths of a mile on the speedometer of my car. A great community: fine barracks, recreation halls, power plants, hangars, library; reservoir, sewerage disposal plant. They have even changed the course of a river to make room for a corner of this field—as General Grant rerouted the Mississippi to by-Pass Pittsburgh.

Segregation based on skin-color or eye-color is damned nonsense, of course—but this man's Army is not planning to break or to make segregation: it is planinng to win a war, in spite of segregation or of those who oppose segregation.

Something Gained—More to Be Done

JAN 24 1942

• When a Negro air squadron, the 99th, was formed several months ago, this was a new development in the armed services. A Negro divison had existed during the World War, but never had Negroes been permitted into the air service. Now, in addition to the recently formed 99th air squadron, the War Department announces the formation of a second Negro air squadron—the 100th Pursuit Squadron, plus a Negro infantry division.

JAN 24 1942 47a

All this marks the breaking down to some extent of the barriers which have limited the participation of the Negroes in the armed services. It is due no doubt to the expanding protest movement against the discrimination which is still a blot upon our military endeavors.

However, the main issue has still to be faced. This is the question of the practice of jim-crow which even receives further sanction by the procedure followed in setting up the Negro air squadron and division. The dangerous consequences of this policy can be seen in the recent shameful attacks on Negro soldiers in the South which can be traced to the practice of jim crow in the armed forces.

The barriers which have been partially broken down in the Army should be completely destroyed. This especially applies to the Navy which is even way behind the Army in this respect. Such discrimination is in flagrant opposition to the policies of equality which the President has declared for employment in industry.

Discrimination in any form becomes an obstacle to the mobilizing of the full fighting capacities of the Negro people and of the nation.

Southernaires Dedicate New Post Theatre At Tuskegee

NOV 8 - 1942

NOV 8 - 1942

Present First Broadcast From Flying School

NOV 8 - 1942

TUSKEGEE, Ala.—(SNS)— On Sunday morning, November 1, at 9:30 (CWT), the familiar theme, "The Old Home," introducing the nationally famous radio, recording and concert artists—The Southernaires—emanated from the stage of the new Post Theatre at the Tuskegee Army Flying School, Tuskegee, Alabama.

The new theatre, modern in every respect, was filled to capacity with officers and enlisted men to share in the dedicatory ceremonies and to witness the broadcast—the first to originate from this base. The appearance of these artists was made possibly by the Special Service Office through the courtesy of the Post Commander, Colonel Frederick V. H. Kimble.

William Edmondson, manager and "parson at the White Washed Church," paid a glowing tribute to the rapid growth of this field, and to the personnel at large. Where once were mud and swamp, now can be seen miles of runway and modern structures; aviation cadets are receiving their wings periodically; and in praise of the Station Hospital, the White Washed Church parson-narrator had this to say: "Mothers or relatives need not worry about the health of the young men who come here to train as the Station Hospital is as fine and well equipped as the best—under a capable staff of surgeons and specialists in every branch of the medical field." The skilled instrument technicians, radio operators, photographers, airplane mechanics, weather men—all—came in for their share of commendation on this national broadcast.

As the officers and enlisted personnel sat listening to the songs of the Southernaires in their effort to assuage the pangs of a troubled world, these men remembered that it was on such a peaceful Sunday morning, 11 months ago, that bombs rained from the skies on Pearl Harbor. They remembered their fellow soldiers and the helpless citizens of that island who were victims of this unwarranted attack. As the musical strains of "Lord, I Want To Be A Christian," wafted over the ether waves, the Tuskegee Army Flying School was reminded of its debt to the Axis powers who would destroy religion, liberty and brotherhood—the American way of life.

Following the broadcast, the Southernaires worshipped at the Post Chapel and sang again for the benefit of the men who were unable to hear the broadcast. Chaplain Douglas L. T. Robinson relinquished his Sunday morning message to these agents of good-will who delivered the gospel in sacred hymns.

Citizens' Service Corps Seeks Aid Furnishing Army Air Base Rooms

Committee Seeking To Equip Recreation Halls For Enlisted Men

An appeal for citizens of Birmingham to assist the recreation committee of the Citizens Service Corps of civilian defense here in furnishing the day rooms for enlisted men at the Army Air Base in this city, was made Wednesday by Mrs. George Lewis Bailes, corps chairman, who listed valuable gifts already received.

The recreation service is one of several of the newly organized corps and one of the first undertakings is to coordinate the efforts in furnishing the six day rooms and a large recreation hall at the base.

Mrs. Bailes said that the East Lake Lions Club, with Ed Beason as president, and the Jefferson County Medical Auxiliary, Mrs. H. A. Harris, president, each will furnish one room complete.

A grand piano has been donated by the Birmingham Music Club and two electric victrolas by the Woodlawn Music Club and Birmingham music teachers.

Cash donations of $10 each have been received from the Fidelis Luncheon Club through Mrs. C. Fuller Manley, president, and the Philathea Bible Class of the First Baptist Church, Mrs. H. C. Crelly, president.

Furnishings needed are sofas, lounge chairs, card tables, writing desks, curtains, rugs, coffee tables, pictures, lamps of table and floor styles, pianos, ping-pong and pool tables. All checks should be made to Mrs. W. J. Christian, treasurer, and inquiries should be made at the corps office, 1718 Second Avenue, North, or telephone 7-7414.

Donated furniture will be called for by a truck furnished by the recreation committee and Mrs. Bailes suggested that the WPA will make needed articles for this purpose for actual cost of materials used.

Other than Mrs. Bailes, the committee is composed of R. S. Marshall, of the Park and Recreation Board; Lawrence Stevens, Board of Education; William H. Bancroft, USO; Raymond Weeks, Chamber of Commerce; Miss Olivia Swann and Mrs. Flora Cason Winks, Council of Social Services; Rabbi Abraham J. Mesch, Jewish Charities; the Rev. R. E. Branscomb, Protestant Pastors Union; Brother Gabriel, Catholic Charities Bureau, and C. W. Askew, of the Negro citizens committee.

TUSKEGEE CLUB OF CHICAGO AIDS NEGRO AIR FIELD

NOV 8 - 1942

Much of the work in getting the airport at Tuskegee, Ala., at which the 99th pursuit squadron, first all-Negro air unit, was trained, was done by the Chicago Tuskegee club, according to Daniel J. Faulkner, publicity director of the club. They began their campaign in early 1940 at the request of G. L. Washington, director of mechanical industries at Tuskegee institute. Percy R. Hines, then president, appointed Faulkner head of an airport committee, with Col. John C. Robinson, Negro flyer and later president of the club, as advisor. Other members were Dr. G. N. Adamson and Miss E. A. Clemmons. This committee obtained Brig. Gen. S. C. Dickerson, former commander of the 8th regiment, to head a citizen's committee composed of Claude A. Barnett, William Sewell, Faulkner, Dr. Roscoe C. Giles, Col. Lewis E. Johnson, Dr. M. O. Bousfield; Jeanet H. Waterford, first Negro woman in Chicago to buy a plane; Mrs. Maude R. George, John V. Clinnin, and Col. Robinson. Faulkner said this committee publicized the need of an airport and added that their efforts did much in obtaining an air unit for the Negroes.

Colored Flyers on Combat Duty Soon

The War Department announced this week that the first colored squadron would be on active duty overseas "very soon."

Ft. Davis Not To Get Advanced Flying Unit For Negro Air Pilots

For The Birmingham News

WASHINGTON—The War Department has decided against establishing an advanced flying school for Negroes at or near Ft. Davis, Ala., in Macon County, Senator Hill's office was informed Tuesday.

White citizens in Tuskegee, where the Third Flying Command last year established a basic flying school for Negroes, had protested against the proposal to establish the advanced flying school. Senator Hill and Representative Steagall had supported their request and urged the War Department not to put the school in Alabama.

The members of the Board of Revenue and the City Council of Tuskegee unanimously passed a resolution addressed to Senator Hill and Representative Steagall declaring that the "effects incident to the establishment of this school in Macon County would be unfavorable.

Air Cadet Describes How He Lived In Old English Castle

Says Roar of German Bombers Was a Sensation

The Atlanta Daily World
Atlanta, Ga.
DEC 20 1942

TUSKEGEE, Ala.—"Yes, we were quartered in an old English castle during the three months I spent in England this past summer with American troops overseas," says Cadet V. J. Richardson, now learning how to solo at the primary field near here. "I was one of a group that was actually quartered in an old bird house. Don't get the wrong impression, though, as that bird house had several rooms. We also had running water and heat. It seems the duke who once owned the castle had a wife who had many birds, so that the house was constructed for them and now is known as the bird house."

Cadet Richardson, whose home address is New York City, only a few weeks ago came all the way back from overseas so as to enter training here as an aviation cadet.

"My application for cadet training was in long before we went overseas, he explains. "And my application was finally acted on favorably and I was ordered back to the States."

The cadet says that while censorship regulaitons prevent his revealing where his outfit was actually located in England, he is allowed to describe living conditions as the troops found them over there.

"My most remarkable experience, while over there, was the sight of about 70 German Bombers in one formation which raided that part of England one day last summer. The American troops, as soon as the air raid alarm was sounded, gathered in what were known as "slit trenches". These trenches were six feet deep and three feet wide. There we stayed until the all-clear signal came.

"In fact, on my last night over there, we had an alarm and we were in the trenches when I first learned about the order to send me back. I left the next day for home."

Cadet Richardson says:

"I want to finish my training to become a pursuit pilot and then be sent back to England to finish the job."

Air Forces Ignoring Practices Of Other Units On Race Bias

The Informer, Houston, Texas

JAN 9 - 1943

TUSKEGEE, Ala. —Efforts to find out the fundamental causes of race discrimination through segregation at the Basic and Advanced Flying School here, which is training colored cadets for combat flying, discloses that the Army Air Forces are ignoring the policies and practices followed by other branches of the Army in the training of officer personnel.

Utilization of colored personnel by the Air Forces was reluctantly undertaken. Most of the colored personnel assigned to the Air Forces is being used in separate aviation squadrons. These squadrons are equivalent to labor battalions. Their chief job is to keep airfields in good condition. The only time they get near an airplane is when a ditch they are digging happens to be near a runway.

Recently, the opening of a new training program at Jefferson Barracks, near St. Louis, Missouri, was announced. Colored personnel, it was said, is to be trained there to fill various nonflying posts.

Similarities between the courses to be offered at Jefferson Barracks Florida for training will be stopped.

Discriminatory practices of the Army Air Forces are reflected in the aviation medical training program. Three doctors on duty at the station hospital have completed a course in aviation medicine at Maxwell Field in Montgomery and have received diplomas as specialists in aviation medicine.

While taking the course at Maxwell Field, they did not live on that post, but commuted from Tuskegee at irregular intervals. All of the white officers who took the course were assigned quarters at Maxwell Field.

Colored medical officers have for some time made efforts to enroll in the didactics course offered at Randolph Field, Texas. So far none has been accepted. The didactics course has been given to colored officers by correspondence. They must complete it while performing their regular duties. White officers who take the course are sent to Randolph Field and devote their full time to study while pursuing the course.

A course in the practical work is now being offered at Tuskegee.

At best, Tuskegee represents only a slight concession to the force of public opinion. Most of the courses open to white flying cadets are not available at Tuskegee.

Jim Crow signs, unofficially taken down, have not yet been put back up, despite the statement of Colonel Frederick von Kimble, the commanding officer of the Tuskegee Basic and Flying School, that they would be put up again and were to remain up.

Col. Kimble Goes To New Command At Georgia Field

Announcement was made at the headquarters of the Tuskegee Army Flying School this week that Col. Frederick V. H. Kimble, commanding officer of this station since last January, has been transferred to Cochran Field Ga., to assume command of a new flying wing.

DEC 31 1942

Activation of the new flying training wing was announced a few days ago at Maxwell Field by Maj. Gen. Ralph Royce, commanding general of the Southeast Training Center. Col. Kimble has assumed command of the 27th Flying Training Wing, which has headquarters at Cochran Field near Macon, Ga. His successor at Tuskegee has not yet been announced.

A graduate of West Point with the class of June, 1918, Col. Kimble has had more than 24 years of active duty, 20 years of which has been in the Air Corps.

Col. Kimble holds ratings both as a command pilot and a combat observer. He is unmarried but his mother lives with him.

"My work at the Tuskegee Army Flying School has been one of the most interesting experiences of my entire career," he said. "I have enjoyed the work thoroughly and feel that I possibly have helped to some small degree advancement of the program at this station which is to train colored Americans to fly our fastest pursuit ships."

While activation of the new 27th Flying Training Wing is getting under way, Col. Kimble will remain temporarily at Tuskegee, on detached service from Cochran Field headquarters.

LONG SILENCE IS BROKEN BY WAR OFFICIALS

Contend It Is Unwise to Expand Program

DEC 16 1942

WASHINGTON. — (ANP) —The War Department broke its long silence concerning plans for Negro pilots in combat service and announced that it expected the first Negro Squadron would "very soon" be on active duty overseas. The department expressed satisfaction over results obtained in its "experimental" training of Negro flyers in combat units.

"From results so far obtained, it is believed that the squadrons will give an excellent account of themselves in combat and that they will be a credit to their race and to Americans everywhere," stated Maj. Gen. James R. Ulio, adjutant general of the army.

"EXPANSION UNWISE"

Despite the hopeful announcement the department said it regarded as "unwise" consideration of plans to expand the present training program for Negro flyers as pursuit pilots.

Information that the airmen would soon be in the foreign service was contained in a letter to Congressman Raymond S. McKeough, (Dem., Ill.) from Maj. Gen. Ulio.

A request was made upon Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson several months ago by McKeough to grant every opportunity to citizens of all races, colors and creeds to aid the national war effort.

The Illinois congressman has long been an admirer of Negro flyers and has been active in attempts to secure full participation for them in the war program.

44th Squadron At Selfridge Field

DEC 24 1942

SELFRIDGE FIELD, Mich.—(SNS)—The 44th Aviation Squadron (separate), first all-Negro Squadron in Selfridge Field history, which was recently activated, is composed of a nucleus of troops from the Quartermaster Detachment of the Fairfield Air Depot which was temporarily stationed here for a period of nine months.

First Negro arrivals at Selfridge Field were 72 soldiers of the F-A-D detachment on December 25, 1941. These were augmented by recruits from induction centers from time to time.

The new soldiers have received basic training, with about a third of the squadron being formed into a special guard unit, in which they are being taught and are executing the duties of the military police and guard patrol. Of the remainder of the squadron, a large percentage are either attending Motor Vehicle School to learn repair, servicing and driving of motorized equipment, or the Field Service School, conducted for the Air Service Command by the Base Headquarters S-3 section. One of the many important functions of the Air Service Command is to train troops to operate under field conditions, maintaining and repairing aircraft without the conveniences of permanently established air bases.

Unofficial squadron activities include the usual day room recreations, such as billiards, table tennis, checkers, chess and reading. A recently formed choral group is under the guidance of Private Thomas W. Middleton, who has been featured on radio station WNEW, New York.

Several times each month special entertainment is provided the men, when "name" bands, vaudeville acts and dancing partners are brought to the Field through the efforts of Major Roland H. Davison, squadron commander. The Touch Football team, in competition with teams of other squadrons on the field, finished in 5th place in an eleven-team league.

USE NEGRO FLYERS IN WAR: U. S.

DEC 20 1942

WASHINGTON, Dec. 17—(ANP)—The war department broke its long silence concerning plans for Negro pilots in combat service and announced that it expected the first Negro squadron would "very soon" be on active duty overseas. The department expressed satisfaction over results obtained in its "experimental" training of Negro flyers in combat units.

"From results so far obtained, it is believed that the squadrons will give an excellent account of themselves in combat and that they will be a credit to their race and to Americans everywhere," stated Maj. Gen. James R. Ulio, adjutant general of the army.

Despite the hopeful announcement the department said it regarded as "unwise" consideration of plans to expand the present training program for Negro flyers as pursuit pilots.

Information that the airmen would soon be in the foreign service was contained in a letter to Congressman Raymond S. McKeough, (Dem., Ill.) from Maj Gen. Ulio.

A request was made upon Secy of War Henry L. Stimson several months ago by McKeough to grant every opportunity to citizens of all races, colors and creeds to aid national war effort.

The Illinois congressman has long been an admirer of Negro flyers and has been active in attempts to secure full participation for them in the war program.

Urban League In Atlanta Wins Long, Hard Fignt; 37 Take Training

Dec. 4, 1942

ATLANTA, Dec. 3 (ANP)—The result of a hard, nine-month fight by the Atlanta Urban league and the Atlanta Negro Defense Training council finally resulted, this week, in the opening of the first defense training program ever started in the deep south for prospective Negro aircraft workers.

Thirty-seven students certified by the U. S. Employment service began and eight-weeks course to fit them for skilled employment at the Bell Bomber plant which will begin production a few months from now in Marietta, Ga., a suburb of Atlanta.

Nashville Tenn.

Students will learn air plane, sheet metal, fabrication, sub assembly and riveting as part of a basic aircraft training course on which other skills may be added.

Although all of the $10,000 in equipment ordered for the training program has not yet been received, instructors stated that they have enough to begin the training course and look forward to more before the course ends.

Long, Hard Fight

In February, 1941, Negroes had only four out of 55 defense training courses being offered in Atlanta, although they are one-third of the population. These were unimportant occupations and were discontinued before completion.

When the Bell Aircraft corporation of Buffalo announced plans, last February for a bomber plant near Marietta which would hire between 30 and 40 thtousand workers, the Atlanta Urban league immediately swung into action to make sure that Negroes would have a fighting chance for some of these jobs.

Council Organized

A council on defense training for Negroes was organized by William Y. Bell executive secretary of the league, to help in a pressure campaign to get defense training. A private registration conducted by the council and the league brought in 5,000 Negro men and women to sign up for defense training which was flatly denied them by local, state and federal officials. These officials were contacted and vigorous protest lodged by letter, telegrams and personal conferences over the plan to deny vital war industrial training to Negro American citizens.

Meanwhile, the training of white workers proceeded rapidly with training authorities getting permission from Washington to spend $60,000 in equipment for white schools but none for Negro schools. The white training program started in May and in July, nearly 800 men and women were enrolled in the classes.

Appeal to Weaver, FEPC

The league appealed to the Negro manpower service and the FEPC. Following an investigation of the U. S. Office of Education by the committee, Commissioner John Studebaker and state training officials finally agreed to set up defense training for Negroes.

When they did nothing to actually get the program started, however, council members traveled to Birmingham for the FEPC hearing from June 18-20. Testimony was given by Bell, listing 10 charges of discrimination with documentary evidence to back up the complaints.

As a result of the terrific pressure campaign launched by the Urban league and the work of the FEPC and Dr. Weaver's Negro manpower service, the school is now open and league officials have begun to work on the Bell Aircraft corporation to secure a large share of the jobs in the factory when it is completed sometime next Easter.

A tacital inspection and review of the 34th Aviation Squadron, which is made up of Negro troops, was held at Mitchel Field Sub-Post No. 1 last Thurday for Colonel Douglas Johnon, Commanding Officer of Mitchel Field, L. I., and Major Joseph F. Delaney, in charge of the training program.

The troops have been drilling only a month under First Loeutenant James R. Woods, commanding officer, and Second Lieutenant Winston K. Ullman, but they put on a demonstration of military skill that would do credit to soldiers with several times as much instruction.

Hasty Fortifications

First the men were inspected in the barracks and then in ranks under arms. A demontration of close order drill followed. After a bayonet drill, an exhibition of hasty field fortifications, consisting of foxholes, wire entanglements and road blocks, was given. 12/5/42

Methods of defense against air attack was followed by gas mask drill and a demonstration of use of cover and concealment. Extended order drill concluded the review.

The day was topped off by a squadron party to which the soldiers invited civilian guests.

When requested to pick out puishments. In Washington he men who have been outstanding during the basic training period, Lieut. Woods requested that acknowledgement be made of the work of two recruit instructors who are attached to the 34th Aviation Squadron from the Mitchel Field Air Base Squadron. They are Corporals Amiel Loccisano and Paul Cunningham.

The aftermath of an impressive flying exhibition at the Tuskegee Army Flying school, displaying the maneuverability of the P-39 fighter plane developed into a daredevil ride by a cadet in the advanced flying class.

After acquiring about an hour of cockpit time in the strange, high-powered ship, Cadet Edward Creston Gleed of Lawrence, Kas., strapped himself into the spiral-nosed airplane and began to taxi towards the runways.

The spectators, consisting of officers, maintenance crews and enlisted men, watched with interest the gallant young lad as he received his last-minute instructions from Captain W. B. Taylor of Craig Field, Ala. An outburst of applause went up from the crowds as this cool cadet from Kansas made a perfect takeoff.

After remaining in the air for some 40 minutes, he returned to overshoot the field and had to give the ship the gun for a second attempt—this time, coming in for a perfect three-point landing. Again the men cheered—three rounds of strong rousing cheers—for the first Negro aviation cadet to fly a P-39.

Cadet Gleed was commissioned a second lieutenant Friday, Dec. 11. He is a graduate of the University of Kansas and attended the Howard University School of Law. He enlisted in the armed forces in February, 1941, with the 9th cavalry at Fort Riley, Kas. He was later transferred to the Military Intelligence department in Washington, D. C. He is a member of the Kappa Alpha Psi fraternity.

Tuskegee Cadet Thrills In First P-39 Airacobra Flight

TUSKEGEE, Ala.—Cadet Edward C. Gleed of Lawrence, Kans., last week became the first Negro aviation cadet to fly the tricky but speedy P-39 Airacobra.

Spectators at the Tuskegee Flying School were treated to a thrilling exhibition of skill and courage when Gleed with only an hour's time in the cockpit of the strange, high-powered ship demonstrated the maneuverability of the P-39.

After last-minute instructions from Capt. W. B. Taylor of Craig Field, Ala., Gleed strapped himself into the spiral-nosed ship and began to taxi down the runway for a perfect take-off. Cheers and applause went up from the crowd as the daring young cadet swung the plane into position for the short exhibition flight over the flying field. Round and round he went, up and under, and round and round again for 40 breath-taking minutes.

Then the daredevil pilot gave the ship the gun and overshot the field in attempting a landing. The second time he came in for a perfect three-point landing. Again the men cheered for the first Negro aviation cadet to fly a P-39.

Cadet Gleed was graduated from the University of Kansas and attended the Howard university law school for a year and a half before enlisting for duty with the 9th Cavalry at Fort Riley, Kans. He served as an attache to the Military Intelligence Department in Washington, D. C. before coming to the Tuskegee Flying School.

The aviator is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert J. Gleed of Lawrence, Kans. He is a Kappa Alpha Psi man.

CLAIM AIR CORPS BIAS DEPRIVING U.S. OF AIRMEN

Pittsburgh, Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 12.—While the Army is beating the tom toms for two million men in the Air Corps, General Henry Arnold, chief of the Air Corps, is sitting tight on approximately 4,000 applications from Negroes who want to enlist in the flying branch of the service.

The signs point to the fact that the air base at Tuskegee Institute, where the 99th Pursuit Squadron is being trained, was set up originally to give Negroes only token representation in that branch of the service in compliance with the Act of Congress which made mandatory the training of Negro aviators.

Only about one-sixth of the facilities at Tuskegee have been used. The rest of the two million dollar project is idle.

Into the project at Tuskegee, the Air Corps has been feeding Negro volunteers in driblets of ten every five or six weeks. The base can take care of classes of sixty, instead of ten, easily.

LARGE RESERVE AVAILABLE

FEB 14 1942

Reliable authorities inform The Courier that there are at least five hundred Negroes who have finished the Civilian Pilot Training program and want to enlist in the Air Corps. Most of these men are on the long waiting list. Beside these, there are several thousand others who have sought to enlist from civilian life, without any training, and have been pigeon-holed after passing the original physical examination.

One of those who has been attempting to get into the Air Corps for more than a year is Sidat Singh, former Syracuse university football and basketball star. Sing recently accepted a position on the Washington police force.

A number of men have finished the Civilian Pilot Training course of the Civil Aeronautics Administration and have sought to enlist; in fact, most of the men took the course with the idea of going into the Army Air Corps.

Some of them have been drafted while awaiting the call for air training.

NEGRO AIR CADETS MAKE FINE RECORD

FIRST CLASS WILL BE COMMISSIONED IN FEW DAYS

TUSKEGEE, Ala., Feb. 6 (UP).—In a few days the army's first class of negro fliers become commissioned officers and their instructors revealed today the number of "washouts" was lower than the general average of white flying cadets.

Far back in a secluded area, miles from Tuskegee, the negro fliers are being trained.

The success of the experiment with negro aviators is indicated by a war department announcement several days ago that a new squadron, the 100th, would be formed by negro cadets, and that other such pursuit units were being planned. The young men in training as cadets of the 99th Pursuit Squadron will serve as instructors of the new air units.

The army school for negro flying cadets was put under construction last summer and the first class began flying in the fall. The reports sent Washington of the success of the new venture has led to a three-fold expansion of facilities at the base and the addition of Col. Frederick W. Kimble as commanding officer.

Since there are no commissioned negro pilots in the army, instructions to the first class have been by white officers. They say "these men have met the same physical and mental requirements as set forth for all cadets. They seem to catch on rapidly to the art of flying pursuit style although none of them are being trained as pilots for bombers."

Down here in Alabama the negro cadets complete their primary training on one field, and then move nearby to a main base for basic and advanced training. They must meet every standard, every test required of white pilots.

Officers say they have no trouble with these men. "They take to military life like a duck to water," they add. "They walk around very proudly in their uniforms, their morale is at the very highest and we have had no trouble with them at all. They play basketball and occasionally go on visits, but for the most part they study and dream of the day they will get their wings."

Officers say the cadets' eyes are very good, their sense of depth and perception all that could be asked. "But it is the men's discipline and love for the army that has made them stick and hang up the record on which future action will be taken."

As one pilot put it, "Those Japs are going to find out pretty soon what's meant by black death."

First Negro Fliers Ready

Initial Class Being Commissioned In Few Days; Number Of 'Washouts' Relatively Small

By FREDERICK WILLIAMS

TUSKEGEE, Ala., Feb. 6—(U.P.)—In a few days the army's first class of negro fliers become commissioned officers and their instructors revealed today that the number of "washouts" was lower than the general average of white flying cadets.

Far back in a secluded country area, miles from Tuskegee, the negro fliers are being trained.

First of Negro Air Squadron Ready to Fly

MAR 8 - 1942

By the Associated Press

Tuskegee, Ala., March 7.—First graduates of the advanced flying school here, who will form the nucleus of the first all-Negro squadron of the United States Air Forces, were told today that "it appears more and more plain that this war will be decided by air power."

The speaker was Maj. Gen. George E. Stratemeyer, commanding officer of the Southeast Air Corps training center, who told the new pilots that the school from which they have just graduated "is a sound step forward in the Nation's war effort."

The class here was one of several to receive "wings" and commissions as second lieutenants at advanced schools throughout the center, one of three such centers in the country.

Gen. Stratemeyer said of the Tuskegee school that "here today is opened a new source of strength to wage that fight." He stressed the importance of the air arm in both defensive and offensive operations of land and sea forces.

"In past wars," he told the graduate pilots, "American Negro soldiers have done their full duty with combat forces of the ground units. In this war, the American Negro is destined to take his place in defense of his country by performing combat duties in the air."

Race Fliers To Be Commissioned

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE — (ANP)—The first group of black flying cadets comprising members of the 99th Pursuit Squadron are expected to graduate from the stiff army flying course very soon now and become the first Negro commissioned officers in the air corps of the United States army. The men have come through the course with flying colors and the white officers who train them admit that those who are graduating have met every test.

Officers who, until the class was about to graduate have been sparing in their comment, now admit that the boys have done a good job. They report that they not only have had no trouble with the cadets but say that "they take to military life like a duck to water" and add that morale is at its peak. The Negro boys are proud of their opportunity and should make good officers their instructors say.

It is understood that this first class will serve as instructors for additional cadets. According to the announcement made in Washington by Secretary Stimson a few weeks ago, graduates from this class will be used to train additional fliers at other points. This angle has not been clarified but is taken to mean that they may be assigned to various colored colleges where preliminary army training is to be given in place of the CAA type of training the schools are now conducting.

Such a move would expand quickly the number of men available for higher training at the Tuskegee base here. The facilities of the three million dollar plant where fliers are being trained a few miles from the institute are being expanded so that it can take care of three times the number of men originally planned to occupy the post.

Officers say that the student fliers have shown themselves especially adapted to pursuit plane manipulation. Their eyes are good, their sense of depth and preception excellent and their discipline exemplary. The army men have been particularly pleased by the love of the army which these young fliers have exhibited. They point to the fact that they have met the same rigid physical and mental tests which white cadets have undergone and have come through with flying colors. The increased size of the field resulted in the addition of Col. Frederick V. Kimble as commanding officer. Maj. Ellison who had charge from the incipiency of the field, is still on duty.

Expansion of Flying Cadet Quota Sought

FEB 21 1942

TUSKEGEE, Ala.—An increase in the quota of flying cadets admitted for training for the army's 99th Pursuit Squadron (now ten every five weeks) is being sought by the Tuskegee Airmen's Association, of which Langston H. Caldwell is chairman.

In a telegram to Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson last week, the committee called attention to the large number of qualified young men with basic training who are prevented, by present quota restrictions, from serving their country in a field where such service is in great demand.

CPT Grads Pushed

The committee is also attempting to have accepted as cadets, more of the young college men who have completed the civilian pilot training course and are, as a result, in better position to satisfactorily complete the advanced training course than applicants without this training.

The telegram to Secretary Stimson follows:

"We are wiring for your active interest and intervention in behalf of trained colored men and aviators desirous of serving in this war effort.

2 Accepted Out of 150

"More than 150 private pilots trained at Tuskegee have filed applications and met all requirements to become cadets in the Air Corps, but to date only two have been called.

"Qualified instructors have filed applications and met the requirements of the Air Corps. These men have not been used as instructors or cadets due to the small number of colored men inducted.

2 Nearing Age Limit

"There are two private pilots who have been waiting eight months or more for an appointment. These men will have reached the age limit by March unless called or given a waiver for age.

"From observation of unit now in training, the few colored men selected have proved their ability to meet all requirements efficiently. It is hard to see why these trained men have not been used by the Air Corps to help fight for their country, toward which they have been so loyal."

First Air Corps Grads Complete Tuskegee Course

MAR 7 - 1942

TUSKEGEE, (ANP) — Graduation of aviation cadets forming the Jim Crow 99th Pursuit squadron, based near here, is tentatively set for Saturday, March 7, it was announced early this week. The young flyers, first to become full-fledged aviators for the army air corps, will immediately start training the new Jim Crow 100th Pursuit squadron, now all-Negro unit authorized by the war department.

Members of the graduating class have been highly praised by their instructors and it is believed they will turn in a remarkable record if and when they meet the enemy in actual combat.

U. S. GRADUATES FIRST SQUADRON OF NEGRO FLYERS

MAR 8 - 1942

Wings Given by General at Tuskegee Ceremony.

Maj. Gen. George E. Stratemeyer, commanding officer of the southeast air corps training center, welcomed the young Negroes into their chosen branch of the nation's combat and defensive forces, and declared:

"Our country is engaged in a hard fight for its security and freedom; here today is opened a new source of strength to wage that fight."

Sees Important Rôle.

The number receiving commissions was not made public, and assignments were not announced immediately. Gen. Stratemeyer emphasized to them, however, that their places in the nation's war effort would be important.

"It appears more and more plain," he said, "that this war will be decided by air power. By choosing to serve your country in its air forces, you have placed yourself in position to help make the decision in this war victory for our side."

He recalled that in past wars American Negro soldiers had done their duty with combat units of the ground forces, but that "in this war, the American Negro is destined to take his place in defense of his country by performing combat duties in the air."

"You should feel that you are on your mettle," he continued. "As you are the first group of Negro military pilots, it is up to you to prove that this school is not just a noble experiment, but is a sound step forward in the nation's war effort."

General's Son Commissioned.

Among those receiving commissions was Capt. Benjamin O. Davis Jr., son of Brig. Gen. Davis of Fort Riley, Kas. He is a graduate of West Point, and his first assignment was at Fort Benning, Ga.

After about a year at Benning, Davis was transferred to Tuskegee institute as professor of military science and tactics; in the spring of 1941 he was sent to Fort Riley as aid to Brig. Gen. Davis, but returned here last summer to begin pilot training.

General Stratemeyer Tells Fliers They Have An Important Mission

By Forrest Castleberry
United Press Staff Correspondent

TUSKEGEE, March 7.—Maj. Gen. George E. Stratemeyer, commander of the Southeast Air Corps Training Center, told the first graduates of the first U. S. Army Air Corps flying school for Negroes here today that "the prime lesson of this war is clear."

"Without the support and protection of adequate friendly aviation, ground and sea forces are at an appalling disadvantage," he said. "Strongly fortified positions, heretofore considered impregnable, are vulnerable; and sea power is rendered impotent.

"Therefore, it appears more and more plain that this war will be decided by air power."

All-Negro Unit

The number of graduates in this first class was not disclosed. They will be the nucleus of the 99th (all-Negro) Pursuit Squadron to be formed.

"Combat pursuit pilots like you are needed now, and will be needed in large numbers tomorrow, in many zones where our forces must operate throughout the world," General Stratemeyer told the new flying officers. "You have a glorious opportunity. I have great confidence that you will seize it; that you will acquit yourselves well, and add luster to the proud traditions already established by your race in fighting for this country.

Much Yet To Learn

"You have learned much but much remains to be learned. I would like to give you a word of warning. Don't even entertain the faintest idea that you know all about military flying. You must never stop learning; none of us ever have.

"The primary mission of pursuit aviation is to attack and destroy enemy aircraft in the air. Before you are ready to go into combat of this kind, you must receive additional tactical training.

"In past wars, American Negro soldiers have done their full duty with combat units of the ground forces. In this war, the American Negro is destined to take his place in defense of his country by performing combat duties in the air."

Col. John C. Robinson Of Ethiopia Fame Now Chanute Field Teacher

Chicago Flyer Who Once Fought With Haile Selassie Now Teaching Young Men How to Fly Uncle Sam's Planes

CHANUTE FIELD, Ill. — (ANP) — The story of John C. Robinson, the "Brown Condor of Ethiopia," who is now a civilian instructor here, provides a graphic lesson. This native son of Chicago has proved that a person of initiative and determination usually can accomplish what he sets out to do.

"The Brown Condor has set an example which serves to clear the way for future success stories in the field of aviation.

Speed—and mechanical things capable of producing speed—interested John C. Robinson even as a child. Little wonder, then, that he became a motorcycle stunt rider and toured with carnivals and circuses, presenting a specialty act that thrilled people. He was one of the first to ride a roaring motorcycle around the steep walls of a specially constructed hippodrome.

Robinson was first attracted by aviation in 1926. Aerial stunting appealed to him and after qualifying for a pilot's license, he again toured with carnivals and air circuses, this time as a stunt flyer.

Likes Stunt Flying

"Understand, I first took up flying solely because stunting appealed to me," the Brown Condor remarked during an interview. "However, as I worked with airplanes I got a different slant on things. I could see the handwriting-on-the-wall. The popular conception of an aviator as being a person of recklescourage and abandon was on the way out. The future of aviation hinged on speed and increased safety."

The savings gleaned over the period of months of perilous work were used to endoll in the Curtiss-Wright Aeronautical university at Chicago. The future of aviation depended upon safety, and there was no better way in which to equip one's self for the task ahead than by taking a course in aeronautical engineering, Robinson thought.

"It took courage, even then, to go ahead with my plan," Robinson observed. "I was the first colored person to enroll in the school. But I early adopted the attitude that whatever happened would depend upon how I conducted myself."

Upon graduation, Robinson was offered a position as an instructor in the school. This job he quickly accepted, and remained in that capacity for five years.

It was also about this time that Mussolini decided to "liberate" the Ethiopians. Robinson then became a soldier-of-fortune, joined the forces of Haile Selassie, and was off to an adventure that gained him prominence.

Future In Own Hands

His prowess and skill as a flyer quickly won him recognition and acclaim among his fellow squadron members. They began calling this man the "Brown Condor of Ethiopia." This tiny air force fought against tremendous odds; their air force never numbering more than 24 planes at one time, whereas the Italians had entered approximately 500 aircraft into the conflict.

This small group of intrepid flyers fought with such skill and daring against overwhelming odds that they won the plaudits of the entire world, even though the Ethiopian cause was eventually defeated by an army superior in numbers and equipment.

There will be a future for the colored race in the post-war field of aviation, Robinson believes. "But, it is well to make one point clear," he said. "That future will depend upon the man himself. If he will look at it purely from a business point of view, and not let the social aspects enter into the picture, then his future is assured."

Today the Brown Condor is an instructor in the multi-engine phase of the army air forces technical training command school located at Chanute field.

He is glad that he can serve his country "in this manner." Too old to qualify for a commission as a pilot, Robinson is nevertheless helping the cause, helping by teaching others.

The Brown Condor's position of today may not have the spectacular aspect of yester-year's accomplishments, but when the efforts of a multitude of other instructors are pooled toward a common goal, the net result is that this nation will "keep 'em flying" toward ultimate victory.

Negro Pilots War Service Held Up

Daily Worker
N.Y., N.Y.

Negro pilots in training at the Tuskegee air base will not be fighting and flying for their country before June 30, 1943, according to Henry L. Stimson, Secretary of War.

This information was contained in a letter from the Secretary to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People under date of Sept. 1. Said Secretary Stimson:

"At Tuskegee, Alabama, the Army Air Force have a school engaged in training fighter pilots from the graduates of which a complete fighter group is in the process of formation. This school is being expanded and additional schools for the training of technicians are being established so that not later than June 30, 1942, a complete fighter groups with all necessary crew and base services will be ready for combat. As soon as this group is thoroughly trained and prepared for combat, it will be committed."

Mr. Stimson said also that by the end of 1942 there would be 100,000 Negroes in the Army Air Forces. This total, however, will include technical specialists, administrative personnel, airdrome defense battalions, aviation squadrons for general work on air bases, quartermaster truck companies, medical detachments, etc.

34 COMMISSIONED

No figures are given on the actual number of pilots, but on Aug. 15, Lieut. Gen. Henry H. Arnold, chief of the Army Air Forces, released an official statement saying 34 Negro pilots had been trained and commissioned at Tuskegee. This was a year's production, since the actual pilot training at Tuskegee did not begin until August, 1941.

In its letter to the War Department the NAACP had asked for a lifting of the quota system on Negro air cadets and their admission to all air training bases, pointing out that many young colored men were anxious to serve, but could not get in because of the quota.

Secretary Stimson wrote that the War Department is now limiting both white and Negro air cadet applicants to one year's supply and that all above this number would be subject to Selective Service. He pointed out, also, that Negroes are now being accepted and trained in the field artillery as liaison pilots, for duty with Negro field artillery units, observing and spotting field gunfire. These men will fly small unarmored and unarmed planes with a speed of about 80 miles per hour.

Although the NAACP letter asked for the training of Negroes as bomber pilots on multi-engined aircraft, as bombardiers, and navigators, no reference to this type of training was made by Secretary Stimson in his reply. So far as is known, Negroes at present are being trained only as pilots of fast, single-seat fighter planes.

"Race Aviators An Experiment," Says Air Chief

AUG 22 1942

WASHINGTON, Aug. 20—Training of Negro aviators is a step-by-step process, Lieut. Gen. Henry Arnold, head of the Army Air Force, told reporters at a press conference here Saturday.

AUG 22 1942

General Arnold had just finished a 20-minute description of the role which United States airmen are playing in the war and of the training program when he was asked about Negro aviators.

70 IN TRAINING

He said that 34 Negroes had been graduated and that there were 70 in training.

He indicated that the training of Negro aviators in the Army is experimental and not on the all-out scale for white aviators.

Whereas in his description of American white aviators in the war so far he praised them as the "best boys in the world," he implied that the Army was trying to see how Negro aviators would work by creating one squadron and, possibly, a second.

"It's a step by step process," he commented.

Secretary Of War Stimson Pays 'Pop Call' To Maxwell

OCT 7 - 1942

Maxwell Field, and the Tuskegee Army Flying School, were visited by Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson on a quick inspection tour Monday, the public relations office of the Southeast Air Corps Training Center revealed yesterday. Secretary Stimson spent Monday night here, his trip unheralded and unannounced until after his departure early Tuesday morning by plane en route for Tyndall Field, Panama City, Fla.

After a brief visit at Tuskegee Monday, the Secretary of War came to Maxwell Field by Army plane, arriving in mid-afternoon. Met by Col. Elmer J. Bowling, commanding officer at Maxwell Field, and by a guard of honor composed of aviation cadets, Secretary Stimson addressed all Maxwell Field and Southeast officers and instructors assembled in a nearby hangar. He complimented the air force instructors on their devotion to the arduous task of training the country's young men for air combat, pointing out the essential nature of their task to the ultimate success of the war effort.

A large Douglas transport brought Mr. Stimson, R. A. Lovett, assistant secretary of war for air, and Maj. Gen. Alexander D. Surles, chief of the War Department Bureau of Public Relations to Tuskegee Army Flying School, where they landed shortly after noon Monday. They were greeted by Maj. Gen. Barton K. Yount, chief of the Flying Training Command, Fort Worth, Texas; Maj. Gen. Ralph Royce, commanding the Southeast Training Center; Brig. Gen. W. W. Welsh, chief of staff for the Training Center; Col. Frederick V. H. Kimble, commanding officer of the Tuskegee Army Flying School, and Lieut. Col. Benjamin O. Davis, Jr., commanding the 99th Pursuit Squadron. A guard of honor of negro aviation cadets stood at attention as the secretary alighted.

After a brief tour of the field, and a conference with the heads of the administrative and training sections, the secretary met the pilots of the new 99th Pursuit Squadron, and in a brief talk to the negro pilots assembled on the flying line, complimented them on the manner in which they had applied themselves to the job of becoming military aviators. He then touched on the responsibility which faced them in the future and expressed the hope that they would continue to maintain their present record in the grave situation which would confront them when faced by the enemy.

Condemnation Of Airport Land Is Set At Opelika

SEP 24 1942

Hearing on condemnation proceedings against eight tracts of land taken over in Macon County for the Army Flying School here has been set for Oct. 21 in U. S. District Court at Opelika and a number of property owners affected are marshalling legal talent to oppose valuations placed on their lands. SEP 24 1942

First legal advertisement of the proceedings appear in this issue of The Tuskegee News and will be repeated two more weeks to fulfill legal requirements relating to giving of notice of such proceedings.

The condemnation proceedings affect some 1,647 acres of land taken over by the U. S. Army and invlove a large number of property owners. SEP 24 1942

Quite a number of the affected property owners are non-residents of Alabama and in some cases ownership of the tracts is vested in estates, thus further complicating the proceedings to be held at Opelika.

The hearing will open at 10 a. m. Oct. 21 in the Federal Building in Opelika.

Told To Look To Certain Future

TUSKEGEE, Ala.—(SNS)—Promptly at 10 a. m. on Friday, October 9, the playing of the stirring march, 'The Army Air Corps", heralded the graduation ceremonies of another class of aviation cadets at the Tuskegee Army Flying school. OCT 18 1942

Following the military procession led by Colonel Frederick V. H. Kimble, Lieutenant Colonels Noel F. Parris hand Benjamin O. Davis, Jr., there was an interlude of music by the Post Band under the direction of Lieutenant Frank L. Drye.

In the outset, Colonel Kimble cited to the flying officer-candidates the goal of the Tuskegee Army Air Base and its gradual but sure realization: "The goal: To train pilots, to develop mechanics, and to organize and equip a Fighter Squadron. As the weeks and months wore on this goal began to take tangible form and then became a concrete reality. Today it is no longer difficult to see this initial goal for which you and your predecessors have stood. The flying training school has developed through many classes. The Fighter Squadron exists in full fact; and beyond that, there are other squadrons already taking shape. The material aspects of this school are no longer difficult of realization."

OTHER THINGS MUST EXIST OCT 18 1942

According to the Colonel, however, there are other things that must exist in order that the full and complete attainment of flying success is possible—esprit de corps. "Airplanes, men, tools—these are the things which can be seen, which can be felt, and which give substance," he declared. "Behind that must be invisible forces which are absolutely essential to success to any fighter unit: Pride in perfection of performance and esprit in the men for their station, for their unit, and confidence in their future.

"It is these invisible forces which have contributed so much to the results which we see before us today. It would have been impossible of accomplishment had the will to serve not existed in every man, no matter how humble his task, and in every officer.

FILLED WITH CONFIDENCE

"....Press reports bring word of heroism of American throughout the entire world. Dispirited men cannot accomplish these things," Colonel Kimble continued. "You join a group of military men filled with confidence for the future; and as you are elated today over receiving your wings and your commissions, I can assure you it is that same spirit of elation, that same desire to join the line of pilots which has preceded you that will carry the new pursuit to the successful future which is the heritage of the American Army."

Some of the successful candidates to receive commissions and wings at the hands of Colonel Kimble and Lieutenant Colonels Parrish and Davis include: Marshall S. Cabiness, 413 North Oakland St., Gastonia, North Carolina; Elwood T. Driver, 30 Fountain Avenue, Trenton, New Jersey; John A. Gibson, 3511 South Parkway, Chicago, Illinois; Nathaniel M. Hill, 1717 Ninth Street, N.W., Washington, D.C.; Herman A. Lawson, 204 White's Bridge, Fresno, Californiaa; William T. Mattison, 1213 Markham Street, Conway, Arkansas; Price DeAllyon Rice, 132 Lincoln Street, Montclair, New Jersey; and Andrew D. Turner, 1000 Westford Place, N. E., Washington, D.C.

Negro Flyers to See Combat Duty

WASHINGTON. —(ANP)— The war department broke its long silence concerning plans for Negro pilots in combat service and announced that it expected the first Negro Squadron would "very soon" be on active duty overseas. The department expressed satisfaction over results obtained in its "experimental" training of Negro flyers in combat units.

"From results so far obtained, it is believed that the squadrons will give an excellent account of themselves in combat and that they will be a credit to their race and to Americans everywhere," stated Major General James R. Ulie, adjutant general of the army.

Despite the hopeful announcement the department said it regarded as "unwise" consideration of plans to expand the present training for Negro flyers as pursuit pilots.

WILLA BROWN CONSIDERED FOR FLYING COMMAND

DEC 17 1942

Chicago (ANP)—Willa Brown, highest ranking Negro woman flyer and the only woman qualified for a place in the army air forces flying training command, last week again was urged to consider becoming one of the women trainees now being sought by the command.

DEC 17 1942

Miss Brown, who is not only one of the country's bese pilots, but also is extremely efficient as a ground instructor, is considered one of the best qualified persons for this new sector of the country's air forces. It is thought that the attracti,e young pilot will not accept, however, because she feels that she can be of greater service to her country by training young men for service in the U. S. Army Air forces as flight instructors and liasion pilots.

Tuskegee Conquers Threat of Malaria

DEC 12 1942

TUSKEGEE, Ala. — An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure!

With this time-honored slogan in mind, health authorities at the Tuskegee Army Flying School have waged and recently concluded a successful campaign for control of malaria in the vicinity of the air base.

No Cases on Record

Today, the post surgeon, Major R. C. Cumming, declares: "We are mighty happy to report there have been no cases of malaria among the troops stationed here."

Laboratory Studies

In the experimental laboratory weeks were spent in careful scientific preparation. Traps were set and specimens collected daily to determine the prevalence of malaria-bearing mosquitoes in the area.

These soldier-technicians know their jobs. Cpl. Edward E. Mitchell, a former student of Columbia University, New York, learned the science of mosquito extermination while on duty with the U. S. Transport Service in Panama, the Philippines and Hawaii. He left Pearl Harbor only a short time before the bombing raid.

Cpl. Shehee acquired his practical knowledge and experience in disease control while employed as a laboratory technician in the department of sanitation in New York City; while Pvt. Andrew Williams, a native of Elizabeth City, N.C., was a student of biology at the State Teachers' College there when he answered the call to arms.

Pvt. Gilbert Edwards was employed for several years as recreational therapist at the Bellevue Hospital in New York.

Creeks Oiled, Drained

The post engineering led the maneuvers from this point. Trees were felled, weeds and brushes were cleared, ponds and creeks were thoroughly oiled or drained; some 1276 feet of ditches being cut in order to drain one particular area.

Snakes, poisonous or otherwise, did not deter these boys in the least. They made sport of unearthing them. Seventeen had been dragged out into the open at the close of the campaign.

Beavers Fought Back

The only group of "saboteurs" who sought to impede the progress of the campaign was a nest of beavers who stubbornly refused to sacrifice their home for the war effort. Day after day, the men broke through their line of defense, only to find the stronghold of brush and sticks rebuilt the following morning.

The beavers worked fast and furiously. It was truly a nip-and-tuck battle all the way until the men gave up in despair. The State game trapper was summoned and he succeeded in caging an entire family of 29 determined beavers who were transferred to the western part of the State for future operations.

Bankers Commend Vast Program Of Training

TUSKEGEE, Ala.—"There was nothing as wonderful as this when I was in the Army! . . . I am greatly impressed with everything," remarked Major R. R. Wright, a veteran of the Spanish-American War, banker, and politician, as he and his party paid a visit to the Tuskegee Army Flying School on July 11.

Major Wright is the founder and president of the Citizens and Society Bank and Trust Company of Philadelphia, and the president of the National Negro Bankers Association which held its annual meeting in Atlanta on July 9-10.

It was Major Wright who proposed postage stamps in honor of Booker T. Washington and the Thirteenth Amendment, which were later approved by congress and placed on sale in post offices throughout the country. He is also the founder of National Freedom Day commemorating the passage of the Thirteenth Amendment.

"These wonderful buildings . . . and modern facilities . . . everything here should be a source of encouragement to those on the outside," continued the aged soldier-financier who rose to the rank of major in the paymaster's section of the United States Army in the Spanish-American War.

Among those accompanying Major Wright were Emmett C. Burke and his sister, Miss Maria E Burke, both of Richmond, Va. Mr. Burke is president of Consolidated Bank and Trust Company of Richmond whose assets are well over a million dollars. He and his sister, Miss Maria E. Burke, executive secretary of Ebenezer Church of that city, had this to say of their first visit to Tuskegee Army Flying School: "It is the most wonderful thing we have ever seen."

Said J. T. Carter, prominent lawyer and banker of Richmond, "I had no dream that there was anything like this in the world."

SOUTHERN AID HEAD

Aside from being a practicing lawyer, Mr. Carter is president of Southern Aid Society of Virginia, Inc.; and the vice-president of Consolidated Bank and Trust Company of the same city.

J. St. J. Gilpin, retired postal employee and member of the board of directors for Consolidated Bank and Trust Company, is an ex-soldier, having been a member of the Volunteer State Militia of 1898, and commissioned second lieutenant in the Sixth Virginia Regiment. He, too, voiced surprise at the efficiency and proportions of this field. Mr. Gilpin is also the director of Richmond Beneficial Life Insurance Company.

PHILADELPHIA PHYSICIAN

Dr. Rudolph Winston is a practicing physician of Philadelphia, a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania and School of Medicine. He has recently been accepted by the University of Pennsylvania to do a year of experimental research in gastroenterology, a study of digestive diseases. Dr. Winston will be the first Negro to make such a study at this institution.

Of the Tuskegee Army Flying School, Dr. Winston had this to say: "This is a most startling eye-opener . . . I am sure if more persons could see the setup here, they would have a different story to tell."

Dr. Winston is a member of the Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity.

To Triple Output Of Negro Pilots

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(ANP—Well authenticated rumors here, although not confirmed officially indicate that the number of Negro airmen at Tuskegee flying field is to be tripled. The 99th squadron is to be [illegible] out. Three other squadrons are to formed there and these will have the requisite number of ground men to service the pilots.

The large number of civilians instructors now in training at Chanute Field, Ill., are to be moved to Tuskegee, where an entire school for training mechanics and expert personnel is to be set up. It is probably that 4,000 men including the pilots will be stationed at the Tuskegee field when the three squadrons are developed.

The CAA program at Tuskegee is to be greatly enlarged in order to give preliminary training leading up to army flying.

The 99th will be given further training in combat service probably at another field. With the additional squadrons to be trained a complete fighting or pursuit group will be formed with the 99th as the nucleus.

600 Negro Soldiers Enjoy Tuskegee USO

TUSKEGEE, ALA., July 25. — Six hundred Negro soldiers, members of the enlisted personnel of the First Air Base Security Training Group stationed at Camp Rucker, Ala., heard an engrossing account of the fall of France on Thursday, when Maj. Sedley Peck, a War Department lecturer, spoke on that subject during a one-day visit at the new Alabama post.

The lecture was attended by Col. Lawrence A. Wyant, commanding officer of the group. The speaker was introduced by Maj. Andrew J. Boyle, the Group's Plans and Training Officer.

Major Peck was a member of the American Ambulance Corps immediately prior to the fall of France. He was captured by the on-rushing German army but soon escaped into French territory where he observed the destruction of armies and cities by the bombs and the panzer power as well as by the fifth column activities of the enemy.

His observations, woven into a 40-minute talk, held the rapt attention of his listeners. He punctuated his lecture with arresting comments such as "this isn't a lolly-pop war" and "what do they mean it can't happen here — it has."

At the conclusion of his address Major Peck answered questions put to him by the men which revealed they had given close attention and had found his subject one of considerable interest.

ARMY HAS IGNORED THOUSANDS UNDER PRESENT PROGRAM

WASHINGTON, D.C., July 16—Although Major Al Williams, aviation editor for the Scripps-Howard newspaper, says that any boy who can learn to operate an automobile can fly an airplane, even for the Army, the United States Air Force has announced plans for training only about 150 Negro aviators a year as against 100,000 white aviators.

Negro aviation training is restricted to the Jim-Crow setup at Tuskegee, although there have been rumors of a plan to assign at least one Negro aviation squadron to every Army Air Force station in the country. This would be a step in the right direction.

5,000 BOYS ON WAITING LIST

Recently, the Air Force training station at Albany, Ga., was informed that Negro aviators would be sent there.

In the meantime, while these rumors float about, more than 5,000 colored boys who have applied for aviation traning are being made to wait or are being inducted into other branches of the service while the Air Force is yelling for men.

America needs men to fly the planes which our factories are producing.

Our boys have done their utmost to make the training station at Tuskegee a success. They have a record of efficiency and lack of accidents which the Air Force can point to with pride. They have demonsrtated that skillful flying is not determined by the color of one's skin.

COL. DAVIS HAS ONLY BIG TITLE

The boys at Tuskegee have established their record in spite of the fact that they have been forced to work under humiliating conditions.

The Tuskegee Flying School (and Tuskegee Institute is not responsible for this) reeks with all the evil stigma of segregation. Negro officers and white officers are separated. In the Post Exchange there is one side for white and one side for colored. All the real jobs, those with any authority, have been given to white officers.

Lieut. Col. Benjamin O. Davis has a big title at the Tuskegee Flying school, but he does not have a job and authority in keeping with his rank and title.

There are white lieutenants and captains at the Tuskegee school who can tell Col. Davis where to get off if they want to.

The entire setup is worked out so that whites give all the orders and blacks take all the orders, regardless of competence or experience.

The record will show that most of the accidents at Tuskegee Flying school have been caused by white officers.

Col. Davis was nearly killed while in training in an accident for which a white officer was responsible.

In spite of this, the Negroes at the Tuskegee Flying school are still treated as wards.

That is the result of a system in which a nation recruits 100,000 of its aviators from nine-tenths of its population and 150 men from the other one-tenth.

Negroes have a right to demand that this bottleneck in aviation training be broken. It is more than a right—it is a duty. This is an air war and the air front is the first front. Negro Americans seek the right to play their part on the FIRST FRONT.

Female Terrier Has Won All The Fellows In Khaki

TUSKEGEE, Ala. — Yes, ex-Staff Sergeant Sargie is patiently awaiting the 15th of the month, and very eagerly too. You see the 15th is the day that squadron commanders forward their promotion list to headquarters to be reviewed by the board of ratings. You see Sargie received her past ratings in record time, having made the grade of Staff Sergeant in a little over three months, only to lose it a few days later. Yes Sargie lost her rating for disorderly conduct towards civilians.

HER HISTORY FOGGY

Perhaps if we go back a little into Sargie's history we may be able to understand her a little better.

We are not quite sure which squadron she belongs to, though she seems to be seen quite often in the company of the boys of the 367th Materiel Squadron. We aren't sure either just how she came to us. Some say that she was brought here, others say she was here when we came, we do know she is here though.

As we first remember her, she was a tiny little thing of skin and bones, and very shy too, who shirked around the mess hall at night picking up a bite here and there. The soldiers though being kind soon won her confidence, and after a few days of coaxing she became quite attached to them.

AWARDED TITLE

It wasn't long after that, that she was inducted, as a full fledged enlisted man, oh pardon us, we mean lady . . . and awarded the title of post mascot, and received the title of Pfc.

It was just about three months later she received her promotion as staff sergeant.

Unfortunately good luck did not go all the way with Sargie, as a few days later she was disrated, annoying civilians.

It seems as if no one had ever treated Sargie with kindness until the boys in khaki came, and loving them as she did she resented anyone who wasn't in khaki, so she would never allow them to pass her on the post willingly and a few days after making staff—she was caught abusing a civilian, and wishing to keep relations between the civilians and military personnel her squadron commander disrated her to make an example out of her.

HAD SYMPATHY

All of the boys sympathized with her though and are pulling for her to get her rating back again this month. And as Sargie waits patiently for the spratmore on the 15th, she has confidence that the boys in khaki will not let her down, and that they guarantee for her a happy contented life in the future.

So Sargie would like for you to do something for the boys in khaki that she is unable to do, to show her gratitude, BUY WAR BONDS AND STAMPS. No, you see Sargie is unable to do so, for she is a little female terrier.

Tuskegee Air Base Wins Safety Praise

JUN 1 1942

TUSKEGEE, Ala., June 11—The Tuskegee Army Flying school has one of the best safety records in the Southeast Army Air Forces Training Center. This outstanding performance record, to a large degree, is due to the good work of Second Lieutenant Nelson S. Brooks, post communication officer, and the men of the Communications Detachment.

It is the job of the Radio Station to direct the pilots off the ground, and to keep them informed of all new developments, while they are in flight. This is the section that controls the famous "radio beam" that gives the pilots their position and guides them to happy landings.

WON RADIO PRIZE

The person in charge of this highly technical work is a bright-eyed young lieutenant, who was an instructor of commercial printing and photo-engraving at Tuskegee Institute prior to his entrance into the service. Lieutenant Brooks is a native of Springfield, Ill., and has been an amateur radio operator since 1933. In 1940 he won the coveted Radio Sweepstakes for the state of Alabama.

In June, he went to the Air Force Technical School at Chanute Field, Ill., as an aviation cadet. Upon the completion of the course, he was commissioned a 2nd Lieutenant, Air Corps, and ordered to the flying school at Tuskegee.

Judge Hastie Finds Tuskegee Flying School Up To Standard

TUSKEGEE, Ala.—(SNS)—Judge William H. Hastie, Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War, Washington, visited Tuskegee Institute and the Tuskegee Army Flying School last week.

Judge Hastie came by plane from New Orleans to Montgomery where he was met by Lieutenant Colonel Benj. O. Davis Jr. and escorted to Dorothy Hall on the campus of Tuskegee Institute, headquarters during his three day visit.

Wednesday afternoon and Friday morning Judge Hastie spent in conference with Colonel F. V. H. Kimble, Commanding Officer of the Tuskegee Army Flying School, training base for Negro officers in the U. S. Air Corps.

Practically all of Thursday was spent at the Post visiting the units of this rapidly expanding Air Base. The judge talked with the men "on the line" and watched with interest the cadets skim along the beautiful runways before taking off in the sleek army trainers. He visited the signal tower, the Medical Unit, the Post Theatre, the big warehouse, the Mess Hall, Barracks, as well as the many new buildings rapidly taking shape from the hands of hundreds of skilled Negro craftsmen.

On Thursday night, a score of Tuskegee officials met with Judge Hastie for a Round Table discussion on the Negro in the present crisis.

Judge Hastie said, "The physical plant of Tuskegee Army Flying School is up to the high standard found in the Air Corps Training Centers all over the country. The pilot training gives every indication that the young men will develop into combat efficiency.

When asked if his visit were an inspection the Judge replied, "This visit is official but it is not an official inspection—just an official visit."

The Judge stated that he and Colonel Kimble had discussed many problems pertaining to the operation and development of the Post.

MAR 1 3 1942

TUSKEGEE, Ala.— (ANP) — An event long desired by Negroes throughout the country became a reality on Saturday, March 7, when commissions as Second lieutenants in the U. S. Army Air corps were awarded to a group of Negro pilots at the post theater of the air corps advanced flying school. Among those to receive commissions were Capt. B. O. Davis Jr.; Cadets MacRoss and George Spencer Roberts, both of West Virginia; Cadet Lemuel R. Curtis, Hartford, Conn.; Cadet Charles Henry DeBow, Indianapolis and Hampton institute.

Capt. Davis is the son of Brig. Gen. B. O. Davis. He is a graduate of West Point Military academy. His first assignment was to Fort Benning, Ga. After about one year he was transferred to Tuskegee institute as professor of military science and tactics. The spring of 1941 he was sent to Fort Riley, Kas., as aide to Gen. Davis. Early in the summer, Capt. Davis returned to Tuskegee to begin pilot training in the air corps detachment primary flying school. Cadet Roberts received advanced flying training in the civilian pilot training course at Tuskegee before entering air corps primary training.

Col. Frederick V. H. Kimble, commanding officer of the ACAFS, could not be reached for confirmation of the rumor that the newly commissioned officers would be assigned to duty at the Tuskegee field.

The inaugural ceremony initiating the training of Negroes as military aviators for the United States Army Air corps was held July 19, at the Booker T. Washington monument, Tuskegee. The principal address on that occasion was made by Maj. Gen. Walter R. Weaver, commanding officer, southeast air corps training center. Here follows an excerpt of the challenge Gen. Weaver gave to the cadets that day.

"The success of this venture depends upon you. You have the responsibility of laying the foundation. Therefore, I can not impress upon you too much how important it is for you to make a wonderful record. I believe you will. I understand you have been hand picked. You have an excellent educational background. You have splendid officers. You will have fine mechanics. Tsese are the tools necessary to do your work. You have the best. In addition, you have an even greater responsibility. The responsibility of training for the defense of the United States. I can not impress too emphatically how important is this phase of military aviation — this phase of militar yaviation — this that you have elected to do. This task is work. It is a difficult task. It will call for everything you have got in you. It is no bed of roses. It will mean morning work and night study. It will mean keeping yourselves fit at all times. If you succeed you will have the satisfaction and the pride that comes to the men who on the completion of their course pass down the line and receive their wings.

"Your officers will be ever ready to help you, but it depends upon you as individuals whether this success shall be yours.

"Let no task be too small to receive your utmost careful attention. If you do that, you should be successful, and I believe you will.

"What Booker T. Washington stood for—the principle of work attention to duty, loyalty to cause—these especially, with these in front of you, you cadets can but be inspired."

NEGROES ARE READY

More than 3,000 Negroes gathered at the Municipal Auditorium Sunday afternoon in an impressive demonstration of their patriotism. Birmingham Negroes stressed the willingness of Negroes to serve, emphasized the patriotism of the Southern Negro, pointed out achievements of Negroes in the fighting forces of the nation.

There were some true, complimentary, things said about Negroes by James A. Downey, Jr., of the Park and Recreation Board and Dr. John E. Bryan, superintendent of Jefferson County schools. Dr. Bryan pointed with pride to the Tuskegee Negro flying class which was graduated last week.

Yet we must look at this situation realistically. We know—we all know—that Negroes are ready to serve. But we must do more to help them fit themselves for more varied service. The flying school at Tuskegee is woefully small. The stock of Negro manpower in Birmingham devoted to little more than menial tasks is large. Let us do more to asist our Negroes in participating in the war effort. They are ready to do all they can.

STIMSON LAUDS STATE AIR BASES

War Secretary Praises Maxwell Field Men After Visit

Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson had high praise for the army air force training centers in Alabama Friday morning at his first press conference after his tour of inspection last week of air fields in the South, Carroll Kilpatrick, Washington correspondent for The Birmingham Age-Herald and News, said in a dispatch from the capital.

He was particularly gratified, Stimson said, over what he saw at Tuskegee Institute where the First Negro Combat Squadron is in training. At Maxwell Field, he said, he saw the "enormous" school for pilots who have just graduated and are in training to teach other pilots. He described Maxwell Field as one example of the "far-sightedness of the work going on in the army air forces."

Stimson said he "gained a very good impression of the immense and really wonderful work being systematically and intelligently done to train American airmen" in the trip which took him in five days to Alabama, Florida, Louisiana, Texas and back by way of Nashville for a stop at a field of the ferry command. At Nashville, Stimson said he saw "a very impressive sight, with a great collection of all types of bombers on the way to various fields."

"The San Antonio base is the greatest center of them all, with Brooks, Kelly and Randolph Fields all in the vicinity," he said.

At Tuskegee, Stimson said, he "met and talked with the men and the mechanics" and was "very much encouraged by the leadership." Col. B. O. Davis, Jr., Negro leader of the 99th Squadron, is a man of "judgment, tact and skill," Stimson declared.

To Col. F. von Kimble, the trainer of the squadron, who is a white man, Stimson paid his highest compliment. "He seemed to me the most poised, tactful and enthusiastic man I have met in a long time," he said.

At Maxwell Field, Stimson was asked to say something to the young pilots there, many of whom he said, "are peeved that they can't go into the war themselves but must stay here to train others." He said that was always a great difficulty in wartime, but said he assured the men they were performing a highly worthy duty.

20 Youths Accepted for Air Corps

PHILADELPHIA

The first group of colored volunteers accepted here by the army since America formally entered the war was sworn in on Tuesday morning at the Custom House by Lieutenant Colonel Frederick Schoenfeld, head of this district's recruiting office.

With relatives and friends waving them farewell, fourteen of the new additions to Uncle Sam's fighting forces left from the B. and O. Railroad Station at 2:30 p.m. that day, bound for Bowman Field, Ky., and Langley Field, Va. Six more were scheduled to leave on Wednesday.

Until last week, colored men were being rejected at the local recruiting office although white men were welcomed with open arms.

Congressman Scares Practice

Amazed when he learned of the condition, Congressman Leon Sacks conferred with War Department officials in Washington, wrote a letter to Secretary of War Stimson, then followed it up by attacking the "unjustified discriminatory policy" on the floor of the House of Representatives last Wednesday.

Mr. Sack's speech on the floor was seconded by Congressman Hamilton Fish of New York, who revealed that he had written to the War Department after learning of the ban on colored enlistees.

Rejection of colored volunteers here was attributed by the recruiting office to the fact that the quota for colored enlistments had been filled last summer. It was explained that enlistments are accepted only as there are vacancies.

New Recruits Listed

Oliver Hutchings, Jr., 2110 Annin Street; Maurice Davis, 4853 Chestnut Street; Charles E. Jones, 1239 N. Frazier Street; Lucius C. Pickett, 21 S. Ruby Street; Raymond Frasier, 1034 S. Chadwick Street; William Douglass, 1935 Fernon Street, and Carl A. Roach, 2015 N. Thirteenth Street.

Sacks Promises Action

Recruiting Officer Schoenfeld has stated that a larger number of openings for colored recruits are expected shortly, a statement to which Congressman Sacks reportedly countered: "There had better be, or I promise I'll find out the reason why."

Meanwhile, the recruiting office is urging all men who want to volunteer to do so through their local draft board.

New Clinics Being Built At Hospital

The first floor of the Negro section of Columbia hospital is being developed into spacious and sanitary clinics for whites and Negroes, along with emergency rooms that will make possible use of the floor in any emergency that might arise.

Superintendent Kershaw deLoach of the hospital, in explaining the program now going on, said the first floor of the Negro section had been used as a dormitory for Negro nurses until their new home was completed.

The floor, when the new program is completed, will become much more serviceable and will remedy an unsatisfactory situation that has existed.

The superintendent described the present clinic, which offers little segregation of white and Negroes, as being congested, not as sanitary as it should be, and inadequate for intelligent and efficient service. It is located on the first floor of the main hospital plant, to the east of the ambulance entrance.

Separate clinics for white and Negro patients are being completed in the new location, with spacious waiting rooms and enlarged facilities for treating cases. Another room on this floor will be used for special preparation of baby foods and a large room will be used as a dining room for Negro nurses.

In addition, there will be an emergency room for whites, another for Negroes, and a third one to care for an overflow.

Mr. deLoach said the design and facilities of the floor would make it possible for it to be quickly turned into an auxiliary hospital if the institution should be called on to care for an excess number of patients in time of disaster or emergency.

The present clinic will be remodeled and used for another function. Ambulance cases will be taken first to the new development west of the entrance.

No Training For British At Tuskegee

JAN 24 1942

TUSKEGEE, (ANP)—Assurances have been received from Gen. Weaver, acting chief of the army air force, that no plans for training British flying students at the new Tuskegee airfield are in contemplation.

The English trainees will be moved from Maxwell field near Montgomery, to Tuscaloosa where the University of Alabama is located.

Rumors which appeared to have more than ordinary foundation had given rise to the fear that the new three million dollar airfield nearing completion here would be lost to Negro cadets. President Patterson of Tuskegee, who led the fight for the establishment of a jim-crow unit in the air corps, made prompt and spirited protests to Washington in which he was aided by numerous organizations throughout the country.

Says Army Should Train More Cadets

War Department Told Quota System Restricts Colored Trainees.

NEW YORK. — Because the enlistment of colored men in the Air Corps is long delayed on account of the greatly restricted quota system for the training of colored flyers and because facilities for the training of whites has been greatly expanded, the NAACP has again requested that the War Department accept and train colored cadets on the basis of fitness without regard to racial quotas.

The association also asks that they be admitted to all training bases, and that the induction of colored youths who have already been accepted for the Air Corps be postponed by their draft boards, pending the enlargement of a training program for them.

Need More Than Handful

In a letter to Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson last week, Roy Wilkins, NAACP assistant secretary, said: "We believe that if our country is to have 2,000,000 men in the air force, with at least a quarter million of these as pilots, more than the mere handful of colored men now in training should be admitted to that branch of the service."

The War Department's new plans call for the establishment of the 100th Pursuit Squadron to be set up at Tuskegee Institute, Ala., to train colored cadets, using graduates of the training course for the 99th Pursuit Squadron as instructors.

Many Disappointed

The NAACP told Stimson: "In recent weeks we have received numerous statements from bewildered and disappointed young colored men who say that they have been accepted for the Army Air Corps, and in many instances have received their physical examinations, but their actual enlistment in the Air Corps has been delayed so long, because of the greatly restricted quota system, that they are now being called by their local draft boards for general military service.

"In the meantime, they see white applicants for the Air Force, being accepted freely and, in most cases, promptly. They have noted the turn of events in the Southwest Pacific war theatre and they have read the announcement of the two-million-men air corps. In the face of all this they are told that they cannot be inducted into the Air Corps at this time."

TUSKEGEE NEGRO AIR SCHOOL WILL GRADUATE 400 FLYERS

Tuskegee Institute (Ala.) Air Base and School is worthy of note as it will soon graduate 400 negro fliers who will eventually compose the Army's 99th Pursuit Squadron. Since last July these students have undergone all the primary and advanced training to which Army cadets at Randolph and Kelly fields are subject. The 99th will be an all-negro pursuit squadron. White instructors of the 99th say that their negro flying students by virtue of their exceptional eyesight, courage and coordination, will make crack combat pilots. Their performance and promise will be watched with interest, especially by additional thousands of prospective aspiring negro flyers who hope to get into aviation.

TUSKEGEE, Ala. — "Flight Command" is the most recent musical contribution to come from the pen of Sergeant James O. B. Moseley of Grenada, Miss.

The stirring score was written by Sgt. Moseley since coming to Tuskegee Army Flying School base.

He was for eight years head of the music department at Southern University, Baton Rouge, La., and is now lending his musical talents to the Air Force Band as assistant bandleader.

OTHER COMPOSITIONS

A piano virtuoso and composer, Sergeant Moseley has to his credit many original compositions and arrangements which include: "Dear Old Morehouse" (nationally famous hymn of Morehouse College); a "Cycle of Art Songs" from poems by Paul Lawrence Dunbar; a "Passacaglia for Organ"; a "Rondo for Violin and Piano"; and three complete movements of a symphony scored for full orchestra: Allegro con moto, Adagio, Scherzo.

Sergeant Mosely, an Omega Psi Phi frater, is a graduate of Morehouse College, the Chicago Musical College, and the University of Michigan. His parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Mosely, reside in Grenada, Mississippi.

MAR 14 1942 Pittsburgh Courier Pittsburgh, Pa.

Shown in the picture are Col. Frederick V. H. Kimble, commanding officer of the Air Corps Advance Flying school, pinning "wings" on the breast of Captain Benjamin O. Davis Jr., son of Brigadier-General Benjamin O. Davis of the U.S. Army, among the group of the first members of the race to be awarded the insignia of the U.S. Army Air Corps, while Major Noel F. Parrish, extreme left, holds the "wings." Reading from left to right in addition to Captain Davis are: Lt. Lemuel Rodney Curtis, Hartford, Conn.; Lt. Charles DeBow, Indianapolis, Ind.; Lt. George Spencer Roberts, Fairmont, W. Va., and Lt. Mac Ross, Dayton, Ohio. The graduating exercises were held at the Post theatre and were attended by military personnel of the army, officers of Tuskegee institute and the Veterans' Administration, and relatives and friends of the members of the graduating class.—P. APR 5 - 1942

THE United States is a broad-minded country. At least, that is the idea one could get after seeing pictures of Japanese flyers who have graduated from the United States Army Air Corps.

The fact that they were trained along with the white flyers is a point that would sustain the major premise. The reasoning would go something like this: Here we are fighting the Japs and they are fighting us like wild fire and we are so broad-minded that we can tolerate citizen Japs in our own flying forces and permit them to train like any other citizens.

If a man from Mars only heard that side of the story he would likely reach the conclusion that we are pretty broad-minded in matter of policy concerning the armed forces of the nation. APR 5 - 1942

But just let him get a whiff of the attitude of the Army Air Corps towards Negroes in America and we wager that he would change his mind. The case of the Negro would go something like this:

There was a time, not many months ago, when Negroes were not wanted in the Air corps no matter how good they were.

There was a time, not many months ago, when Negroes could not get into the Air corps no matter how well they could or wanted to fly planes. The Negroes of America rose up in arms, protested, mass-met, campaigned and squawked about citizenship rights until the Army Air Corps set up, for their special use and enjoyment, an all-black Negro squadron where a few colored flyers could train at a time. Despite the fact that the country needed flyers by the thousands, persons in the high command took the position that Negroes were not wanted in that branch of the service even if the country would suffer for lack of them.

Whether the black unit was organized for the purpose of training Negroes because they would be tolerated or whether it was just another step in the appeasement policies of our war efforts may never be known. Suffice it to say, we have our own opinion.

We do not know whether members of the high command took the position that a bomb dropped from a bomber by a colored man would not be affected by the law of gravity or whether the color of his skin would affect the efficiency of the bomb or not as to the reason they have been so hesitant to permit colored flyers to enlist.

Since push has come to shove and things are getting pretty tight—looking on the broad international horizon — the high command might permit colored flyers to train in the same manner as whites and at the same places. We see, absolutely, no reason why a Negro flyer can not train down at the Texas flying field. No one else does, either, who is serious about this thing called war.

We can not overlook the fact that the government would rather train a Japanese flyer of questioned loyalty in its large flying fields than to train a Negro flyer whose ancestry dates back to the 1600's.

It seems that America has got to overhaul its views regarding this whole question of racial superiority. Until it does, it will suffer the effects of a dis-united nation.

OCT 24 1942

BALTIMORE.

How discrimination in the armed forces keeps eligible men from joining the services for which they are qualified was told to the AFRO this week by Aaron Brown, 2212 Division, who has been trying unsuccessfully for the past five months to enter the Civil Aeronautics Authority's training course for reserve pilots.

Recently, Secretary of War Stimson announced that the CAA had received authority from the army to include colored flyers in its program for non-combat pilots and added that the bulk of colored trainees would be used as instructors.

Training, he said, would be given at Tuskegee Institute and the Coffey School of Aeronautics in Chicago.

Baltimore Hasn't Heard

Despite the War Department's announcement, officials at the Cadet Aviation Board, the Third Service Command and the Army Recruiting Office have been telling Brown for the past five months that they know nothing of the program and that colored are not being accepted for such training.

Under date of July 14, Brown received a telegram from James E. Rishell, ground school supervisor in charge of Civilian Pilot Training, ordering him to report to the Baltimore School of Aeronautics at Curtis Wright Airport.

He did so, but was told that he must first enlist in the army reserve air corps but application at the recruiting office and other army offices here failed to help him. All said there were no facilities for colored people.

Colored of Skin Wrong

On Thursday, a call to the Aviation Cadet Broad by an AFRO reporter who talked with a Sergeant Seales again brought the information that there are no vacancies for colored. OCT 24 1942

He admitted, however, that if Brown, who is 33 with 334 solo hours, 91 hours of cross-country flying and 23 hours of night flying, were white, he would begin training immediately.

He said that procedure is for the applicant to pass a physical or mental examination, then be enlisted after which he attends classes for six or eight weeks and then is either called for active duty or put on the reserve enlisted roll.

Miss McGeorge Uninformed

He then referred the reporter to Miss McGeorge at the University of Baltimore who admitted that she had had contact with Brown.

She said, however, that she knew nothing of the training for colored applicants but she "thought" there was a school in New York (the Coffey School in Chicago is located at Harlem Airport) and suggested contacting another applicant who might give further information about it.

Meantime, Brown received a letter dated October 13 from Brigadier General H. B. Lewis of the adjutant general's office in Washington telling him that he could enter the service by contacting the officer in charge of the Officer Procurement Division in the Baltimore Trust Building. OCT 24 1942

Still Gets "Runaround"

This officer, Colonel Lanahan, told the AFRO he knew nothing about it. So did Sergeant Kennedy. Brown was than referred to the A. G. Service where Lieuteant Bolton also said he knew nothing about the program.

Brown, himself, told the AFRO he couldn't understand how the army could afford to let pilots like himself who had some training and only needed additional training to become top-flight men to wait five months or even five days when a war was on.

He said that he has a brother in the army and all of his folk, like other American families, are helping the war effort.

Wants to Serve

He felt that by taking advantage of the training program offered by the army and the CAA he would be doing his part but the "runaround" he's been geeting in the past five months hasn't helped him one bit.

Vision Of Tuskegee Army Personnel Rated Perfect

TUSKEGEE, Ala.—(ANP)—Maj. Richard C. Cumming, chief surgeon at the station hospital, Tuskegee Army Flying School, reveals that the eyes of the officers and enlisted personnel at this base are in tip-top shape.

"A careful check is made of eyes of men entering the service," revealed Maj. Cumming, himself a flight surgeon, in a recent release to the public relations office at the Tuskegee Army Flying School. "It is particularly important that the eyes of the air forces, both pilots and ground crew, be keen and always in good condition." NOV 7 1942

"It has been noted that the general condition of eyes at Tuskegee Army Flying School is excellent. The student pilots and pilots are carefully checked and rigorous eye examinations are used to be sure their eyes are in prefect condition for flying. It has been reported that precision flying and marksmanship at this school are very fine. At the gunnery school," continued the major in his release, "reports state that they are giving excellent account of themselves on the target range and aerial gunnery. It is felt sure that these men will give excellent account of themselves in combat."

AIRPLANE MECHANICS

Concerning the airplane mechanics and technicians on the flight line, Maj. Cumming had this to say: "The men on the line who keep the planes ready and fit to fly must be alert. Their eyes are protected with glasses in the repair work and checking that they do. NOV 7 1942

"Statistics indicate at the Tuskegee Army Flying School that the eyes of the men are in good condition and will be carefully attended as they carry on their most important work. Approximately six per cent of the men of the command report for sick call daily; of this group reporting, about eight per cent have some complaint in which the eyes are involved. On the entire post, approximately eight per cent of the personnel wear glasses for minor or other eye conditions. Protection and conversation of the eyes is a foremost consideration of the medical department."

JUN 14 1942

Ship Nose-dived Into Small River

TUSKEGEE, June 11—(ANP)—In the first fatal accident at the Tuskegee army flying school, Cadet Robert A. Dawson, 24, San Antonio, Texas, was instantly killed Monday as his passenger, Cadet Walter I. Lawson, escaped with only minor scratches.

Dawson's parents are Mr. and Mrs. August Dawson of San Antonio. The parents of Lawson are the Rev. and Mrs. Robert N. Lawson of Newtown, Va.

Cause Investigated

The two cadets were flying one of the advanced training ships and were due to graduate at the end of this month. The accident occurred when their ship nose-dived into a small river near the town of Talladega, Ala., about 14 miles from the army field here. Two strands on a high power line were broken when the airplane struck the line just before crashing into the river.

The exact causes of the accident are being investigated by a special board of inquiry named by the commanding officer.

There have been two crackups previously at the Tuskegee army flying field, both involving white pilots. One was delivering a plane to the school and the other had lost his way. Neither accident, however, was fatal.

Judge Hastie Inspects Air Training Base

TUSKEGEE, Ala., June 15.—Judge William H. Hastie, Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War, Washington, visited Tuskegee Institute and the Tuskegee Army Flying School last week.

Judge Hastie came by plane from New Orleans to Montgomery where he was met by Lieutenant Colonel Benj. O. Davis Jr. and escorted to Dorothy Hall on the campus of Tuskegee Institute, headquarters during his three day visit.

Wednesday afternoon and Friday morning Judge Hastie spent in conference with Colonel F. V. H Kimble, Commanding Officer of the Tuskegee Army Flying School, training base for Negro officers in the U. S. Air Corps.

Practically all of Thursday was spent at the Post visiting the units of this rapidly expanding Air Base. The Judge talked with the men "on the line" and watched with interest the cadets skim along the beautiful runways before taking off in the sleek army trainers. He visited the signal tower, the Medical Unit, the Post Theatre, the big warehouses, the Mess Hall, Barracks, as well as the many new buildings rapidly taking shape from the hands of hundreds of skilled Negro craftsmen.

Negro Aviators

Mrs. Clare Boothe Luce just made an urgent appeal for more planes and pilots to halt Japan's unremitting conquest of China. This call for immediate aid to our ally now fighting for her very life should not go unanswered.

Here is one answer. Since our fixed policy of segregation-as-usual disastrously limits the training of qualified colored United States Army Air Force pilots to only 33 graduate airmen a year at the Ninety-ninth Pursuit Squadron Air Base near Tuskegee Institute, Ala., let those of us who really want to see China build her air strength, first, press for immediate combat training for those of the 957 Negro aviators who had validated licenses during 1941 and who want to fight for the Four Freedoms in the air over China; second, open the way for the army of some 300 unlicensed, competent colored aviators to train for and join Flying Fortress crews in China as pilots, copilots, navigators, bombardiers, gunners, and gunner-photographers; third, blast a way through for the shamefully misplaced and grounded Negro flight instructors to teach desperately anxious Chinese youths basic air navigation—rather than have these instructors continue to deteriorate into locked-wheel uselessness in their native America.

TUSKEGEE AIRMEN SHAPING RAPIDLY FOR COMBAT DUTY

TUSKEGEE, Ala., July 2.—At a dusty, booming airdrome in the Southeast Air Forces Training Center, the 99th Pursuit Squadron, world's first Negro aerial fighting unit, is girding for its opening sky-joust with the enemy.

Home and training ground of the squadron is the new Army Flying school at Tuskegee, Ala. In the patchwork pattern of fields over which new Negro flyers zoom, members of their race look up to wish them well.

A LONG, HARD GRIND

For these pilots are getting a chance they have sought for a long time, a chance to fly with the U.S. Army Air Forces and to receive Air Forces commissions. Many Negro youths who aspire to be fighter pilots now may become aviation cadets. If they survive the hard grind prescribed for all cadets, white and black, they will be commissioned second lieutenants in the Air Forces Reserves. Here is their long-wanted opportunity to fly. And they are taking it. They are flying!

This chance is not to be looked on as all glamor and glory. A chance to fly as a fighter pilot is also a chance to die as a fighter pilot. The phrase rhymes. So does death and combat flying in many instances.

The Negro youths at the Army school know this. The fact does not deter them. The motto of the Southeast Training center is "Prepare for Combat." Every fledgling must be taught not only how to fly but how to kill. Slaughter is his business, and in war slaughter is a give-and-take proposition.

MUST OVERCOME MANY OBSTACLES

All this the young cadets know. They realize the grimness of their job and the seriousness of their purpose. They are at Tuskegee not to picnic or better themselves, but to learn to carry fire and destruction to the enemy. As cadets, many already are proving themselves, and are obtaining commissions. As organized sky fighters they will have a chance to prove their mettle when the "99th" flies out to combat.

The cadet, Negro or white, must have a great desire to fly and a greater desire to serve his country if he hopes to succeed. Look at the hurdles to be cleared.

To qualify as cadet, a man must be between the ages of 18 and 27, and physically perfect. He must pass an entrance quiz of 150 questions.

Accepted for the course, he must enter a replacement center designed to transform him from civilian to soldier. Here he is put through the most concentrated period of military drills, the toughest physical workout, and the quickest mental brushup of his life.

MUST FLY 3 TYPES OF PLANES

In top physical shape he tackles the job of learning to fly three different types of training planes. These he must cope with one at a time while learning such practical courses as navigation, radio, code and mechanics.

The ships in the order in which they must be mastered are: the primary trainer, in which each man learns to solo and do acrobatics in elementary school; the faster, heavier Basic Trainer in which he learns night and cross-country flying by instruments; the Advanced Trainer with even greater weight, speed and horsepower, in which he completes his training period.

Then he is commissioned, only to find that he now must try the lightning P-20, whose hawklike dash and speed make all training ships hitherto mastered look like slow barnyard hens. This is the type ship he will fly to combat! His first ride in it, and all future rides, must be solo. In its single cockpit there is no room for an instructor! He has asked for speed, firepower, performance and the chance to take the initiative. Here it is in one compact thunderbolt. Let him take it. But be sure he can handle it. One mistake in this thunderbolt may be his last.

NEGRO INSTRUCTORS

These are the difficulties would-be combat pilots face. Now let's look at those things which aid the young flyer at Tuskegee.

The field on which he tests his wings is one of the most expansive in the country. His instructors in elementary school where he either "washes out" or gets his first boost, are experienced Negro pilots.

When he reaches Army School for basic and all subsequent phases of training, he is taught by white officer-instructors who are anxious to get him through if it is humanly possible—anxious because each instructor is proud of the students he is able to pass in the course. Every white instructor at Tuskegee competed for his place there.

OFFICERS ARE HAND-PICKED

The post, commanded by Colonel Frederick V. H. Kimble, is under the supervision of a handpicked group of efficient and capable officers. Because white officers have had much longer experience in the air forces, they act in a supervisory capacity in many departments, but 60 per cent of the officers at the post are Negroes.

Negro personnel handles both airport and airplane maintenance. Negro pilots and cadets fly the airplanes. Negro control tower operators keep air traffic straight. Negro ground-crewmen service the planes. Negro mechanics keep them in shape. Negro doctors hold responsible places in the post's fine new hospital. Negro instructors teach and direct academic courses. And Negro specialists and typists of high civil service ratings work in various departments.

THIRD FINISH

Everyone connected with the Tuskegee Army school is proud of its rapid development. A little more than a year ago the site of the new air field was a high hill on one side; on the other a bog hole full of beavers. Today it is shaping up into one of the best air fields in the country.

Approximately 15 cadets entered as the first class last November. About one-third of this class came through to obtain Air Forces commissions. Larger classes are now going through on regular schedule and are being graduated at regular intervals.

Most newly commissioned graduates are taking their places in the cockpits of fighter planes as members of the 99th Pursuit Squadron, or its new sister Squadron, the 100th.

If the same rate of progress can be maintained—and nothing indicates a slackening in this rate—fighter squadrons, manned by Negro pilots should be flying out to engage enemy aircraft in the near future.

LARGEST CADET CLASS GETS AIR CORPS WINGS

Job Just Begun, Says Col. Davis

TUSKEGEE, Ala.—(SNS)—"I would say that, at this time, this school has graduated pilots who can fly no better and no worse than the graduates of other Air Forces schools," declared Lieutenant Colonel Benjamin O. Davis, Jr., executive for troops at the Tuskegee Army Flying School in an address to the fourth class of graduates here Friday.

Colonel Davis delivered the principal address to the class, the largest in the history of the Tuskegee Army Flying School to date. Colonel Frederick V. H. Kimble, the commanding officer delivered the diplomas to the class, while Lieutenant Colonel Noel F. Parrish, director of training, pinned the wings on the new second lieutenants.

Col. Davis went on to say:

MORE TO LEARN

"Most people who visit this post go away with the impression that we are over the hump, that the job is done. It is done in the same sense that you have a military pilot in an individual who can take an airplace off the ground and land it. So much has been demonstrated but this cannot be the complete answer. The only valid test of fighting unit is in its ability for itself in combat. So, understand then, that your work has begun. You are John Doe, second lieutenant, Army Air Forces, who knows something about military life and something about flying.

"You have a great deal to learn about administrative duties in your squadron. You have yet to learn to fly as a member of combat team in a fighting airplane. You must learn these things well in a short time. You have before you positions of great responsibility for which you must qualify yourself immediately. You and all the other early graduates of this school have the added burden of proving to all concerned that as military pilots you are as good as any in the world. It is true that your task is difficult and important, but it is my belief that you will accept the challenge and carry on in such manner that your record will be a credit to yourself and to your country."

HIGHEST OFFICER

Colonel Davis spoke to the graduates as one who had passed through the same stage. He was one of the members of the first class to graduate at this air base, back in March. At that time he was a captain. Today he is the highest ranking Negro officer in the Army Air Forces, being the only lieutenant colonel in that branch of the Army.

The invocation and benediction were delivered by First Lieutenant Douglass L. T. Robinson, chaplain for the air base. Captain Roy F. Morse, secretary of the Ground School, handed the diplomas to the commanding officer, who in turn, gave them to the graduates.

LIST GRADUATES

Those graduates receiving diplomas and commissions included: Willie Ashley, Jr., 212 West Bartlett St., Sumter, S. C.; George H. Bolling, 24 Cummings Ave., Phoebus Virginia; William A. Chanute Field Will Long Remember 99th Personnel

By STAFF SGT. A. J. SINDT

CHANUTE FIELD, Ill.—(A N P)—The 99th pursuit squadron, the army air forces' first all-colored outfit, has now been gone from Chanute feild; but they are far from being forgotten.

March 19, 1941, the 99th was activated at Chanute. And for the remainder of the year these men remained here attending school, preparing for the day when the 99th would depart from this station, a self-sustaining organization.

Quite frequently in current magazines and metropolitan newspapers we see accounts of their activities at Gunter field, near Tuskegee.

HAS IMPORTANT ROLE

All this has placed further emphasis on the importance of the role of the American Negro in the army air forces. Much has been written about this early 99th group, but if there has been any lavish praise showered upon this unit—it was meritoriously deserved by their accomplishments.

Looking back, one remembers that upon activation of the colored air force unit vacancies were filled at an amazing rate. The nation was then all under a state of limited national emergency.

From the north, the deep south, the western plains and the eastern extremes of this great nation they came—young Americans, eager to accept and take full advantage of this opportunity offered them.

HAS GLEE CLUB

Pvt. William Cobb organized a glee-club within the ranks of the 99th. This glee club was in great demand by civic organizations in nearby communities, and they climaxed their activities with a personal apearance over radio station WGN, Chicago.

The 99th maintained its own administrative setup under the guidance of a Chanute officer. A select group of men were sent through the clerical school on the field, and upon graduation were assigned to orderly-room duties.

Scarcely a day went by that the 99th was not out drilling. Under the hot rays of a scorching Illinois' mid-day sun, or the cool late afternoon breezes—the marching and drill went on "as usual." But there were no complaints; this was soldering, and the fellows liked it.

Instructors of the school remarked that 99th men were "good students, who gave their best and caught on fast." The officer commanding pointed out "these men are good soldiers. They have adapted themselves readily to army discipline and routine. They aren't fooling....This is the army and it is a serious business with them!"

MOVES TO TUSKEGEE

In the early part of 1942, the 99th packed its baggage and moved to an airfield near Tuskegee, their new home.

They have done well. Colored pilots who hold commissions in the army air forces as officers, fly the planes assigned the unit. Enlisted personnel accomplish the necessary maintenance.

Secretary Stimson On Inspection Of Army Field Here

OCT 15 1942

Tuskegee and the Army Flying School were hosts to several distinguished visitors last week.

Secretary of War Stimson came here to inspect the Army Flying School, where he was received by a formidable array of high ranking army officials including Col. Benj. O. Davis, Jr., heading the 99th Combat Squadron. Secretary Stimson addressed the Negro squadron during his visit.

Another visitor was Col. West Alexander Hamilton, U. S. Army, who visited the Tuskegee Army Flying School and Tuskegee Institute. Col. Hamilton was on his way to Prairie View, Tex., to take up his new duties as executive officer of the ROTC unit of that Institution.

Lt. Col. Campbell Johnson executive assistant to the director of Selective Service, visited Tuskegee Institute during the week. Col. Johnson met with members of the faculty to discuss certain features of the selective service act as it affects married men and college professors and administrators.

OCT 9 - 1942

Permanent Training School for Flyers Is Assured; To Train Civilian Pilots, Also

OCT 8 - 1942

TUSKEGEE, Oct 8 (ANP)—Aviation is at Tuskegee to stay. Plans to Make flying and airplane engineering permanent developments at the school were enhanced this week when President F. D. Patterson returned from New York and reported that the trustees of the institution had just voted an additional $100,000 to further improve and extend the school airfield on which $300,000 has already been expended. When finished it will be one of the most complete airfields at any educational institution in the country and of course it already is by far the finest Negro field.

This field is used for primary army training and the school also maintains a second field on rented ground where it does civilian pilot training. With the big army field costing better than $3,000,000 just five miles away, Tuskegee is truly an aviation center. It is at the big field that the advanced flyers, the ground crews and the cadets who have finished are stationed. The Tuskegee primary field gives the beginners their early lessons.

The army is greatly extending the training program at Tuskegee. Its quota has been raised from 30 students to 90 students. Fifty-two new aviation students will enter every five weeks. Washouts which affect about 50 per cent of those who enroll will operate to keep the average about 52.

Among the new improvements will be another and larger hanger which will cost $50,000 and which is to be built by trade students at the school; an auxiliary landing field about five miles distant, at $20,000. This will be used for landings and take offs so as to reduce the traffic on the training field. A parachute tower and a traffic control tower, combined in one, is to be built. There will be additional classroom facilities; three new link trainers, 30 or 40 new training ships and additional personnel will also be provided.

Sage Hall one of the finest dormitories on the grounds, has been taken over. It will be remodelled at a cost of $15,000 or $20,000. Officers quarters and a modern infirmary will occupy the first floor with student flyer's living quarters above.

President Patterson remarked that no matter when the war ended, aviation at Tuskegee is a permanent part of its curricula and program.

WHY THE SECRECY?

OCT 8 - 1942

Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson was a visitor here Monday afternoon and night. The newspapers knew about it, but not a word was permitted to leak out until after his departure. Such secrecy seems wholly unnecessary, even though press and public are willing to endure this or any other infringement on their "rights" in war time.

It might have stimulated the morale of Montgomery and environs and it might have helped the sale of war bonds to have known that our Secretary of War was in our midst, to have had, perchance, a few utterances, even if only along the line of amiable generalities.

After the Secretary of War was safely away, the "Public Office" of the Southeast Air Corps Training Center handed to newspapers an insipid "release" in which the most notable feature of Mr. Stimson's visit appeared to be a listing of names and entitlements of various Army personages who greeted him on arrival here and at Tuskegee.

OCT 8 - 1942

The society page of a newspaper is one of its most valued assets, but somehow something more and different is called for upon the occasion of a visit by a leader of a people fighting for existence. In passing, it should be said that there are some bright young newspapermen in the Army "public relations" service, and of course it is no fault of theirs if "regulations" tend make them do things that are hard to explain to the public.

We must not run the risk of carrying this secrecy business too far.

Army Air Corps Expansion Act Started Cadets

OCT 10 1942

34 Pilots Have Now Finished Army Training

WASHINGTON, D. C. — An amendment into the Army Air Corps Expansion Act of April 3, 1939, authoriznig the use of at least one colored school for the training of colored air pilots, is the origin of military flying among colored people.

The amendment was offered by Senator Harry H. Schwartz, Democrat, of Wyoming, who insisted on the floor of the Senate during debate on the measure that the federal civilian pilot training program should be made available to colored youth.

CONDUCTED AT SCHOOLS

OCT 10 1942

As a result of the adoption of this amendment, the civilian pilot training program was conducted at such schools as Deleware State College, Howard University, Hampton Institute, Virginia State College, Tuskegee Institute, North Carolina Agricultural and Technical College, Lincoln University of Missouri, and West Virginia State College.

Colored youths were given training as pilots, mechanics, and technical specialists.

The civilian pilot course was used as the basis of selection of cadets after the Army decided to organize the Ninty-ninth Pursuit Squadron, now based at Tuskegee, Ala., and later the 100th Pursuit Squadron, also at Tuskegee.

THIRTY-FOUR PILOTS

OCT 10 1942

Latest available figures, made public about a month ago by Lieut. Gen. Henry H. Arnold, show that thirty-four colored pilots had finished training for the Army Air Forces and seventy-three more were undergoing courses.

The necessary ground personnel is also being trained for this first all-colored air squadron.

Negro Troops Crack Targets

OCT 15 1942

First Try at Moving Objects Successful

OCT 15 1942

CAMP RUCKER, Oct. 14.—Crack Negro troops from the First Air Base Security Training Group last week became the first soldiers from Camp Rucker to fire at moving targets on the heavy artillery ranges.

On the soggy, bush-covered land close by Lake Tholocco, members of the 901st, 902nd, 905th and 906th Air Base Battalions, manning the powerful half-track trucks mounting 75 millimeter guns, blasted away at a small cloth-covered target at a distance of about 400 yards.

The first firing of this type, which marks a definite forward step in the training of these troops, resulted in a miss, the shot falling short. The target was moving at the speed of a tank. The gun crew, showing the smooth precision born of long practice, reloaded and resighted the big weapon in a matter of seconds and on the second shot clipped the edge of the target.

All day long, 16 crews, four each from the four battalions, fired at the small target, towed by a truck with a 100-yard rope. The target consisted of an iron frame about 8 1-2 feet high and 8 feet long, covered with taut white cloth. Easily maneuverable, it served the double purpose of giving the simulated appearance of a low slung tank and also showing any hits registered. After each run across the firing zone, the target was towed back into position by a jeep.

In spite of the fact that this was their first experience firing at a small target, moving at speeds up to 30 miles an hour over fairly rough terrain, the crews showed excellent marksmanship and scored several hits which would have put an actual tank out of action.

This type of firing marks some of the final phases of the Air Base Security Group's training with the ground forces. Many of the battalions are now considered capable of giving protection to airbases against enemy troops, be they tanks or paratroopers.

OCT 15 1942

Maj. Andrew Jackson Boyle, plans and training officer for the group, was in charge of the range firing. He and other officers present expressed satisfaction with the manner in which the crews carried out their assignments.

Tuskegee's Pilot Quota Now 52 Every 5 Weeks

TUSKEGEE, Ala. — Tuskegee Institute's quota of cadets for primary flight training has been increased to fifty-two every five weeks, G. L. Washington, director of the school of mechanical industries and aeronautics, announced last week.

This increase has called for considerable expansion of the teaching staff and facilities at Field No. 2 and in barracks accommodations. Sage Hall, men's dormitory, has been turned over to the army for cadet barracks and classrooms.

Students Build Hangar

At Field No. 2, a new hangar is under construction to house the additional planes needed. Forty men from the sophomore class in carpentry, masonry, plumbing and electricity are putting up the building, due for completion by December 1.

By special adjustment the trades students so employed will receive interne credit for the quarter. They take academic subjects at night, 6:30 to 8:30 p.m.

Field No. 1

Field No. 2

ARMY SENDS FOUR ON PILOT LIAISON DUTY

TUSKEGEE, Ala., Oct. 8—The Army has taken the first step in a move to utilize the services of Air Corps pilot trainees who "wash out" and are unable to secure their Army commissions and "Wings." Four student pilots at the Tuskegee Army Flying school have been transferred to Fort Sill, Okla., for liason pilot duty.

The men, Langston Caldwell, Octave Rainey, Tully Hickman and Raymond Perry, become the first group of liason pilots in the history of the Army Air Corps.

PROTESTED OLD PRACTICES

Previously all men at Tuskegee who failed to get their "Wings" were reduced to the ranks of privates in the army and assigned to other units. This drew bitter criticism from race organizations and was the subject of an expose by The Pittsburgh Courier because white pilot failures were given the choice of becoming aerial gunners, navigators or liason pilots.

Credit for the change in the army policy is due Robert A. Lovett, assistant secretary of war; Col. Frederick V. H. Kimble, commanding officer of the Tuskegee Army Flying School, and Captain Graham, adjutant of the Tuskegee Army school.

It is not known at this time whether the men assigned to Fort Sill will receive commissions and form the basis for a unit of colored liason pilots.

Sec. Stimson Gives Praise To Aviators

Touches On Grave Trust Soon Facing 99th Squadron

TUSKEGEE, Ala.—It was after much praise of the famous Tuskegee Flying School's pilots that Secretary of War Stimson and a small official party continued last week on their tour of inspection of stations in the Southeast Training Center.

Upon the meeting of the pilots of the 99th Pursuit Squadron, the Secretary of War highly complimented them on the manner in which they had applied themselves to becoming military aviators.

He touched on the responsibility which faces them in the future, and expressed the hope that they will continue to maintain their present record in the grave situations which will confront them when they faced the enemy.

Secretary Stimson, along with R. A. Lovett, Assistant Secretary of War for Air, and Maj. Gen. A. D. Surles, Chief, War Department, Bureau of Public Relations, landed in a large Army transport on the flying school's field in a downpour of rain.

A guard of honor composed of aviation cadets stood at rigid attention and a band sounded "Ruffles and Flourishes" as the secretary, dressed in a grey, chalk-striped suit, stepped briskly from the airplane.

OFFICIAL PARTY

SHOWS INTEREST IN MECHANICS

The secretary inspected administrative buildings, barracks, hangars, and aircraft. He talked with the personnel in the various departments and showed particular interest in the work of the mechanics, who maintain the aircraft, and the Air Service Command in the sub-depot.

On leaving the flying line, he visited the post hospital where he talked with doctors, nurses, and others on duty; and to Lt. John McClure, a 99th Pursuit Squadron pilot, recently injured in an aircraft accident.

TUSKEGEE, Dec. 24 --(ANP)--Discrimination, rankling, disturbing and bitter, is again rearing its head among the officers at the air base here. In varied ways difference of race insofar as officers are concerned is more and more stressed.

There has been separation in eating arrangements and in quarters all along. That this is not necessary is shown by the fact that scarcely 50 miles away at Fort McClellan, Ala., headquarters for the 92nd division, no segregation is engaged in.

The latest and most debasing form which this segregation has taken however is in the new Technical School build- where recently signs were posted over the tiolet reading, "For White Officers" and "For Colored Officers".

Indignation ran high when the signs were first notices and they were promptly torn down. A little while later the signs were put up again. While it cannot be verified, the post commandant, Col. Frederick Von H. Kimble, is said to have called a conferance of all officers and to have told them that the signs were there to stay, that they represented the policy of the post and if they were torn down again he would post a guard to see that they stayed in place.

The officers are reported to be fuming because they do not believe the policy enunciated by the commandant is the policy of the war department at all but that it is promulgated by the commandant in a deliberate attempt to humiliate and embarrass them.

This was presumed to be an all-Negro post. Observers say that while it is impossible to say how many officers are here there are in non-flying officer personnel administrative jobs scores and scores of Negro officers who are not pilots and have no direct connection with aviation.

There are also scores of white officers, most of them occupying jobs which might well be filled by the competent colored men who are at the field, or who are available. The post commandant has the opportunity of selecting the officers who are used here.

'COLORED' AND 'WHITE' SIGNS AT TUSKEGEE?

WASHINGTON

The AFRO asked the War Department today to investigate conditions at Tuskegee Flying Field only army station for training colored flyers.

Reports to the AFRO indicated conditions have not improved under Col. M. Kimble, commanding officer.

1. Specifically, investigation was asked of reports that "colored" and "white" signs have appeared over toilets in defiance of army regulations.

2. That colored and white officers have been ordered not to fraternize

3. That white officers have been directed to live off the post and not to join the only officers' club on the post.

4. Capt. Lloyd M. Sparks, finance officer, assigned to the post five months ago, has not been permitted to function.

5. That fewer departments are now headed by colored officers than formerly.

3rd Class Of Army Pilots Graduated

TUSKEGEE—(ANP)—"The future holds for you great prospects." With these words ringing in their ears, words of encouragement from their commanding officer, Col. Frederick V. H. Trimble, members of the third class of Negro pilots finished their training at this school.

The graduating exercises, at which mothers and fathers of the graduates were present, were held Wednesday morning, May 20, in the Post Recreation hall. Post Chaplain Hollis H. Hooks delivered the invocation. Lt. Col. Noel F. Parrish, director of training, presented the coveted wings to the graduates. Coloney Trimble delivered the address.

"The life of Tuskegee Army Flying school has been short in comparison with those institutions which have long histories and great traditions," said the commanding officer. "History for this air base and for those who go out from this air base is in the making. It is on you and your immediate predecessors that the history of this air base will be made and tradition formed.

"The future holds for you great prospects.

"May I congratulate you on your successful completion of the course as aviation cadets and welcome you as pilots and officers of the air corps, and join with you in your happiness in having attained this pilot's rating and the opportunity for service which it offers."

YOUTH RANKS 3RD IN SIGNAL CORPS EXAM

MAY 24 1942

Major General George Grunert, commanding the Sixth Corps Area with headquarters in Chicago, announced this week Mynor P. Payne, 23-year-old youth of 707 South Third street, Champaign, Illinois, ranked third among all the applicants of the corps area who took examinations last week for technical courses of the U. S. Army Signal Corps.

Payne's grade was exceeded by only two men among the applicants from Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin who took examinations for Ultra-High Frequency training courses. As the result of his showing he will be offered an appointment to the Signal Corps' Advanced Electronics and Micro-Wave Technical School. On completion of this course, he will be eligible either to a commission as a second lieutenant in the Signal Corps or a position as a civilian radio engineer.

Payne, a graduate of electrical engineering at the Northwestern university, is now employed as an instructor at an Air Corps technical school. He took the examination at the University of Illinois May 12.

Graduate Flyers Are Successful

They're Above Standard, He Says in Article

"Anyone who assumes Negroes cannot become first-class pilots and up-to-standard members of the United States Army Air Forces is in the class of those misguided individuals who guessed the Japanese would be unable to keep airplanes level because their eyes slant."

Frank Lambert, flight instructor associated with Negro flight training, in an article in the current (June) issue of FLYING Magazine, points with pride to the U. S. Army training program which recently graduated its first class of Negro military aviators.

"The members of this first class," he states, "came from all sections of the country. Their backgrounds were varied and often interesting. All had more than two years of college, and some were college graduates.

"As graduate pilots they have proved themselves successful up-to-standard members of the United States Army Air Forces."

Lambert insists preconceived notions about Negro flyers have been proved false. "Important facts," he says, "are these: The Army now has a small number of Negro pilots, more are being trained. These men are receiving excellent training, and they are meeting the requirements of that training.

"Those who have completed the course are above the necessary minimum standards in ability. There is considerable reason for faith in the future on the part of those who hope and assume Negro groups can fly and are capable of well organized military effort."

Lambert insists Negro flying units now being formed must be considered as units of the United States Army, first; as Negro units, second. MAY 22 1942

"An airplane," he points out, "does not react to the color or appearance of its pilot, either favorably or unfavorably."

"The successful Negro military pilot considers himself a pilot first and foremost. He has his mind full just flying, without being conscious that he is a Negro at the same time."

Criticising well-meaning commentators of both races, Lambert says: "It is difficult enough to fly for your family and friends without feeling you are trying to succeed as an individual inspiration for 13,000,000 people."

Says More Race Youths Must Prepare For Air Training

MAY 21 1942

More Boys Should Be Enrolled In Civilian Program, Says Frank

By THELMA REA THURSTON

HAMPTON INSTITUTE, Va.—(SNS)—"If Negroes are to benefit fully and effectively from proposed aviation expansion programs, more Negro youth must be prepared, or must be seeking preparation for flight training in large numbers." it was stated here this week by John L. Frank, coordinator of the Hampton Institute Civilian Pilot Training program.

This observation was made by Frank following his return from a meeting of the Aeronautical Association of Negro Schools, held Monday and Tuesday in Washington, D. C., on the Howard University campus.

During the meeting it was disclosed in conferences with John P. Morris, CPT administrator; Lt. Col. John H. Ives, of the U. S Army Air Forces, and William Hastie, civilian aide to the secretary of war, that eventual expansion of the CPT program will result in increased aviation opportunities for Negroes.

MORE SHOULD APPLY

The extent to which Negroes will participate in the expansion and proposed acceleration of the nation's flight training was not made clear in any of the conferences.

Persons attending the meeting were sure of one thing: That in order to take full advantage of any sort of expansion of the present flight training program more Negroes must apply for training.

Because the Aeronautical Association of Negro Schools desires "more than proportional participation" in the nation's flying services, the group went on record to encourage more youth to seek Civilian Pilot Training.

In open meetings and conferences held with government officials, the Association emphasized these points: support of the 99th and 100th Pursuit Squadrons of the U. S. Army Air Corps through the CPT program; a new accelerated CPT program with 75 percent enlisted subsistence and 25 percent college subsistence; proportial Negro participation in the CPT program; source of instructors; impressions and influences of the Army and Navy and aviation mechanics training courses in Negro schools.

WASHINGTON PRESIDES

The meeting, which the Hampton Institute coordinator called together as secretary of the association, was presided over by G. L. Washington, CPT coordinator at Tuskegee Institute, Tuskegee, Ala. Other officials of the conference present were Miss Willa B. Brown, director of the Coffey School of Aeronautics, Chicago, Ill., vice president of the Association; and G. Robert Cotton, CPT coordinator at Lincoln University, Jefferson City, Mo., treasurer of the organization.

Second Class Of Negro Fliers Is Graduated

Tuskegee Institute Air School Gives Wings To Officers

"The Tuskegee Army Flying School, still in the process of growing, is the result of the untiring efforts on the part of many interested and devoted persons who desire to place within your grasp an opportunity to fly in the army air force. You have reached this goal and you join that initial group of pilots who received their wings in this hall last month. There will be others to follow and from this group there will emerge combat units as evidence of your ability and application."

So spoke Col. Frederick V. H. Kimble, commanding officer of the Tuskegee Army Flying School, addressing the second graduating class of Negro cadets in the post theater, Wednesday, April 29, 1942.

Among those who received from Col. Kimble diplomas and commissions as second lieutenants in the U. S. Air Corps were: Sidney Brooks, Cleveland, Ohio; W. Dryden, New York City, and Clarence C. Jamison, Cleveland, Ohio.

The coveted wings were pinned on by Maj. Noel F. Parrish, director of flight training. The invocation and the benediction were pronounced by the post chaplain, Lt. H. Henry Hooks.

Because of the urgency of the war program at the post the exercises were simple and brief, being attended only by the cadet classes and those of the personnel directly connected with the exercises. No relatives of the graduates were present.

Col. Kimble concluded by saying "You have a definite work before you: The disagreeable task of war. But I can think of no more glorious way to pursue it than as a pilot. I wish to congratulate you wholeheartedly for having attained what I consider the most enviable commission. It is my opportunity to congratulate you on your graduation, to welcome you as officers to this air base.

"People will expect much of you in the future and I know that in your hearts is your sincere purpose to fulfill in every way this expectancy. It is of such purposes that great armies are made, and great nations sustained."

The graduates were presented to Col. Kimble by Capt. Roy E. Morse, director of ground school. Lt. Robt. R. Rowland and Lt. D. G. McPherson are directors of advanced and basic flying, respectively. Lt. Carl Leutcke is operations officer. Flight instructors are: Lt. Robert Lowenberg, Lt. Clay Albright, Lt. Robert M. Long, and Lt. Joseph W. Gurnow.

Army Air Forces To Canvass Colleges To Enlist Reserves In Future Duty

MAY 24 1942

Aviation Cadet Examining Boards are visiting centrally located "key" colleges to enlist college men in the Army Air Forces Reserve on a deferred basis, the War Department announced today.

At preliminary mass meeting conducted at schools throughout the country during the past two weeks, more than 60,000 students heard Army Air Forces flying officers explain the reserve program which will permit qualified students to enlist as Aviation Cadets and continue their education until actually needed for training.

It is expected that the students who remain in college under this program will be offered an opportunity to specialize in subjects that will materially assist them when they enter training as aviation cadets.

Air Force officials said that 1,200 colleges have appointed faculty advisors to explain to interested students the details of the plan which will create a reserve for future flight and ground crew requirements. Faculty representatives from the schools participating attended the mass meetings at the "key" colleges in order to obtain information on the program to pass on to students at colleges not visited by the boards. MAY 24 1942

Invitations have been extended through faculty advisors to all interested college students and to the senior classes of 26,000 high schools to attend the meetings being conducted this week and next.

The boards visiting the colleges to explain the needs of the Army Air Forces, and to outline the program, report an enthusiastic response on the part of the undergraduates. In several of the schools visited the entire male student bodies turned out for the meetings.

Of the 1,100 students who attended the mass meeting held at the University of Wisconsin, 980 immediately requested aviation cadet application blanks. At Ohio State university 2.500 students came out for the meeting, and the gatherings at Indiana university and Louisiana State university were each attended by more than 2,000 undergraduates.

"The response of the students attending the meetings," said a senior Air Forces officer of one of the visiting boards, "indicates that the college students of America are giving serious thought to the part they will have to play in the war."

Another officer reports that the students at one meeting kept him and his junior officer answering questions for eight hours; until, he said, "we were worn out and had almost lost our voices." MAY 24 1942

Student applicants will be given mental and physical examinations on the spot, by the Aviation Cadet Examining Boards who will visit the colleges during the next two weeks. Those who qualify will be enlisted immediately in the Army Air Forces Enlisted Reserve, but with active duty deferred, permitting them to continue in school provided they maintain a satisfactory scholastic record. Toward the end of the second college year these students will be required to pass an examination designed to determine their fitness for remaining in school.

The Army Air Forces Enlisted Reserve Plan, which was first announced by Lieutenant General Henry H. Arnolds on April 21, , is open to college students who have not completed their educational training and who wish to continue in school, and to high school graduates who are planning to enter college. Members of the enlisted reserve, however, will be subject to call for duty at any time, should the emergency of the war demand.

Students enlisted in the reserve under this plant who are graduated, or are called to active duty before graduation because of separation from school for any reason, will be appointed aviation cadets, with an opportunity to compete for commissions in the same manner as other aviation cadets. Should military necessity dictate, any reservist may be called to active duty at any time.

In originally announcing the plan, General Arnold, commanding general of the Army Air Forces, said:

"An earnest attempt has been made to devise a program that will enable the Air Forces to obtain the very large number of Aviation Cadets which must be trained every year until this war is brought to a successful conclusion, and at the same time cause the least possible disruption in the nation's educational program."

Tuskegee Army Flying School News

MAY 24 1942

TUSKEGEE, Ala., May 21—Mother's Day program at the Tuskegee Army Flying School proved to be an occasion excelling all other programs sponsored by the Education and Recreation Department.

Long before this day preparations were made which warranted the success of the grand day. Approximately sixty percent of the large number of invitations sent out were answered by mothers from near and far all of whom expressed their utmost appreciation for the consideration accorded them. Ten states were represented by the mothers visiting this station, coming from Delaware, Georgia, New York, Alabama, Pennsylvania, Kentucky, Virginia, Texas, and Ohio.

Distinction is accorded Mrs. Maria Fraley as she came the farthest distance coming from Staten Island where her address is 63 Montgomery avenue, Thompkinsville, New York.

The day was filled with pleasant occasions. Morning and evening special services were held during the day. Guest speaker for the morning services was Dr. Walter J. Crump, member of the Board of Trusteess of Tuskegee Institute, Tuskegee, Ala., and Flowers Hospital, New York City, New York.

MAY 24 1942

A special dinner was served to the mothers and sons. Being accompanied by musical selections, this dinner was received with profound gratitude.

The 1st and 2nd Platoons of a material squadron gave a fine exhibition of military drill which brought many pleasant expressions from the large number of spectators.

The mothers were escorted to the Post Hospital where they were shown one of the Army Air Corps' more modern hospitals which are adequately prepared to facilitate the care of soldiers in need of a physician's attention.

MAY 24 1942

Later in the evening the mothers observed an intrapost baseball game after which they visited the Carver Museum at Tuskegee Institute where the splendid works of the renowned scientist, Dr. Carver, are exhibited.

This glorious day was ended in solemn fashion as the mothers attended the evening services which Lt. Hollis H. Hooks ably carried out.

The community did much toward making it a fine occasion by contribution of the most attractive flowers which added life to the dinner tables and also by cooperating with the American Red Cross provided places including Dorothy Hall for our visitors to stay.

Lt. Fred Minnis, E. and R. officer, and Chaplain Hooks both did an excellent job in preparing this remarkable program.

Cities Blacked Out By Plane Crash

JUN 9 1942

TALLASSEE, ALA., June 8.—(AP)—W. A. Winston, superintendent of the Upper Tallassee Dam of the Alabama Power Company, said today one negro army flier was killed and another seriously hurt when their plane struck a high tension line and crashed into the Tallapoosa River.

The three-strand, 110,000-volt transmission line was severed, cutting off electric service to Dothan, Eufaula, Union Springs, Pinckard and other southeast Alabama communities. The accident happened at 9:05 a.m., and Winston said the line would be put back into service by nightfall.

The dead flier was identified by Capt. Nugent Brown, Tuskegee Army Air School public relations officer, as Robert A. Dawson, of San Antonio, Texas. The injured cadet was Walter I. Lawson, Newton, Va. Both were advanced students and it had not been determined which was piloting the plane at the time of the accident.

A negro plowman working near the river was quoted by Winston as saying the plane, from the Tuskegee school, was flying down the river at a low altitude when it struck the wires.

Well-Trained Staff On Hand To Work With Vet Airman

TUSKEGEE.—The 99th Pursuit Squadron and the Air Base Detachment which make up the Air Corps Advanced Flying School at Tuskegee have a new Commanding officer. He is Lt. Colonel Frederick V. H. Kimble. Col. Kimble relieved Major James A. Ellison who for the past year has worked diligently at the task of planning and organizing the station.

Col. Kimble was graduated from West Point Military Academy in the Class of 1918. Upon receiving his commission the young lieutenant was assigned to the 36th Infantry, 12th Division. Almost immediately he was ordered to Columbus, Ga., with the 1st Detachment from Fort Sill.

"Seeing the magnificent Post at Fort Benning today", said Col. Kimble, "I am rather proud to have pioneered there in the days when Headquarters was a brick dairy barn still redolent of the cows the army had preempted a few weeks before."

"Where did you train for a flyer?" the Colonel was asked.

"First at Brooks Field, San Antonio; I received my wings at Kelly Field and was assigned to the 3rd Attack Group and went to Philadelphia in 1924. In March, 1927, I returned home to be assigned to 1st Pursuit Group at Selfridge Field, Michigan. In October of that same year I was transferred to March Field, California when it was reopened as a Flying Cadet School."

"My next assignment was to Alabama, but not to Tuskegee, for at the time the War Department had probably not dreamed of an Air Corps Training School at Tuskegee. In 1934-35 I was at Maxwell Field, in Montgomery as a student in the Air Corps Tactical School."

"Did you visit Tuskegee Institute during that time?"

Admired Dr. Carver

"I drove through the grounds two or three times always hoping that the next time I might remain a while to really see the school and visit Dr. Carver. I was especially interested in Dr. Carver's experiments with cotton and peanuts. You see while I was in Texas I got pretty well soaked in cotton lore, as a matter of fact, if I hadn't gone to West Point I would have gone into the cotton business. I was interested in grades and fibers and staples, but especially I was impressed with the future in cotton bi-products. That is what attracted me to Dr. Carver. He was among the first to get the country thinking about cotton meal and cotton paving blocks. But I'm no scientist, and you are interested in the military phase anyhow."

"The year 1935-36 I was a student at Command and General Staff School, Ft. Leavenworth, Kansas. Then I was returned to Maxwell Field Tactical School as an instructor from 1936 to 1940. From there to the office of Chief of Air Corps in Washington until January 12 this year."

When asked how he felt about his assignment to Tuskegee flying school where Negro boys are being trained for Uncle Sam's Air Corps, Colonel Kimble replied after a moment's reflection.

"I hesitate to answer, not because I don't know how I feel about this arrangement, but because I don't want to give the impression I think I know it all."

"Well, Colonel, you certainly must have learned a great deal during those years of pioneering at Ft. Benning and March Field".

Real Pioneering

"That's exactly the point. The job here" (and the Colonel waved his hand out the window where the green roofed white buildings of the Advanced Air School dotted the dark red clay) "is pioneering. We aren't building this field and training these boys just for today or tomorrow, but for something that will stand. Those red hills have got to have grass to stop the erosion — and the men, flyers and ground men will need to learn how to protect themselves from erosion in the days ahead."

The new commander expressed appreciation for the fine staff of Negro officers that has been assigned to the Air School. He expressed great interest in the C. A. A. training program at Tuskegee Institute and inquired how many men had received advanced C. A. A. flight training.

The officers at the U. S. Air Corps Advanced Flying School at Tuskegee represent some of the best trained men in the service. They come from all sections of the country and have had experience in many outstanding army units.

Col. Kimble has as his staff: Capt. John T. Hazard, Executive Officer; Capt. Percy L. Jones, Administrative Inspector; Lt. John W. Graham, Post Adjutant; Lt. Edward Ambler, Intelligence Officer; and Lt. Clyde H. Bynum, Assistant Post Adjutant. These officers, with the exception of Capt. Jones, were transferred to Tuskegee from Maxwell Field. Capt. Jones was transferred from Fort Riley, Kan.

Other assignments of officer personnel include: Flight Training, Major Noel F. Parrish, Director; Capt. Roy E. Morse, Director of Ground School; Lt. Robert R. Rowland, Director of Advanced Flying School; Lt. D. G. McPherson, Director of Basic Flying School; Lt. Carl Lentcke, Operations Officer. Maj. Parrish was until his transfer, director of the Primary Flying School at Tuskegee Institute. Capt. Morse was with the 369th at Camp Edwards, Mass.

One of the organizations of ACAFS has as Commanding Officer Capt. Alonzo S. Ward. The Captain served with the 369th at Camp Edwards, Mass., was a member of the New York State Rifle Team at Camp Perry, O. He possesses numerous trophies, evidences of his skill as a marksman. Former Sprint Champion, Capt. Roy F. Morse, Now Teaches Flying Cadets

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala.—(S N S)—Among the officers stationed here at the Air Corps Advanced Flying School is a former National sprint champion and one of the founders of the famous Salem Crescent Athletic Club, which has produced among others, Ray (Sugar) Robinson, heralded as the next welterweight champion.

This man is none other than Captain Roy F. Morse, director of the Ground School and Secretary of the Air Corps Advanced Flying School, who was athletic director of the renowned 369th Regiment before coming here last November.

Captain Morse, a New Yorker by birth, first became interested in athletics while attending the NYC public schools, where he with a group of other boys organized the Crescent Club. Their local minister, the Rev. J. Cullen, pastor of Salem M. E. Church, became deeply interested in their program and allowed them to hold meetings in his church. Being thankful for this privilege, the boys renamed the club. This, was born the Salem Crescent Athletic Club.

While in public school, in 1910, Captain Morse won the 50 and 100 yard sprinting championships. In 1911 he left New York's public schools and went to Buffalo City College where he still excelled in athletics although it was necessary he work after classes. Captain Morse sold papers and shined shoes to help defray school expenses.

In 1914, at the 65th Regiment Armory in Buffalo, he made world records in the 75 yard dash (.6) and the 100 yard dash (9.6). In 1915 he was sent to Boston for tryouts for the American Championship team and on September 11, 1915 he made two world records during the meet in California, the Junior 100 yard dash in 9.4 seconds and the Senior 220 yard dash in 22.2 seconds. In 1916 he enlisted in the army and it wasn't long before he was a sergeant and within two years he was commissioned as second lieutenant. He continued running for another year and retired dash champion in 1919.

Among the many members of the Salem Crescent Athletic Club are: Peter J. White, Howard P. Drew, who ran the 100 yard dash in 9.4; Leolas La Bete, hop, step and jump champion; Herbert Thompson, present Metropolitan sprint champion; Bennie Ponte, Canada Lee, Broawway favorite, and many hundreds of others.

~~Captain Morse has also trained many ranking fighters both in civilian life and in the New York 369th Regiment. Of all the fighters he has seen in action, from Jim Jeffries to the current corp,~~ he unhesitatingly ranks Joe Louis as tops.

TUSKEGEE, Ala., Mach 7 (UP).—Maj. George E. Stratemeyer, commander of the Southeast Air Corps Training Center, told the first graduates of the first U. S. Army Air Corps flying school for Negroes here today that "without the support and protection of adequate friendly aviation, ground and sea forces are at an appaling disadvantage."

The number of graduates in this first class of Negroes was not disclosed. They will become the nucleus of the 99th All-Negro pursuit squadron.

"Combat pursuit pilots like you are needed now, and will be needed in large numbers tomorrow, in many zones where our forces must operate throughout the world," Stratemeyer said.

"I have great confidence that you will . . . add luster to the proud traditions already established by your race in fighting for this country before the existence of aviation as a medium of warfare.

MAR 6 - 1942

TUSKEGEE, Ala. —The cadets, officers and enlisted personnel of the 99th Pursuit squadron in training here, enjoyed a welcome surprise Wednesday evening when Etta Moten, the concert singer, gave a program in the post theater. Dr. Patterson Says Air Force May Include All

FEB 24 1942

Only a Matter Of Time, Says 'Skegee President

By PETER DANA

NEW YORK—(SNS)—The 99th and 100th Pursuit Squadron now in training at Tuskegee, the organization of which has been bitterly opposed by colored citizens objecting to sepration of the races in the military services, "are giving colored men a foothold in the air corps, and will, in time, lead to mixed air units," according to Dr. F. D. Patterson, president of Tuskegee, in an interview here this week at the Hotel Theresa.

Dr. Patterson's statement comes just as it is announced that William Pickens, now engaged in selling defense stamps and bonds for the U. S. Treasury throughout the county, has been relieved of his position as Director of Branches for the NAACP for his publicly announced support of the separate air training center at Tuskegee.

Dr. Pickens, on a leave of absence from the Association, has found himself at odds with NAACP policy on several occasions recently. His dismissal, according to a statement of the Association, was deemed advisable in view of his open defiance of the declared policy of the organization on segregation in the armed services.

Tuskegee Is Starting Point For Aerial Unit

Gen. George E. Stratemeyer, commanding officer of the Southeast Air Corps Training Center, welcomed the young negroes into their chosen branch of the nation's combat and defensive forces, and declared:

"Our country is engaged in a hard fight for its security and freedom; here today is opened a new source of strength to wage that fight."

The number receiving commissions was not made public, and assignments were not announced immediately. General Stratemeyer emphasized to them, however, that their places in the nation's war effort would be important.

"It appears more and more plain," he said, "that this war will be decided by air power. By choosing to serve your country in its air forces, you have placed yourself in position to help make the decision in this war victory for our side."

He recalled that in past wars American negro soldiers had done their duty with combat units of the ground forces, but that "in this war, the American negro is destined to take his place in defense of his country by performing combat duties in the air."

"You should feel that you are on your mettle," he continued. "As you are the first group of negro military pilots, it is up to you to prove that this school is not just a noble experiment, but is a sound step forward in the nation's war effort."

Among those receiving commissions was Capt. Benjamin O. Davis, Jr., son of Brig. Gen. Davis of Fort Riley, Kan. He is a graduate of West Point, and his first assignment was at Fort Benning, Ga.

After about a year at Benning, Davis was transferred to Tuskegee Institute as professor of military science and tactics; in the Spring of 1941 he was sent to Fort Riley as aide to Brig. Gen. Davis, but returned here last Summer to begin pilot training.

Trained as Pursuit Pilots

Army's First Negro Fliers Soon Will Receive Dreamed of Wings

By FREDERICK WILLIAMS
(United Press Staff Correspondent)

TUSKEGEE, Ala., Feb. 6 (UP).—In a few days the army's first class of negro fliers become commissioned officers and their instructors revealed today that the number of "washouts" was lower than the general average of white flying cadets.

Far back in a secluded country area, miles from Tuskegee, the negro fliers are being trained.

The success of the experiment with negro aviators is indicated by a War department announcement several days ago that a new squadron, the 100th, would be formed by negro cadets, and that other such pursuit units were being planned. The young men in training as cadets of the 99th pursuit squadron will serve as instructors of the new air units.

Started in Fall

The army school for negro flying cadets was put under construction last summer and the first class began flying in the fall. The reports sent Washington of the success of the new venture has led to a three fold expansion of facilities the the base and the addition of Col. Frederick V. Kimble as commanding officer.

Since there are no commissioned negro pilots in the army, instructions of the first class have been by white officers. They say that "these men have met the same physical and mental requirements as set forth for all cadets. They seem to catch on rapidly to the art of flying pursuit style although none of them are being trained as pilots for bombers."

Down here in Alabama the negro cadets complete their primary training on one field, and then move nearby to a main base for basic and advanced training. They must meet every standard, every test required of white pilots.

Officers say they have no trouble with these men. "They take to military life like a duck to water," they add. "They walk around very proudly in their uniforms, their morale is at the very highest and we have had no trouble with them at all. They play basketball and occasionally go on visits but for the most part they study and dream of the day they will get their wings."

Officers say the cadets' eyes are very good, their sense of depth and perception all that could be asked. "But it is the men's discipline and love for the army that has made them stick and hang up the record on which future action will be taken."

The President said the United Nations are collaborating with the U. S. to effect transfers to the American armed service of the Americans who had enlisted before the war under foreign flags. War Secretary Stimson announced completion of plans for the formation of a 6th Armored Division and two additional all-Negro units; an infantry division and an air pursuit squadron. The House passed and sent to the Senate legislation appropriating $12,500,000,000 to provide 33,000 new Army planes and equipment for them.

ANOTHER NEGRO AIR FORCE UNIT BEING FORMED

Birmingham Post
Birmingham, Ala.

Recruiting Is Also Started For Armored And Infantry Divisions

JAN 23 1942

By United Press.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 23.—Plans are complete for formation of an all-Negro infantry division, a second Negro Air Force unit, and a 6th Armored Division, Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson announces.

The new units will form part of the 3,600,000-man Army the War Department plans to raise this year, doubling the present armored force, and creating 32 additional infantry divisions. JAN 23 1942

Stimson told a press conference yesterday that the 93rd Infantry Division, to be composed of Negro regiments now in service, plus additional men from replacement centers, would be "a completely welded Army unit by May." He said it would be stationed at Fort Huachuca, Ariz.

The new Negro Air Rorce unit, the 100th Pursuit Squadron, will augment the 99th Pursuit Squadron, which has been in training since September at Tuskegee, Ala. Cadets of the latter unit, Stimson added, will be assigned "as instructors to other colored groups" after they have completed their training and been commissioned as second lieutenants. JAN 23 1942

He said the 6th Armored Division, to include more than 10,000 officers and men, would be organized at Fort Knox, Ky., "early in February" and moved at a later date to a permanent station, location of which was not disclosed.

Negro Aviators

News of colored youths assigned to the Army Air Corps training base near Tuskegee Institute, Alabama, would indicate that all qualified Negro males now have an opportunity to defend their native America from the battle stations of the air. But such is not the case.

The full combat strength of the segregated Ninety-ninth Pursuit Squadron now in training near Tuskegee will total a mere 33 pilots. These pilots will train an additional 33 men after they have won their "wings."

Right now, upwards of 400 colored aviators have already completed advanced flight training in civilian training centers located in all parts of the country. About ten of these aviators are certified commercial pilots. Others are flight instructors and expert meteorologists. Many of them can perform every known type of acrobatic air maneuvers. Most of them have aviation mechanics licenses. A few have completed rigid courses in airport ground service training.

Now that the devastating fury of this war becomes a stark reality, the writer seriously questions the need for "segregation as usual." Such a procedure proved to be an utter failure in civilian life during the Nation's most prosperous days of peace. Today, we face a long war. We can not afford to see competent, loyal, native American man power needlessly lost because of our disastrously poor estimate of what the segments of our common population can do or should not do to win this war. "Quota" for colored combatants in our air, sea and land forces are tantamount to "segregation as usual." The creation of the Ninety-ninth and 100th Pursuit Squadrons is proof of this.

We need the knowledge and experience of the 400 American aviators and other competent citizens who are denied their right to defend democracy for America and the world. DUTTON FERGUSON.

Extra Hour

According to the newspapers, the President and Winston Churchill have already discussed and decided that we, the American people, need another hour tacked on to the new war time.

I happen to be one of the many Government workers who have to be at work at 7:45 with an extra hour added each day. In order to be at the office where I am not allowed to be even one minute late, it is necessary for me to get up at 5:45 war time and to leave the house at 7 o'clock (6 o'clock standard time).

I wonder how many of the Congressmen or Senators will vote for this bill in favor of it. I think it should be put to a vote of the people. After all we are the ones who are inconvenienced by this unnecessary extra daylight hour.

What we need right now is more common sense and less extravagance and they can start at the White House. JULIA BANCROFT.

Negro Fliers And Jap Propaganda

A reminder of the increasingly important role the American negro is playing in the nation's war effort came yesterday in a dispatch from Tuskegee. It dealt with the graduation exercises of the first students who will form the nucleus of the first all-negro squadron in the United States' flying forces.

In the World War, American negroes covered themselves with glory, and in this one they will have new opportunities to extend their brilliant record as fighting men.

Japanese propaganda, appealing to race prejudice, has recently been directed towards American negroes in an effort to incite them to disloyalty to their country. Some of the boys from Tuskegee may get a chance to fly their race's reply to Japan—a thunderous answer in bombs—to convince dumbfounded Japs that the negro's loyalty to America is not to be questioned.

STEP FORWARD

Down at Tuskegee dozens of Negroes are being put through their paces as they learn to become pilots in Uncle Sam's air force. Graduates of the flying school will eventually constitute the first all-Negro air unit in this nation's history.

APR 5 - 1942

The inauguration of this school marks a long step in the intelligent handling of a perplexing problem of race relations. We could not blame the Negro, relegated to the drudging jobs of both army and navy, for not putting forth his best effort. Here, however, he may have equal opportunity to share in the fight, without at the same time causing racial feelings.—Lee County Bulletin (Auburn).

The graduation of several Negro pilots to be full-fledged officers and flying lieutenants in the United States Army marks a great epoch. It should be a lesson and inspiration to every Negro boy in America. On that field at Tuskegee recently were not only these boys who had gone through so much to achieve so much, but there was also a captain in the United States Regular Army, a graduate of West Point, whose father is a general in the United States Army. Boys, these are evidences that things CAN be done. Whining, complaining and wishing will accomplish little. Intelligent protest, fighting spirit and an indomitable will and resolute courage coupled with knowledge, will accomplish much. They'll give it to you here, but you've got to wring it out.

FIVE FT. BRAGG WOMEN REACH ALA. AIR BASE

New Arrivals Sign-up For Duty at Y.S. Defense Training Center

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala.—Major DeHaven Hinkson, post surgeon, Air Corps Advanced Flying school, at Tuskegee, reported this week the arrival of five nurses, assigned to the medical staff of the Post Medical unit.

The new arrivals are First Lieut. Della H. Raney, chief nurse; Second Lieut. Mary Petty, Chicago, Ill.; Second Lieut. Ruth Speight, Wilson, N. C.; Second Lieut. Kathryn Bough, Portsmouth, Va., and Second Lieut. Gertrude L. Scott, Philadelphia, Pa.. All were transferred from Fort Bragg, N. C.

Lieutenant Raney has the distinction of several "firsts." She was the first Negro nurse to report for duty in the new army for World War No. II; she is the first Negro nurse to be appointed chief nurse, and the first to be promoted to First Lieutenant.

As a matter of fact, she is the only one holding the last two titles. Lieutenant Raney whose home is Suffolk, Va., received her nurse training at Lincoln hospital training school, Durham, N. C. After graduation she served successively on the staff of the Community hospital, Norfolk, Va., and K. B. Reynolds hospital, Winston-Salem, N.C.

Later Miss Raney went back to Lincoln hospital, Durham as operation supervisor. She left Lincoln April 1941 to receive her commission as second lieutenant and to report for duty at Fort Bragg, N. C. She was promoted to First lieutenant on March 1, this year, less than 12 months after her entry into the service—a signal tribute to her ability and work.

Second Lieutenant Mary Petty is a graduate of Freedman's in Washington, D. C., and has served on the staff of Seaview, L. I., and Dixie hospital, Hampton.

Second Lieut. Ruth Speight is a graduate of St. Agnes, Raleigh, N. C. She has worked at St. Agnes hospital and at Tampa Negro hospital, Tampa, Fla.

Second Lieut. Kathryn Bough was graduated from Lincoln hospital, N. Y. Before being assigned to Fort Bragg in Septemer, 1941, Miss Bough was on the staff at Meharry Medical college, in Nashville, Tenn., Harlem hospital, New York and Whitaker hospital, in Newport News, Va.

Second Lieut. Gertrude L. Scott finished nurse training at Mercy hospital, Philadelphia. Before going to Fort Bragg on October 1, 1941, she was on the staff of Henry Phipps Institute.

TUSKEGEE, April 9. — With their sights firmly leveled on every soldier's funny bone, the vaudeville celebrities of the new U. S. O. camp show, "Keep Smiling," sent an occupying force that took over the War Department theater on Monday evening here at the Tuskegee Army Flying School. The many soldiers who attended were caught in a cross-fire of laughs and lovely ladies during two blitz performances.

"Keep Smiling" actors flanked the Army defenses with the combined charms of Jane Fraser, Harriet Hutchins and Bea Saxon, the talented "lovelies" of the company. Newly recruited from the Broadway hit show, "Pal Joey," petite Miss Fraser sprang a surprise attack of startling, eccentric dances. Miss Hutchins, one of vaudeville's highest paid singing comediennes, resorted to direct tactics with her theme song, "I've Gotta Get a Guy." Miss Saxon, vocalist deluxe, who performed in a Billy Rose show that had a 26-week run in New York, was superb in her renditions of medleys, both old and new, sweet and hot.

Andy Delmar and the Three Jacks furnished musical and vocal ammunition in the same smooth style that has won them acceptance as entertainment headliners at many of the New York night clubs. Rene and Wilbur Hall, one of vaudeville's funniest musical instrumentalist acts, added much to the revelry of the show. The big surprise coup was one of vaudeville's most fascinating animal acts, the Gaudsmith Brothers and their troupe of almost-human poodles.

Roger Gordon, field representative of the local Red Cross Chapter, presented to the men of this field in behalf of his organization, a beautiful midget radio. The gift was accepted by Lieut. Fred Minnis, education and recreation officer, amid a thunderous applause.

With the audience and performers joining in the singing of the "National Anthem," the evening's entertainment came to a close. "Keep Smiling," one of the 13 big hit shows touring on the U. S. O. camp show "Stars-and-Stripes" Circuit, is truly a great show.

Negro Fliers

(Greene County Democrat)

Tuskegee has turned out its first graduates of the Advanced Flying School. This will form a nucleus of an all-Negro squadron air force. The members of the class received their "wings" and were commissioned second lieutenants. Knowing negroes as we think we do, when they get a full-trained squadron and get into action, somebody is going to get hurt, and our money is on the Negroes to shoot down at least two planes to one. We don't know yet what they can do for an airplane, but they can take a screw-driver and monkey-wrench and make an old car go, that would be the despair of almost any garage.

Gen'l Davis' Son Is Among First Negro Air Officers

MAR 8 - 1942

Event Hailed as Step Forward By Southeastern Air Commander

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala.—(SNS)—The first Negroes to be ever commissioned officers of the United States Army Air Corps were told here Saturday that the school from which they were graduated was "a sound step forward in the nation's war effort."

The statement was made by Major George E. Stratemeyer, commanding officer of the Southeast Air Corps Training Center, who congratulated the new pilots as "pioneers".

The youthful flyers, the first of their race to be awarded their "wings" are to be used to train incoming cadets, who will form the 99th and 100 Pursuit Squadrons, which are to be all-Negro outfits.

HELD IN THEATRE

Among those to receive commissions were: Capt. Benj. O. Davis, Jr.,; Cadets Mac Ross and George Spencer Roberts both of West Virginia. Lemuel R. Custis, Hartford; Charles Henry DeBow, Indianapolis and Hampton Institute.

Capt. Benj. O. Davis Jr., is the son of Brigadier General Benj. O. Davis and is graduate of West Point Military Academy. His first assignment was to Fort Benning, Georgia. After about one year he was transferred to Tuskegee Institute as Professor of Military Science and Tactics. The spring 1941 he was sent to Fort Riley, Kansas as aide to Brigadier General Davis.

Early in the summer Capt. Davis returned to Tuskegee Institute to begin pilot training in the Air Corps Detachment Primary Flying School, Tuskegee Institute. Cadet Roberts received advanced flying training in the Civilian Pilot Training course at Tuskegee Institute before entering Air Corps Primary Training.

MAY BE AT TUSKEGEE

Colonel Frederick V. H. Kimble, Commanding Officer of the ACAFS could not be reached for confirmation of the rumor that the newly commissioned officers would be assigned to duty at the Tuskegee Field.

The inaugural ceremony initiating the training of Negroes as Military aviators for the United States Army Air Corps was held July 19, 1941 at the Booker T. Washington Monument, Tuskegee Institute. The principal address on that occasion was made by Major General Walter R. Weaver, Commanding Officer, Southeast Air Corps Training Center.

"The success of this venture depends upon you. You have the responsibility of laying the foundation. Therefore, I can not impress upon you too much how important it is for you to make a wonderful record. I believe you will. I understand you have been hand picked. You have an excellent educational background. You have splendid officers. You will have fine mechanics. These are the tools necessary to do your work. You have the best. In addition, you have an even greater responsibility. The responsibility of training for defense of the United States. I can not impress too emphatically how important is this phase of National Defense—this phase of military aviation—this that you have elected to do. This task is work. It is a difficult task. It will call for everything you have got in you. It is no bed of roses. It will mean morning work and night study. It will mean keeping yourselves fit at all times. If you succeed you will have the satisfaction and the pride that comes to the men who on the completion of their course pass down the line and receive their wings.

"Your officers will be ever ready to help you, but it depends upon you as individuals whether this success shall be yours.

"Let no task be too small to receive your utmost careful attention. If you do that, you should be successful, and I believe you will.

"What Booker T. Washington stood for—the principle of work attention to duty, loyalty to cause—these especially, with these in front of you, you cadets can but be inspired."

Tuskegee Flying Unit Has Yet to Have Its First Plane Crack-up

MAR 7 - 1942

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala. —So far, none of the young men in training here at the Air Corps Advanced Flying School have had to be picked up in pieces. Nobody has cracked up himself nor his plane, nor had a serious mishap.

But when and if such a dark day comes, the medical corps stands ready to bind up the wounds. There is an infirmary and a station hospital, and a staff of highly trained medical men, and they're all colored.

First Army Hospital

In fact, this hospital is the first army hospital to have a colored man as its commanding officer.

The commanding officer in this case is Major DeHaven Hinkson, of Philadelphia, and more recently of Fort Bragg. His duties are administrative. Every inch a soldier, yet unable to disguise the soothing voice and nimble fingers that have made his medical career a remarkable one, Major Hinkson today stands in one of the most strategic spots in our armed forces.

Major McDonald Assists

Captain Maurice E. Johnson is aviation medical examiner, and Captain Harold E. Thornell is X-ray expert. He is a member of the American Society of Roentologists.

Dr. Foote Is Dentist

Then there is Lieutenant James E. Foote, who has charge of the hospital's dental work, and Lieutenant Alfred E. Thomas, cadet flight surgeon.

Lieutenant James P. Ramsey is commanding officer of the medical detachment; also assistant surgeon and ear, nose and throat specialist. His home is Philadelphia, and he studied medicine at Howard University, graduating in 1939. His undergraduate work was done at the University of Pennsylvania.

No Nurses Yet

He also directs the hospital laboratory, and is assisted in this by Private George Anderson, registered pharmacist, who is a graduate of Wayne University School of Pharmacy.

There are no nurses on duty at the hospital yet.

NAACP SHOULD FIRE WALTER WHITE INSTEAD OF DEAN WILLIAM PICKENS

MAR 7 - 1942

BY P. L. PRATTIS

Pittsburgh Courier — Pittsburgh, Penna.

NO, I DON'T want to see Walter White fired. I don't like to see anybody lose his job. Furthermore, whether Walter White believes it or not, I like him and wish him all the good in the world. Even now! But since Dean William Pickens has been kicked out by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, I can't resist the temptation to ask if there isn't a better reason to fire Walter than there was to give Pickens the air.

The ostensible reason for getting rid of Pickens was that he had visited the Tuskegee developments in aviation, including the 99th Pursuit Squadron of the United States Army, and had found them good. He went so far as to say so in an article syndicated through the Associated Negro Press. More, he called attention to the fact that the Army is engaged in fighting a war and has only so much time to devote to the issue of segregation, paramount to us. In effect, Pickens has been told that he should have known better than to write anything good about any kind of segregated project. He should have understood, when Dr. DuBois was fired, that the NAACP executive board would not stand for an official of the organization to mention segregation without denouncing it. Maybe Pickens did understand and maybe he didn't give a damn.

HAS RIGHT TO BE WRONG

WITH MY OWN ears, I have heard Walter sneer at the Jim Crow Tuskegee aviation project. That is all right. He has a right to sneer and a right to be wrong. I do not recall the names of those who might have filled the ranks of the sneerers when the NAACP supported the Jim Crow training camp for Negro officers in the last war. I think the NAACP refrained from sneering then because it felt it had made progress just to get recognition of the claim that Negro officers should be trained, that there should be Negro officers. The NAACP of that day felt that was a heluva victory.

That was a start twenty-five years ago. What do we have today? We have Negro infantry officers sitting in the same classes with whites at Fort Benning, Ga., Negro artillery officers polishing up with whites at Camp Lee, Va. From the segregation of the last war, concrete steps have been made toward integration. The picture isn't perfect, but the direction of the trend is definite. It is going to become more apparent as we move along.

TUSKEGEE OPENING REPRESENTS VICTORY

I THINK the race won a marvelous victory when it forced the War Department to provide for the training of Negro aviators in a separate camp. I think that victory meant as much or more than the victory won by the NAACP in 1917 when it persuaded the War Department to set up a Jim Crow officer's training camp. I think the chances for us moving toward integration from the separate project at Tuskegee today are much better than they seemed at Des Moines in 1917. I think the race, as a whole, is just as proud of the 99th Pursuit Squadron as it was of the 1917 segregated officer's training camp. I believe the rank and file of the NAACP is proud of the 99th Pursuit Squadron. I believe the rank and file of the race would propose that we make the most of the 99th while continuing our fight for complete integration into the Air Corps. But the way to do that is not to sneer at the project nor to discharge officials who seek to encourage the Negroes who are in the project and are trying to make the most of it.

The present NAACP set-up was against the suggestion of a Negro division as originally made by The Courier. Of course, the NAACP could not fire The Courier, so this newspaper proceeded to work for a Negro division because it realized that a separate division is better than no division at all. And it will continue to work with the NAACP for integration.

By OLLIE STEWART

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala. —"The finest demonstration of applied democracy that has taken place in any of the defense projects."

That's what you hear around here about the men who built the huge plant now occupied by the Air Corps Advanced Flying School. And when you learn the facts, you're inclined to agree that the thing is really remarkable.

McKissack and McKissack, who were awarded the contract by the government to construct the air field, don't need publicity. The firm has been known for years as one of the leading contracting firms in the country.

It Can Happen Here

But when, as the first colored company ever to receive a government bid to build an army flying field, they set out to employ colored and white labor on an equal basis, a lot of people said it couldn't be done.

It has been done. The McKissacks sub-let some of the jobs to white concerns. Some of their labor groups had white workers taking orders from colored men. And right here in Alabama, the gigantic task has been completed ahead of time—without a strike, without a fight and with a miraculous record of safety.

Heavens Stayed Intact

Not one man was killed on the job. For months, colored and white men have worked side by side, drawing the same pay—and the heavens didn't fall down. Some 1500 to 2,000 men worked on a 24-hour basis, and there hasn't been any trouble.

Calvin McKissack has in his private files a stack of letters of commendation — from a local sheriff, a judge, bank officials and numerous business men. They not only praise his firm, but are equally unstinted in their praise of the ordinary laborers who conducted themselves in a democratic manner.

"I've seen it all happen, day after day," Col. Donovan, a white man, told the writer, "but it still seems like a miracle to me."

Two Tuskegee Air Corps Men Leave For Officer School

These men, Sgt. Thomas B. Taylor and Sgt. Rothwell W. Burke, have been working with the Quartermaster's detachment under Capt. N. N. Rayner since the first troops arrived at Tuskegee late in the summer.

At the successful completion of their three months training in Wyoming, they will be commissioned second lieutenants in Quartermaster service.

Sergeant Taylor, of Hartford, Conn., is a graduate of Yale university, New Haven, and Fisk university, Nashville, Tenn. A finished concert pianist, Taylor is said to be a composer of much promise.

Sgt. Burke is a native of Washington, D. C., where he was graduated from Dunbar high school. Later he took a correspondence course from the University of Wisconsin. He was a member of the ROTC while at Dunbar.

Other sergeants recommended for officer's candidate schools expect orders anytime to report for special types of training leading to second lieutenant commissions.

Cooks of the Tuskegee Army Flying school are doing "extra curriculum" work, too, learning the latest vitamins for army vim, vigor and victory.

Now away at the army cook's school are Pvt. James White, Corp. Will Philyaw, Corp. Charles P. Ingram, and Pfc. Virgil Sutton. Those sent to study baking are Pfc. Willard Harper, Pvt. Francis Finch, and Pvt. Ezell Cheatom. Pvt. Harry Bush was selected to be trained as mess sergeant.

The post kitchens are equipped with standard up-to-date ranges, electric mixers, deep fat fryers, steam cookers, refrigerators and cold storage rooms.

Air Force Gets Women Mechanics

FORT WORTH, Tex.—(ANP)—Following the army air force policy of mobilizing all available civilian manpower to "keep 'em flying," the Tarrant Field Sub-depot here has initiated its first class of women mechanics, Capt. Llye L. Gilbert, commanding officer, announced this week.

Eight women, ranging in age from 17 to 30, all from the Fort Worth area, have been recruited through the United States Employment service and are receiving their initial instruction from Lt. E. P. Bachtell, Jr., sub-depot engineer officer.

Additional women are to be hired as quickly as possible, to form a school unit which will be sent to Duncan field, San Antonio, for advanced training.

Paid While Learning

"Mechanic-learners," as the recruits are called, are paid $75 a month during three-month training period, following which they receive the salary for the civil service position to which they are assigned.

Mechanic-learners receive instruction which qualifies them to become sheet metal workers, lathe operators, electrical inspectors, pattern-makers, engine mechanics — the whole field of airplane mechanical work.

It is the civilian crews of mechanics who will, in the future, be responsible for all major repair and maintenance work on army air force planes in the continental U. S. The air force mechanics whose places they take will thus be released for overseas duty in combat areas.

Limiting Negro Flyers.

DEC 27 1942

THE War Department recently announced that it was satisfied with the Jim Crow experimental training of Negro pilots at Tuskegee Institute.

Maj. Gen. James R. Ulio, adjutant general of the Army, is quoted as having made the following statement:

"From results so far obtained, it is believed that the squadrons will give an excellent account of themselves in combat and that they will be a credit to their race and to Americans everywhere."

The War Department said that it would be unwise to expand the present program of training Negroes in the Army Air Corps. Therefore, for the time being, colored flyers will be confined to pursuit squadrons. They will not be permitted to qualify for bomber pilots, flight engineers, navigators, bombardiers and in the varied branches of technical air services and air force schools.

The department said also that the Jim Crow outfit at Tuskegee was an experiment and "it is not desirable further to commit the limited facilities for the training and development of combat pilots and combat crews.

It is as strange to us why Negro flyers had to be used for experimental purposes as it was queer that the War Department had to set up a special segregated unit to train citizens of the United States to fight a war for democracy. It is no less unreasonable that such a statement as was quoted above should now be issued in view of its conflicting logic. If the Negro flyers have made a good account of themselves why shouldn't the program be expanded for greater participation? Why shouldn't Negroes be bombardiers, navigators and flight engineers? Why should the United States Army have to experiment with Negroes or any other citizens of the United States? Is there any doubt about their ability? There shouldn't be. The record of colored fliers will convince the most prejudiced that they are just as good as any other fliers when given the same opportunities.

The nation needs fliers. It needs a large number of them. It needs white pilots and bombardiers. It needs black pilots and bombardiers. It needs all it can get. It needs pursuit pilots to chase the enemy aircraft. It needs the bomber pilots, be they white or black. And the Axis soldier that is killed by a bomb loosed by a black flyer will be just as dead and for as long a period as though he be killed by a white flyer.

There should be no further experiments. We don't have time for racial eccentricities whether they be promulgated by civilians or by the War Department. We don't have time to shelve potentially good flyers because they have a dark skin.

WEST POINT CADET GETS PILOT WINGS

TUSKEGEE INST., Ala., Dec. 24—Cadet Robert Bernard Tressville, native of Bay City, Texas, but former resident of Fort Benning, Ga., and Philadelphia, who went from the United States Military Academy at West Point, N. Y., to the 99th Pursuit Squadron, Tuskegee, Ala., to secure the aviation phase of his training, was among cadets completing the course at the Tuskegee Army Flying School in special graduation day ceremonies.

The youth, scheduled to receive his [illegible] from West Point the [illegible] part of next year, will, at that time, become the sixth Negro to graduate from the U. S. Military Academy, the previous five being Henry Ossian Flipper, John H. Alexander, the late Col. Charles Young, Benjamin O. Davis Jr., and Richard H. Fowler. Tressville is a nationally rated tennis star.

The Atlanta Daily World, Atlanta, Ga.

TUSKEGEE, Ala.—(S N S)—With mechanical promptness, at exactly 10 a. m. Friday morning Dec. 11, the commanding officer of the T. A. F. S. entered the Post Theatre and the graduation class, 42 K, popped to attention. It was another graduation day ceremonies of aviation cadets at this base.

As an introduction Colonel Kimble related his first vision of an aircraft in flight. He stated: "The first airplane I ever saw in flight was made of bamboo, light wood and linen, a gigantic box kite in appearance and bicycle chains used in connection with transmitting power from the engine to the propellor. Today, I question if any one would wish to take such a craft off, fly it a short distance and land straight ahead." He continued, "We no longer think of air flying as pioneering. Though such pioneering has been the result of groups, the individuals within those groups had to be strong of heart and strong of body."

The commanding officer, a veteran flyer himself, proceeded to elucidate his words by saying: "You, as pilots of fighter aircraft, though supported by man's most modern inventions and devices, though traveling sometimes in groups, must possess individual ability to fly and fight in your aircraft, and you must possess that knowledge of yourself and confidence and esprit de corps which will carry you through many hours of lone operation, and which will bring you through many tight places where no assistance other than your skill can aid."

Thus spoke the colonel to these new eager hawken, their elated friends, and student cadets. In closing, he reminded them: "The clear purpose which has been the guiding light in the development of aviation in the past, you share from this day, and it is with pleasure that you receive your wings and join the group which have gone before you to add to this great Air Force."

Stepping out of a high-powered P-39 Airacobra after a thrilling exhibition flight over the Tuskegee Flying school, Cadet Edward C. Gleed of Lawrence, Kans., gets round of applause for his skillful handling of the ship marking the first time a Negro aviation cadet has flown a P-39.

Tuskegee Cadet Anxious To Go Back To England For Air Crack At Nazis

TUSKEGEE, Ala. — "Yes, we were quartered in an old English castle during the three months I spent in England this past summer with American troops overseas," says Cadet V. J. Richardson, now learning how to solo at the prmary field near here.

"I was one of a group that was actually quartered in an old bird house. Don't get the wrong impression, though, as that bird house had several rooms. We also had running water and heat. It seems the duke who once owned the castle had a wife who had many birds, so that the house was constructed for them and now is known as the bird house."

Cadet Richardson, whose home address is New York City, only a few weeks ago came all the way back from overseas to enter training here as a aviation cadet.

"My application for cadet training was in long before we went overseas," he explains. "And my application was finally acted on favorably and I was ordered back to the States."

The cadet says that while censorship regulations prevent his revealing where his outfit was actually located in England, he is allowed to describe living conditions as the troops found them over there.

"My most remarkable experience, while over there, was the sight of about 70 German bombers in one formation which raided that part of England one day last summer. The American troops, as soon as the air raid alarm was sounded, gathered in what were known as 'slit trenches.' These trenches were six feet deep and three feet wide. There we stayed until the all-clear signal came.

"In fact, on my last night over there, we had an alarm and we were in the trenches when I first learned about the order to send me back. I left the next day for home."

Cadet Richardson says:

"I want to finish my training to become a pursuit pilot and then be sent back to England to finish the job."

Tuskegee Pilots Told They Need Courage, Confidence

Fifth Class Given Wings At All-Negro Army Flying School

TUSKEGEE, Ala.—(SNS) — On Wednesday morning, August 5, at 10 a. m. another page in the annals of American aviation was written when the fifth class of Aviation Cadets at the Tuskegee Army Flying School, Tuskegee, Ala., received wings.

Characteristic of this ceremony, as previous graduation exercises was the usual marked simplicity and deep sincerity, indicative of the life and ideals of the aviation cadet at this base.

SHOULD THINK BACK

"It is but natural that in the happiness and satisfaction which you feel today at having completed your courses as Aviation Cadets and becoming rated pilots in the Air Forces of the Army you should think back over the road which you have traveled since your thoughts first centered on the desire to fly, declared Col. Kimble in his address to the candidates as he began a retrospective history of transportation including man's innate desire to conquer the air.

"Your desire and determination to master the air are typical of the developments which have marked many discoveries and tremendous man's progress throughout the ages. In most instances these great scientific and mechanical advances have come as a result of the desire and determination to improve our health, living conditions and to extend the span of life. In some instances these developments have occurred as a necessary means of protecting one group of men from aggressor peoples.

"...But few young men lived who did not wish to fly....Air power is not the only weapon, but it has proved the way for success You have been trained in this school for assignment to fighter squadrons, single aircraft with individual pilots. You and your plane are one. It calls for great individual prowess. To acquire that, fighter pilots must have courage confidence, and ability. Your graduation is indicative of the fact that trust is placed in you to carry out this mission."

REGULAR COMBINATION

In closing, the Colonel advised, "As your work progresses, you will find that your successful operation depends not only on these factors, but on the work of others: the men who sustain the ships and others on the ground who make it possible for the fighter pilot to take the air....It is a peculiar combination: one of individualism and self-reliance, and another of realization and respect for teamwork... Without team cooperation, no great success can be accomplished."

The diplomas and commissions were awarded by Colonel Kimble, while Colonels Parrish and Davis presented the successful graduates with their wings.

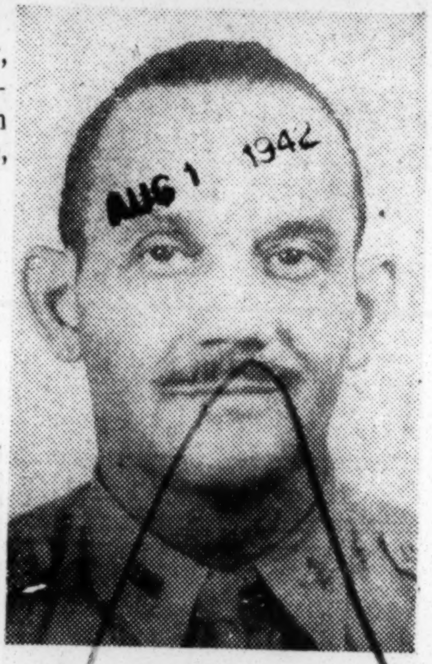
Band Director



First Lieutenant Louis Drye, band and orchestra leader at the Tuskegee Institute for 27 years, recently was called to active duty and assigned to the Tuskegee Army Flying School as band director of the new post band.

Lieutenant Drye is a native of Raleigh, N. C., and has an impressive background, both military and musical. He graduated from the Conn National School of Music at Chicago, where he received the bachelor of music degree. Later, he took a postgraduate course at the Eastman School of Music, Rochester, N. Y.

Lieutenant Drye enlisted in the regular army on August 7, 1909, at Jefferson Barracks, Missouri. He was commissioned October 15, 1917, and then saw service overseas, where he was wounded in action. He was awarded the silver star and the purple hart, citations for valor in action.

Relieved of duty because of injuries from being gassed, Lt. Drye was discharged in May, 1919. He was recommissioned, in the officers reserve corps, in March, 1924.

Segregation

A good friend of mine writes: "Someone was telling me the other day that you are tending to re-emphasize the philosophy with which your earlier life was associated, especially the importance of complete integration of Negroes into American life and the desirability of developing the upper tenth of the group in the whole range of the most liberal arts. I wonder if you have been writing on these topics recently or whether you have a statement that you could give me that would sum up your experience and thoughts on race relations."

This query misinterprets the present possibilities of racial dogma. There is no yes or no to the question of racial segregation. There is no absolute answer as to how far cultural advance in the future is coming through a Talented Tenth or through great mass movements. When John Russworm graduated from Bowdoin he had to answer the following question: Has the Negro a chance to develop in America or must he migrate to Africa? There were no alternatives. He must answer this paradox. He went to Africa. Later there came the question: Shall we endure slavery in the United States or shall we revolt? Here again was a problem answered in one way by Frederick Douglass and in another by John Brown. In the latter nineteenth century when I started my career there was a grave and insistent question: Shall we educate Negroes to work or shall we educate them for entrance into modern culture. I chose the latter as the answer. But today the matter is far more complicated and cannot be met by any one remedy or any one answer. It must be a matter of degrees and emphases and this will illustrate what I mean:

The Tuskegee Flying Field

I rode to Tuskegee the other day and in passing through the village noted the peculiar fact that there is not a single street sign in the village which shows the stranger how to get to Tuskegee Institute; and yet, of course without the Institute, Tuskegee would be absolutely unknown. Then, too, getting to the flying field which was my objective, had some difficulties of the same kind. We rode perhaps ten miles and then faced war in an unexpected aspect. No, said the black sentinel, we could not visit the field without a written order from the commanding officer. I was for turning back but other counsels prevailed. We telephoned to Tuskegee Institute and after some red tape entered the field. It was a vast place, new with buildings, filled with busy men, surmounted by an observation tower.

Moreover, the great majority of officers and all the men are of Negro descent; the commanding officer is a Negro. But all this is not a matter of race. The astonishing thing is that here in a matter of the world's latest technique, flying, are a group of colored men who are learning and doing. Who are not simply helping but commanding and ordering. It is one of the greatest forward steps in the modern world for colored people. In not all the Negroid West Indies, certainly not in Africa, and only to small extent in Asia, have dark-skinned people gained this knowledge and mastery. Easily in the future it may spell their emancipation and freedom. Yet it is race segregation. The small group of white officers eat separately and are housed separately. In the imparting of technical knowledge there is still reluctance to open certain branches. The pattern of Alabama race segregation lies over the field and disputes the pattern of racial expression and autonomy.

Attitudes

There is no sense in my saying or in anyone's saying: "This is right;" "this is wrong!" "I will never accept segregation;" "I welcome segregation!" No! Any statement like this has got to be modified and carefully modified. I am glad of the Tuskegee flying field. I count it a great step toward the freedom of American Negroes and of the colored peoples of the world. I regard any segregation based solely upon adventitious differences of color and hair, as not simply foolish but dangerous. Take now these two propositions and make what you will of them; call them contradictions. In a sense there is contradiction; but so far as that is concerned the whole position of the Negro in the modern world is contradictory; and it does not settle the contradiction to yell and wave our hands and make dogmatic and futile statements. We know the dangers of segregation; we hate it and fight against it. We are segregated; we are going to be segregated for years, if not for centuries; and we are going to use that segregation in every possible way to increase our knowledge and power.

Tuskegee Training Mechanics

SEP 11 1942

Specialists Are Needed to Keep Up Equipment

SEP 11 1942

TUSKEGEE, Ala. — Vital need to enlist approximately 100,000 skilled mechanics and technicians immediately in the Army Air Forces, Signal Corps and Ordnance department was announced by the War Department recently.

Keeping pace with the mounting flow of war material from the industrial reservoir of the nation, these specialists are needed now to keep equipment in operating order. So great is the present emergency that a special recruiting campaign has been launched to find men who can step immediately into important maintenance jobs.

Army training schools are already teaching thousands of men this kind of work, and later in the year their rate of output should be sufficient to keep pace with the need. But between now and October 15, when the campaign will close, the gap must be stopped by voluntary enlistments.

To be eligible, men must be between the ages of 18 and 44 inclusive, citizens of the United States and physically qualified to general standards for military service. They will enlist as privates, but noncommissioned officer or technician ratings are often given men doing jobs of this sort. Skilled men are needed, and promotion should be rapid with commensurate increases in pay. Whereas a private receives $50 a month, a master sergeant, the highest noncommissioned grade, received $138 to which certain allowances may be added. In considering these amounts, it should be remembered that the Army pays all a man's expenses—food, clothing, shelter and medical care.

To make sure that industry's production program is not upset, all men who wish to enlist as mechanics and technicians now must be cleared by their local Selective Service board before acceptance by the army.

For a limited period this recruiting program offers trained men an opportunity to choose any one of the three branches, Air Force, Signal Corps, or Ordnance department, for which their experience and skill qualifies them. These men are expected, after a minimum of on-the-job instruction to familiarize them with army machines and army ways, to qualify as maintenance experts.

The Army Air Forces want men to serve as radio operators and radio mechanics, as aircraft armorers, mechanics, welders and metal workers.

The Signal Corps wants men whose experience qualifies them as telephone and telegraph cable splicers, telephone and telegraph installer-repairmen, radio operators, telegraphic printer operators, telegraphic printer installer-repairmen, and telephone and telegraph wire chiefs.

Because of the importance which the Army attaches to finding these needed specialists quickly, a special staff or recruiters will be at work throughout the United States, equipped to answer all questions. Men who are interested should visit their local recruiting stations. Postmasters can direct them to the nearest station where full information is available.

Once the qualifications of an applicant are satisfactorily determined, he will be given a thorough physical examination. If no disability is discovered, he will be sworn in immediately as a private in the Army of the United States.

All recruits will be sent to a reception center for the same kind of "processing" which every man receives when he enters the Army. This is a matter of a few days at most. From the reception center, Air Forces men will go to an Air Forces station, Signal Corps men will be sent to the nearest Signal Corps Replacement Training center and Ordnance men will proceed to the Ordnance Department Training center.

Here they will begin their real military training and also learn the maintenance jobs for which the army so sorely needs them. By putting their civilian skills in uniform these men will fight with the tools they've always worked with.

99TH PILOTS CALLED JUST AN 'EXPERIMENT'

Adjutant General Gives War Dept. Stand On Negro Airmen

DEC 19 1942

By ENOC P. WATERS JR.

Until the 99th Pursuit Squadron has its baptism of fire in actual combat, Negroes will be permitted to fly only pursuit ships.

The "white only" sign will continue on all U.S. Air Corps bombers and transports, despite the country's need for pilots.

Negroes will not be accepted for duty as bombardiers and navigators.

That in effect was the pronouncement this week by Maj. Gen. J. A. Ulio, adjutant general of the army, in a letter to Rep. Raymond S. McKeough of Illinois.

McKeough, who has evinced greater interest in Negro aviation than any other single congressman, had asked Ulio for certain information regarding Negroes and the air corps. In response, General Ulio made the following statement:

"There are many factors that enter into the development of good combat pilots; temperatment, a high degree of initiative, quick reactions, and natural aptitude all play important parts. While these qualities are found in varying degrees in men of all races, the length and exact nature of the training necessarily varies with men of different characteristics.

"No Experience"

"At the beginning of the present emergency, the War Department was without experience in the training and use of colored pilots, and hence was unable to determine whether the same training that produces excellent white pilots would serve for the production of colored pilots of comparable quality, or whether changes in the length of the training or in the emphasis on certain phases of training would be necessary for satisfactory results.

"The new field had to be explored before the answers to these questions could be known, and this had to be accomplished without interference with the production of top-notch pilots at the rate required for the rapidly expanding air force.

"The decision was made, therefore, to start with the training of colored men as pursuit pilots and, based on this experience and on the performance of colored pilots in combat, to determine the extent to which the training could be expanded to provide colored pilots for the more complicated and more difficult categories of combat aviation. To some extent, therefore, the present training program at Tuskegee and elsewhere is an experiment.

"Until the first units produced at Tuskegee have been tried and proven in combat, it is not desirable further to commit the limited facilities for the training and development of combat pilots and combat crews."

Deny Differences

The statement was immediately attacked from several sources. Cornelius R. Coffey, president of the Coffey School of Aeronautics, said that according to his experience the requisites for a good pilot vary with individuals and not with races.

At his school at Harlem airport, recently awarded a $250,000 contract for the training of civilian pilots, Coffey said he has taught both white and Negroes to fly and has been unable to detect any differences that might be explained by race.

Another aviation authority who because of his connection with the armed forces asked that his name not be used, confirmed Coffey's observation.

"I've been in aviation since before the last war when I was a pilot. Since then I have engaged professionally in civilian aviation. I have instructed and flown with men of several races, and I haven't noted any difference. One of the fliers I consider among the best to be found anywhere is a Negro."

Ulysses S. Keys, member of the legal redress committee of the N.A.A.C.P., said that if the army recognized differences in the natural aptitudes of various races, that he had not heard of similar experiments being conducted before Chinese and Filipinos were admitted to the air corps as pilots.

General Ulio's statement was the first indication given that the 99th was regarded by the army as an experiment. Prior to the establishment of the 99th, the army and the Civilian Aeronautics Authority cooperated in setting up what they called a special demonstration program at Harlem airport in Chicago.

At the time, it was regarded by the army and the CAA as an experiment to determine the fitness of Negroes for military aviation. Upon its completion, it was regarded as a success by both agencies and the 99th was established supposedly as an integral part of the air corps and not as a further experiment.

Even Opposition

It now seems, as a result of General Ulli's statement that what first appeared to be opposition of the army to training Negroes and whites together in aviation, is actually opposition to the presence of Negroes in the air corps even in segregated units.

Further evidence of this is the failure to date to train a ground crew for the 100th Pursuit Squadron because a Negro technical school is not yet available.

The crew for the 99th was trained at Chanute field in Illinois, but apparently a reluctance on the part of the army to train other Negro troops at the field has not only prevented the activation of the 100th, but has also prevented the transferral of the 99th to a combat zone. Such a step, it can be seen, would rob the field at Tuskegee of the necessary technical complement required to operate.

So it now appears that the results of this new experiment cannot be determined until the 99th gets its baptismal of fire under combat conditions; that the 99th cannot be transferred until new ground troops are trained; that these can't be trained until an all-colored technical school is set up; and finally that even after all this occurs, the army might decide Negroes are still unqualified to man the more complex type of army aircraft.

LIFE AT TUSKEGEE FLYING SCHOOL

Dear Auntie: Your very interesting and kind letter arrived some few days ago. I was pleased to receive it. Would you like to know how an Aviation Cadet spends his day?

We live in a long building divided into a number of bays, each day accommodating 20 cadets. Picture the turmoil at 5 every morning—reveille. At that time we dress, make up our beds, and perform all necessary duties, such as sweeping around our cots, putting our clothes away, and making ourselves presentable for the day's work. At 6:15 we fall in ranks and are marched to breakfast. The government allows each flying Cadet a dollar a day for food, in addition to his regular salary of $75 a month.

I report to the flying line at 7 a. m., along with one half of my class. The other half reports to the ground school. From week to week the precedure is reversed, and I go to the ground school in the morning and [illegible] in the afternoon.

So at 7 o'clock I meet my instructor. He takese this opportunity to point out mistakes we have been making and how best to correct them. In addition, if we are to begin some new phase of flying, he will explain just what we are expected to do. A typical morning schedule will run along this order: from 7:30 until 8:30, a period of three-ship formation work, then a rest period until 9:30; from 9:30 until 10:30, a period of instrument flying; then from 11 to 12 another period of formation flying. This schedule is not fixed but varies from day to day. We have just begun cross-country flights, which occur about once a week.

This is probably the most interesting phase of the instruction and the part I like best. Our first few cross-country flights are simple, consisting of short trips to points easy to locate. As we become more experienced, the flights become longer. Finally, our last three cross-country flights consist in leaving for some distant point during the day, and then flying back that night. We are on our own for the first time, and it is our responsibility to go from the field to our destination and return. We prepare our own maps, compute wind corrections and ground spee., and calculate just how long it will take to get from place to place.

Another phase of the instruction I think would prove interesting to you is formation flying. After 2 or 3 hours of dual instruction, during which time we are thoroughly indoctrinated with the technique, we are permitted to fly alone. Our instructor continues, however, to lead all formations. After we are proficient in 3-ship work, we progress to 6-ship formation work.

Another interesting and important phase of instruction is instrument flying. We are taught to control the airplane relying solely on the instruments in it. We fly with our instructor the first 2 or 3 hours and learn how to maintain straight and level flight, how to make gentle turns to the right and left, and how to climb and dive. After we are proficient we start flying on the radio beam. First, we learn to identify the various signals of the radio beam; secondly we learn to orient ourselves in any one of the 4 beam zones; and finally, we learn to fly a given leg of that beam into the "cone of silence."

At 12 o'clock we report back to the cadet barracks for the noonday meal. As is natural, we never forget flying and airplanes, and consequently, while we eat, the principal topic is flying. It gets in your blood.

At 12:45 we begin the afternoon schedule, and report to the "buzzer room" where we learn to send and receive messages using the international code. This room has 3 long rows of tables to which are connected telegraph keys and headsets. Each Flying Cadet sits to his assigned key and headset, and takes on paper letters sent from a master key at the head of the room.

At 2 o'clock we report to a class in Meteorology—the science of the weather. This is interesting and useful stuff.

Our next class, at 3 o'clock and on alternate days, is either Math or Engines. Math is pie for me, but Engines is unquestionably the finest bit of knowledge in the world. But when you reflect that a good understanding of the stuff may cause you to live a day or two longer, you get in and mop it up.

We are through with our duties around 4 o'clock in the afternoon and are free to do as we please in the way of recreation. It is necessary, however, to get in 2 full and complete hours of exercise per week. I get mine by lolligaging beneath some splendid shade tree, twiddling my thumbs while I snooze in the warm good afternoon sunshine with one of my classmates who has a similar tastee.

At 6:30 we are ready for dinner. This is the big meal. We are ready for it. As at breakfast and luncheon, we talk flying, and try to outdo each other with wild stories about our experiences. It is the Tall Tale Hour. After dinner we may go to the early movie at the Post Theatre if we are rich enough, or to the cadet recreation hall. Here we may play pool or billiards, bridge, or read magazines. If the rare mood strikes, or might study. I am in that far corner, stuffed deeply in the good, overstuffed chair. Maybe I am pulling on my pipe. Maybe I am frankly sleeping. I probably am. We are not allowed to leave the confines of the post, except over the weekend. At ten o'clock all lights are out and all cadets are in bed.

What happens on Saturdays and Sundays? On Saturdays our schedule runs along as usual until 6 in the evening. In the meantime, we have prepared for our weekly inspection. We mus. have our lockers cleaned out and properly arranged; we must have all our shoes shined; we must have all our uniforms pressed; we must have clean linen on our beds; in general, we must be as immaculate as possible. Promptly at 9 o'clock the commandant of Flying Cadets begins his inspection. He looks over each cadet and his equipment and reports him for anything not in proper place. Inspection lasts about an hour.

At 6 o'clock in the evening, we may sign out in the departure book, not having to report back to the field until 7:30 Sunday night. This is a privilege, it seems, and can and is withheld for any infraction of the rules. We are allowed to go anywhere within a radius of fifty miles of the field.

No Taffy To 99th Airmen

THE country has every right to feel proud of the sensible words spoken by Lieut. Col. Benjamin O. Davis, Jr., executive officer for the troops at the Tuskegee Army Flying school, in his public address to the 14 men in the graduating class who received their diplomas and wings on the eve of Independence Day.

Col. Davis spoke as a soldier to soldiers, and directed his remarks with praise, but not with empty encomiums.

"I would say, that, at this time this school has graduated pilots who can fly no better and no worse than the graduates of other air corps schools. You are John Doe, second lieutenant, Army Air Forces, who knows something about military life and something about flying. You have a great deal to learn about administrative duties in your squadron. You have yet to learn to fly as a member of a combat team in a fighting airplane."

It is pleasing for the people to know that the young Colonel is out for business, and is not playing to the grandstand with any mushy, racy talk to these fighting boys. It could and would do them no good, and would perhaps serve some sinister purpose down the line.

Comparisons are, for the most part odious at best, and when the Colonel gets it over at the beginning that "you're no better or no worse," than anybody else, just get out there and make good, he has done the nation and his race a service, and himself a bang-up job.

Tuskegee To Augment Its Air Training

WASHINGTON.—Well authenticated rumors here, although not confirmed officially, indicate that the number of Negro airmen at Tuskegee flying field is to be tripled. The Ninety-ninth squadron is to be moved out. Three other squadrons are to be formed there and these will have the requisite number of ground men to service the pilots.

The large number of civilian instructors now in training at Chanute Field, Ill., are to be moved to Tuskegee where an entire school for training mechanics and expert personnel is to be set up. It is probable that 4,000 men including the pilots will be stationed at the Tuskegee field when the three squadrons are developed.

The CAA program at Tuskegee is to be greatly enlarged in order to give preliminary training leading up to army flying.

The Ninety-ninth will be given further training in combat service probably at another field. With the additional squadrons to be trained a complete fighting or pursuit group will be formed with the Ninety-ninth as the nucleus.

Expand Tuskegee Officers' Quota

TUSKEGEE, Ala.—With the ever-expanding army air forces program the Tuskegee Army flying school is increasing its quota of officers to meet its administrative purposes.

One of the most recently assigned officers to the famous sepia flying school is First Lieut. Ulysses Grant Lee, Jr., a graduate of Howard university in 1935 with Suma Cum Laude. He received his M.A. degree the following year from the department of English at Howard. In 1937, he was appointed faculty member at Lincoln university, Pennsylvania, in the department of English.

Army Discloses Race To Be At All Air Bases

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(ANP)—The war department contemplates assignment of at least one Negro aviation squadron to every army air force station in the country, according to reports by Rep. West (D. Texas) who said he received this information when he protested plans to assign a Negro unit to the new air station at Eagle Pass, Tex.

Declaring that he was transmitting to the war department complaints of Eagle Pass residents, West said he explained to the department the lack of social centers of any kind for Negroes in Eagle Pass, or any other community with Pass, and warned them that assignment of Negro fliers to Eagle little or no Negro population, would create perplexing problems for the fliers and for the town.

In reply, the war department officials are said to have advised him that the Selective Service act required induction of army personnel without regard to race, creed or color, and that to absorb the number of Negroes taken into the air forces it would be necessary to assigned them to each air force station in the United States.

When asked about West's statements, a war department press official said that the entire matter was under consideration.

U. S. ARMY AIR FORCE

Last week a recruiting rally for civil aviation students was held in Chicago. Some 400 young men between the ages of 18 and 26, all high school graduates, were present. Civil aeronautics and United States Army Air force officials who addressed the prospective flyers were amazed at the number and type of young men at the meeting.

They were apologetic and somewhat embarrassed when the young men began inquiring about admittance to the Army Air Corps. Only 200 Negroes a year can be admitted to the air corps. That means only very few from Chicago or any other major city can be inducted into this branch of the service.

The Coffey School of Aeronautics in Chicago which trains civilian pilots under government contract has a waiting list of 400 men qualified and anxious to study aviation. It is estimated that several thousand aspirants with all the necessary requisites have been drafted into the Army while awaiting admittance to the Air Corps.

Ironically, with this potential air force manpower being dissipated, the government is feverishly seeking Air Corps cadets. Hardly a day passes but that the radio and newspapers appeal for men—white men—to join the Air Corps.

The reason for this paradox is the selfishness of a few Race "leaders" who were influential in getting the Army to admit Negroes into the Air Corps under a segregated plan that necessarily places a limit on the number permitted to participate.

For several years the Chicago Defender has advocated the admittance of Negroes into Army aviation on a basis of equality with whites. We pointed out the danger of a policy of racial separation which is now penalizing our young people interested in aviation.

The plan now in vogue is more of a hindrance than a help to the race as well as to the nation. The sooner the federal government realizes that the most effective way to build up a large and strong Air Corps is to open the ranks to all without limitation, the sooner we as a nation will be ready to make our full contribution to the successful prosecution of the war.

Need Trained Men In Army Air Forces

Age Limits, 18 To 44, Promotion And Pay Increase

TUSKEGEE, Ala.—New opportunities are now available for men between the ages of 18 and 44 inclusive, in the Army Air Forces who are trained as aid mechanics and radio operators to enlist before October 15, 1942.

They will enlist as privates, but non-commissioned officers or technical ratings are often given men doing jobs of this nature. Skilled men are needed, and promotion should be rapid with commensurate increases in pay.

CLEAR LOCAL BOARDS

All men who wish to enlist as mechanics and technicians now must be cleared by their local Selective Service Board before acceptance by the Army.

For a limited period this recruiting program offers trained men an opportunity to choose any one of the three branches, Air Forces, Signal Corps, or Ordnance Department.

JOBS TO BE FILLED

SIGNAL CORPS

The Signal Corps wants men whose experience qualifies them as telephone and telegraph cable splicers, telephone and telegraph installer-repairmen, radio operators, telegraphic printer operators, telegraphic printer installer-repairmen, and telephone and telegraph wire chiefs.

EXPECT AIR CORPS TO UP NEGRO QUOTA

JUL 18 1942

A ray of hope for young Negroes interested in the United States Army Air Corps appeared this week with confirmation by the War department that plans to increase the quota of Negro flying cadets is under consideration.

First indication that some move was contemplated with reference to Negroes and the air corps came over two months ago when the United States Civil Service commission began recruiting Negroes for training as instructors in the technical branch of the air corps.

While the Defender was awaiting confirmation of reports that these men were to be used in an all-Negro army air corps technical school on the pattern of Chanute field where they are now in training, Rep. Milton H. West of Texas, last week, reported to congress that he had been informed by the War Department that Negro units were to be attached to every army air force station in this country.

Monday, in answer to the Defender's query, the War Department declared that "flying as well as ground crews" are included in "the widespread distribution of Negro units as in other arms of the service" under contemplation.

Such action is expected to relieve bottleneck in the air corps which created one of the most ironic situations in our national government.

With the establishment of the Jim Crow army air base at Tuskegee institute, born at the suggestion of a group of "Uncle Toms," a quota of 200 Negroes a year to be admitted to the air corps as flying cadets was set up because of the limitations of facilities provided for the training of Negroes.

Applications for berths at Tuskegee were so numerous that a waiting list many times larger than the possible enrollment soon developed. Many of the Negroes qualifying and placed on the waiting list were inducted into other branches of the army.

These appeals, however, as recruiting officers frankly admitted, were directed only at white youths. The large pool of potential Negro flyers was overlooked.

Only outlet for Negroes was civilian pilot training program until recently when it was transferred from Civil Aeronautics administration to the army.

Regulations now require that candidates for civilian aviation courses qualify for army air corps. Candidates successfully qualifying for army air corps are ruled ineligible for civilian training on the theory that all men physically and mentally fit should be in combat forces.

Others not meeting stiff army requirements were admitted to civilian courses where they train as instructors and for other capacities.

In case of Negroes, this regulation works unusual hardships. After qualifying for army aviation training, Negroes are prevented by limited quota from entrance into army air corps, and at the same time are rendered ineligible for civilian training.

The prospect is that in a few months, Negroes will be practically excluded from federally sponsored aviation programs.

Truman Gibson, assistant to Judge William Hastie, civilian aide to secretary of war, who had been asked several months ago for report on rumored all-Negro air corps technical school, also seemed unable to solve problem of bottleneck caused by War Department jim crow policy in air corps.

Apparently, however, the matter which was carried to other War Department officials has brought about a study of the problem with the proposed new plan made public by Rep. West, being the result.

Under the new plan, it is proposed that other flight and ground squadrons be established for Negroes at army air force bases throughout the country, thus making possible the admission of more Negroes in army aviation.

While this plan is discriminatory, since units will be set up on the basis of race, it will make available to the government several thousand potential flyers now serving in other military capacities—easily filled by others—or idly awaiting their turn on a mile-long waiting list.

To date the Defender still has no explanation from Gibson of the active recruiting of Negroes by U. S. civil service commission for training as technical instructors for army air corps.

Rep. West said he was informed of the plan to admit more Negroes to the air corps when he transmitted to War Department protests of Eagle Pass, Texas, citizens against assigning Negro unit to a new air station located there.

So far as can be learned, the navy contemplates no change in its policy which prevents Negroes from entrance into navy air corps.

The marine corps, which also uses flyers, will not accept Negro pilots.

Each Air Base May Receive Negro Unit

Texas Congressman Told Plan Under Study

Washington, July 10 (AP)—Representative West (D.,-Texas) said today the War Department was contemplating assignment of at least one Negro aviation squadron to every army air force station in the country.

He received this information, he said, when transmitting to the War Department complaints of Eagle Pass, Texas, citizens against reported plans to assign a Negro unit to the new air station there.

West said he explained to the War Department that there were no churches, shows or social centers of any kind for Negroes in Eagle Pass; that it was his understanding only two Negroes, an aged couple, presently lived in the comm[unity].

War Department Replies.

Assignment of Negro fliers to Eagle Pass, or any other community with little or no Negro population, would create perplexing problems for the fliers and for the town, West contended.

In reply, War Department officials advised him, he said, that the Selective Service act required induction of army personnel without regard to race, creed or color, and that to absorb the number of Negroes taken into the air forces it would be necessary to assign them to each air force station in the United States.

Asked about West's statements, a War Department press official said that the entire matter was under study.

RACES

The Ninety-Ninth Squadron

Under Alabama's sun the first Negro fighter squadron in the world was training last week in circumstances which might have exasperated Job.

Sepia Soldiers. The Tuskegee school to train pilots for the 99th Fighter Squadron of the Army Air Forces was established in July 1941. Primary pilot training began on a small field near Tuskegee Institute, the famed Negro college, was carried on into its basic and advanced stages in November and January at a spanking new airport every bit as good as those built for white pilots. Candidates were chosen by the same rigorous examinations applied to white folks. The supervisory post officers, including instructors in basic and primary stages, were white.

Tuskegee's Negroes faced two problems: 1) learning to fly; 2) learning to become aggressive, when every tradition had taught them submissiveness. The raw material was good. Of these Negro cadets, 57% had had technical studies in school, the average had had three and a half years of college. Of the first 81 cadets accepted, 44 were from the South, 26 from the North, six from the Middle West, five from the Far West. They were anxious, eager, studied hard, flew hard, busted buttons bulging their chests at inspection.

Prize pupil was tall, lean, handsome Benjamin O. Davis Jr., first Negro ever accorded the traditional "recognition" by upperclassmen at the end of his plebe year at West Point. (His father, a Brigadier General, is an assistant to the Army's Inspector General.) Tuskegee's Negroes were as proud as all get-out when young Davis won his wings.

Trouble came in the irresponsible phrases of the excitable, dissatisfied Negro press. For months Negro editors pointedly ignored the Tuskegee flying school. When they could no longer ignore it, they poured out tirades against "Uncle Toms"—the Negroes who were willing to be in Negro units. One member of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People who praised the 99th Fighter Squadron and who dared castigate critics of segregation was read out of the organization. One Negro weekly which derives advertising revenue from manufacturers of skin bleaches and hair straighteners—and which nevertheless proclaims the superiority of the Negro race—regularly inveighed against segregation at Tuskegee.

Trouble also came from white planters of the region, who watched their cheap help skitter off the fields to get better jobs at the Army post. The planters referred contemptuously to "that nigger airport." A white planter telephoned that he would kill the first Negro soldier who ever again waved greetings to his womenfolk.

An officer called a meeting of white farmers, told them that this is just what Hitler wanted, just this kind of division among the U.S. people; Goebbels would be delighted. In view of the grim problems of this war, couldn't he count on their cooperation? When he finished talking the white men solemnly shook his hand.

Thanks to the efforts of Lieut. Colonel Noel Francis Parrish, the school's director of flight training, a Kentuckian, to those of Oregon-born Colonel Kimble, the Post Commander, to the patient understanding of such Negroes as Lieut. Colonel Ben Davis, and to the gradual acceptance by its Alabama neighbors, the 99th squadron is in being—and a great credit to the nation. It is almost ready to move to a tactical field.

MEN OF THE 99TH

Colored Aviators

Today China finds herself in a critical position because of the lack of trained airmen desperately needed to stem the devastating sweep of Japanese air power. At the same time, we in this country are deliberately indulging in the luxury of seeing the probability of a Chinese defeat by not permitting over 957 licensed native American pilots to aid China. But what is worse, we ourselves flatly refuse that wealth of capable man power in the building up of our own air strength!

I refer to the untapped reservoir of nearly 1000 licensed colored aviators whose ranks are being rapidly depleted through inductions into regular armed services without having the merest recognition given these airmen's abilities and burning desires to serve their Nation from the gun emplacements of the air. I also refer to all of the thousands of keen, able-bodied, air-minded youths all over the country whose spirits are being tragically crushed by some upstart U. S. Army Air Force "tradition" that not only keeps them from significant service in combat air forces of the United Nations but which attempts to blast out of account the contributions colored American aviators have been making to the science of air navigation for over 25 years.

Worse than an underestimation of our enemies' strength during a time of war is the underestimation of what groups within our own population can do to win that war. All along the line we have underestimated the abilities and capacities of the Negro within our midst. Our stupid peacetime social estimates of this colored group now completely blind us to the usefulness of this group in our total war effort. By such willful blindness we sabotage our own fight for the Four Freedoms here and throughout the world. Concrete evidence of this kind of sabotage is to be found in the ranks of thousands of colored Americans who are denied air combat training and service despite their positive fitness.

FLYERS SET FOR COMBAT ORDERS

War Secretary Praises Lieut. Col. Davis.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 22—The 99th Pursuit Squadron will soon be on the wing! The first of America's Negro flyers will soon be releasing bullets of destruction from European skies, aimed at the determined forces of the Axis powers.

Henry L. Stimson, Secretary of War, announced Thursday at a press conference that after an inspection of the famous Tuskegee Army Flying school he was convinced that the first Negro flying squadron is nearly ready for overseas combat duty.

PRAISES DAVIS

After months of intensive training under the leadership of Lt. Col. Benjamin Davis, the squadron is simply waiting for the "take off" order. According to Secretary Stimson, the Tuskegee flyers were among the finest he saw on his tour and that Lt. Col. Davis had done a creditable job of molding and developing them into first class air-fighters.

When the Tuskegee airmen take to skies, it will be another progressive step in the United States Army, marking the first time Negro flyers have helped to defend this country from the air.

EIGHT CANDIDATES GET "WINGS"

While the qualified flyers are waiting for orders which will send them into actual combat, more potential heroes are graduating from the Tuskegee Air school. Friday, October 9, another class of cadets graduated. Which means that the skies overhead may soon be filled with planes piloted by Negro flyers.

Some of the successful candidates to receive commissions and wings at the hands of Colonel Kimble and Lieutenant Colonels Parrish and Davis include:

FROM MY STUDY WINDOW

By John C. Wright

SEP 20 1942

Is Theirs But To Die ?

IT WAS LAST Friday night a week ago that I met him. He was young, keenly intelligent broyuant with the confidence and daring of the man who has added training to native talent and strength. He was a typical product of the deep South in this mid-century era. He hailed from Oklahoma. He was a child of modest God - fearing, thrifty parents, who like so many of their compatriots had sacrificed, even unto need, that their boy might have his chance.

I met the mother that same night. She had come down to see her boy, because as a recent graduate of the U. S. Army Flying School at Tuskegee, he, with his classmates, had been denied

And he, too, was happy with that indescribable happiness which comes from the consciousness of victories achieved and the expectation of greater ones to come. He had won his coveted "wings" at the end of one of the most gruelling stretches of training in the whole army set-up, and in addition he was to lead the altar in a little more than twenty-four hours, the girl into whose arms and heart he intended to make the first significant flight with those newly acquired wings. SEP 20 1942

She was small and fragile and gay as she and her sister and mother-in-law-to-be tidied up the house and put the last pieces into shape for the modest trousseau. For Katherine and her lieutenant were to be married quietly at eight o'clock on Sunday morning.

But happiness must ever give way to duty. That is the law of war, so Lieutenant McGinnis took to the air on the eve of his marriage, to add a few more precious hours to his flying experience and skill. Eight miles from the flying field on the return trip, he crashed. On the eve of two great adventures another brown boy paid for democracy the "last full measure of devotion."

As the last spark of his glorious young life flicked and faded out, something died in the hearts of the two women who were gladly awaiting a dawn which now will never break. SEP 20 1942

He is one of thousands of our own boys, to say nothing, of the others, who miles from some starting point in this bloody holocaust, will crash and never return. Their blood, not pure enough for Red Cross banks, will run red and warm upon a hundred battlefields mingling with that of the bravest of earth. Their women — mothers, sweethearts, wives and sisters will wait, as Katherine waits, for the touch of a hand that has vanished, the sound of a voice that is still.

We give of the flower of our youth gladly to our native land in the hour of this and every peril. But, O God, is that all that they will be permitted to do—die for their country? SEP 20 1942

By their biers of those who sleep, let us solemnly dedicate ourselves to the perpetuation of a way of life, that will make living for one's country just as glorious as dying for it.

Air Mechanics Being Trained At Tuskegee Base

SEP 27 1942

Skilled Technicians Being Turned Out At Rapid Pace

SEP 27 1942

TUSKEGEE, Ala. (SNS)—Keeping pace with the material procurement program the Tuskegee Army School has a continuous training program on the flight line whereby enlisted men are taught the essentials of becoming air mechanics in theory, and gain their practical knowledge as helpers to trained technicians.

No other ground crew in America has had more favorable publicity than the men of the initial fighter squadron. In the early part of 1941, a group of high school graduates and college men from every section of the country volunteered their services in the Army of the United States to form the foundation crews for the present ssuadrons that have been activated at this Station.

TEACHING OTHERS

Today these men are at the school that they had dreamed for seven months before it was constructed. They are teaching boys as eager as they were when they volunteered in the early part of 1941. The older mechanics on the flight line always inform the new mechanics of the significance of keeping the plane aloft in good condition, and the responsibility that rests upon the shoulders of the mechanic. The original ground crew of the men that were trained at Chanute Field can handle and service ships from trainer planes to the difficult P-40's. These men know their job and have the confidence of the men who fly the ships.

An enlisted man upon the completion of his basic training in drilling and military courtesy is sent to an air mechanic school located on the Post. Non-commissioned officers, graduates of Chanute Field Mechanical School teach the new mechanics the art of mastering the delicate parts of the trainer planes. The Air Mechanics the art of mastering the delicate parts of the trainer planes. The Air Mechanics course is six (6) weeks in length, and is objective is to give the student a general knowledge of the maintenance of the trainer planes on the flight line.

WEEKLY EXAMINATION

There is a weekly examination given throughout the course, and the theoretical and practical knowledge of the student is rated at the end of each week.

The student mechanic upon the completion of the course is given the opportunity to select the type of work in which he is desirous of specializing as a helper mechanic. He is encouraged to enter the field in which he is best qualified. Having completed the course he is placed on the flight line and assigned to a ship with an experienced crew chief.

Who is responsible for the future development of the skill and workmanship of the student mechanic? After two months on the line the crew chief or the non-commissioned officer in charge makes a final report on the ability, skill, interest etc., that the student has shown in his work. From this report the final status of the student air mechanic is determined.

In the event that the student mechanic proved himself to be efficient in more than one specialized field he is given the opportunity to work at both. Located at the Tuskegee Army Flying School is an Air Corps Technical School and a Post Technical School under the direct supervision of highly trained and experienced air mechanics.

It was taps at Tuskegee Saturday for Faythe Andrew McGinnis, second lieutenant in the air corps, who died in a practice flight when his plane crashed.

The mishap brought to an end the brilliant career of the Muskogee, Oklahoma youth whose love for daring and adventure led him to give his life in training for the defense of his country.

The army said the cause of the accident was not known. But it added an investigation by military aeronautic authorities will be made. His was the second fatal crash since the beginning of the Tuskegee army flying school.

Thursday of this week, hundreds of people in the nearby towns and cities will trek to Muskogee to attend last rites for the flyer. These are set for 1:30 p.m. under direction of the Granger Funeral Home at Ward's Chapel church on Ninth and Denison streets. SEP 19 1942

Funeral eulogies will depict the clean life and the athletic feats of the young flyer who died in his twenties, leaving behind him a notable record as assistant athletic coach at Langston university, where he attended school and where he was well known and loved by collegians and teachers. SEP 19 1942

Because his body was badly burned in the crash, the casket will not be opened—on orders from the war department—but those who liked and respected McGinnis will pay him the final respect he so richly deserves.

His body arrived at Muskogee Monday morning accompanied by a military attache from Tuskegee. He is survived by his mother, Mrs. Ella McGinnis, of 509 Howard street, in Muskogee.

CAA Ready To Accept Men As Trainees

SEP 19 1942

Tuskegee and Coffey School Designated

WASHINGTON—(ANP) — As revealed several weeks ago, the Civil Aeronautics administration has received authorization from the army to train Negroes in its new program of preparing non-combat pilots for the air forces and is now accepting applications.

The bulk of the Negro trainees are destined for service as instructors in line with Secretary Stimson's recent statement that "final approval has been given to a plan which calls for the pilot training of a further limited number of Negroes."

All applications for CAA training under the army plan must be from 18 to 36 years of age inclusive, and if under 27, must be declared ineligible for training as combat pilots by an aviation cadet selection board of the army. They must, however, be able to pass the CAA physical and mental examinations.

Courses lasting approximately 36 weeks will be given at Tuskegee Insititute and Coffey School of Aeronautics, Chicago.

Room and board, health and accident insurance, will be provided for trainees, but they will receive no salary until they go on active duty with the army. During the CAA training period, they will be on inactive status in the enlisted reserve of the army air forces.

'Keegee Air Ships Will Get Insignia

SEP 19 1942

(From Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Speculation is rife as to what insignia may be adopted by the all-Negro Ninety-ninth and 100th pursuit squadrons at Tuskegee, following announcement by the War Department last week of authorization for decorating airplanes, tanks and other organizational equipment with an individual characteristic design in recognition of its value as a means of increasing the morale of a unit.

According to the War Department, squadrons, companies and similar organizations may submit designs which the members consider representative of their particular unit, to distinguish its equipment from that of other units.

The office of the quartermaster general will prepare such designs, upon request, from a drawing or word description of an idea. The commanding generals, army ground forces, army air forces and services of supply will have sole authority to approve organizational designs for any organization under their respective commands, according to the department announcement.

TUSKEGEE RAISES HOPES OF NEGROES

Army Flying School Is Main Evidence That Something Is Stirring Toward Change

APPRAISAL AT INSTITUTE

There a Long Step Forward to Equality of Opportunity Is Seen, but Vigilance Rules

By BROOKS ATKINSON

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

TUSKEGEE, Ala., June 20—No one can be in Tuskegee long without realizing that something is stirring. From bitter experience the students of Negro affairs are keeping their fingers crossed, but they cannot help hoping. For the Tuskegee Army flying school, which is the first all-Negro flying unit in any of the armed forces, has been graduating qualified fliers for some time; and, apart from their military value at a period when aviators are sorely needed, they are contributing to the prestige of their race.

Since the Negroes have never had an opportunity to develop all their Army administrators and flying instructors, the flying school is under the command of a white colonel, has a number of white officers at headquarters and in the training school, and the hospital is supervised by a white flight surgeon. But with a few minor exceptions the enlisted personnel is Negro, a great many of the commissioned men are Negro and the ranking Negro administrative officer is Lieut. Col. Benjamin O. Davis Jr., a graduate from West Point in 1936, son of Brig. Gen. Benjamin O. Davis, who came up through the ranks.

Less than a year ago Lieut. Col. Davis was a captain of infantry. But when Tuskegee Institute established the primary school out of which the Army flying school is recruited, he voluntarily suspended the privileges of his rank and took the regular training as a cadet. His first solo flight last September was the first time an Army plane had been flown by a Negro, and the Army has been promoting him as rapidly as possible. He is a good-looking young man with a level head and excellent manners.

Although he has become something of a hero to his race, he prefers to regard the flying school as one of the Army's experiments. The final test, he believes, will come when Negro fliers get into combat. At present the school is limited to twenty graduates every five weeks.

To the ordinary civilian the Tuskegee Army flying school looks normal—well equipped, well-laid out, well managed and very busy indeed. But one has only to talk with some of the professors and officers of Tuskegee Institute, a few miles away in the town of Tuskegee, to realize that the Army flying school represents a long step forward toward equality of opportunity in a vital part of American democracy.

They are following its progress vigilantly and with hope. With the harrowing economic experience of the last decade in mind, they do not dare hope too much. As Dean I. A. Derbigny remarked: "The Negro is the first to get fired and the last to get hired." In the final analysis, the dean and his colleagues cannot have much confidence in the future unless America develops an economy of abundance in which jobs, food and goods are plentiful. As things are now the Negro can only get along when the crumbs that drop off the big table are more plentiful than usual, to use Dean Derbigny's bitter phrase.

But most of the conversation in an informal discussion last evening was brighter than that. The Rev. H. V. Richardson, chaplain of Tuskegee Institute, thinks slow progress is being made all the time. The Negro's skills and possibilities are more clearly recognized in the armed forces in this war than they were in the last, Mr. Richardson points out, and he regards all the social studies and many recent books about the Negro as evidence of better understanding in general.

Dr. E. H. Dibble Jr., supervisor of the near-by United States Veterans' Hospital, thinks the fact that a Negro contractor, employing Negro architects and mostly Negro labor, has built the school is an achievement that will not be forgotten and that no matter what happens after the war, a standard has been set.

Dr. J. Max Bond, director of the School of Education, believes that whatever the economic realities may be, the Negro should perceive this war in a spirit of deliberate optimism. As society is now organized, he says, the caste system is broken down only in times of great social upheaval, like the present; and the war gives the Negro more opportunities to develop skills than he had before.

Whatever the post-war America may be like, Dr. Bond thinks those who have had experience become culture carriers who can keep alive what they have learned and achieved, and pass it on to others. He believes that fundamentally the Negro is more American than a good many other American groups, and that the Negro is the only one who is really fighting for democracy since he has never had it.

"The optimist is the fellow who dies two deaths," and after this war the hopeful Negroes may have much to suffer, as they did after the last war when some returning Negroes in uniform were beaten and at least one was killed. In the meantime, Negro opportunities are broadening. The Tuskegee Army air school is proof of that.

Negro Air Base Troops Like Barbecue, Dancing And Old Time Baseball

When the negro troops attached to the 743rd and 744th Quartermaster Truck companies want something, they go out and get it; when they want something done, they go out and do it, says Major James A. Sanders, special service officer at the Columbia Army Air Base.

The cooks of these detachments decided they wanted a barbecue, so they applied for permission, and last Sunday all the men of the two detachments had their barbecue in the woods near the base, with women as guests.

They decided they wanted a baseball team, so they went out and built their own diamond on a field near the base; and now they are seeking competition.

The men have been encouraged in these activities and urged by their commanding officers to make themselves self-sufficient in army life. Capt. Charles Corwin commands the detachment of the 743rd at the Air Base, and Lieut. Joseph McK. Jeter commands the 744th.

Major Sanders says that the negroes prefer "hard ball" to "soft ball" and that nothing but the good old "bounding bunny" used by major leaguers will satisfy the troops of the 743rd and the 744th.

For their diamond they found a field on which the sandy surface had been mixed with the clay beneath by several years of plowing, levelled it off, laid out their diamond, and borrowed a rolling machine to pack the infield hard.

Now, when the umpire calls "play ball", the pellet smacks into the catcher's mitt like the crack of a rifle, and some of their hits would clear a major league fence, if there were a fence around the diamond.

These men will play softball occasionally says, Major Sanders, but "the great American pasttime" is their first and their real love.

HEAVY DRAIN ON MANPOWER IMPELS MOVE

APR 25 1942

Recruits Will Be Given Intensive Studies In All Branches

WASHINGTON, D. C.—To meet increasing needs of the army air forces for air crews to man fighting planes and supporting ground crews, the War department Tuesday announced a plan to recruit men in the colleges and universities of the nation for future requirements of the Army flying services.

The plan calls for the procurement of aviation cadets through preliminary enlistment as privates in the Air Force Enlisted Reserve. The program will provide opportunities for enlistment on a deferred service basis so that the aviation cadet candidates may continue their education until actually required for Army training.

Students enlisted in the enlisted reserve, of course, are subject to call to active duty at any time. The plan, however, is to defer them, permitting further scholastic training provided they maintain a satisfactory scholastic standard.

Students whose courses of study give them the special instruction necessary for meteorology and communications will be permitted to continue their schooling to enable them to qualify as officers.

Whether college students will continue college training for these special posts will depend largely upon the result of examinations to be given to sophomore students enlisted in the Air Force Reserve.

These men will already possess qualifications for aviation cadet training, but the continuance of their education will be of further benefit to the Army when eventually they are called to active duty.

Students enlisted in the Air Force Reserve who are graduated or who may be called to duty before graduation, will be ordered to active duty and appointed aviation cadets, with an opportunity to compete for commissions in the same manner as other aviation cadets.

Young men enlisted in the Air Force Enlisted Reserve and deferred for scholastic reasons will be identified by an emblem similar to the familiar air forces wing-and-propeller insignia.

The college recruiting plan was announced by Lieut. Gen. Henry H. Arnold, commanding general of the Army Air Forces, in a telegram to centrally located colleges, all white, throughout the country. These colleges are to serve as focal points for colleges in their vicinity.

The Army Air Forces Enlisted Reserve was authorized on April 4, 1942, and for the present is open to college students who have not completed their educational training and who wish to continue in school, and high school graduates who desire to enter college for one year.

General Arnold has requested that colleges and universities appoint a faculty air forces advisor to provide a definite contact between the representatives of the army and the college personnel.

FROM ALL SECTIONS

MAY 14 1942

"The members of this first class," he states, "came from all sections of the country. Their backgrounds were varied and often interesting. All had more than two years of college, and some were college graduates.

"As graduate pilots they have proved themselves successful up-to-standard members of the United States Army Air Forces."

Lambert insists preconceived notions about Negro flyers have been proved false. "Important facts," he says, "are these: The Army now has a small number of Negro pilots, more are being trained. These men are receiving excellent training, and they are meeting the requirements of that training.

"Those who have completed the course are above the necessary minimum standards in ability. There is considerable reason for faith in the future on the part of those who hope and assume Negro groups can fly and are capable of well organized military effort."

ARMY PILOT FIRST

Lambert insists Negro flying units now being formed must be considered at units of the United States Army, first; as Negro units, second.

"An airplane," he points out, "does not react to the color or appearance of its pilot, either favorably or unfavorably."

"The successful Negro military pilot considers himself a pilot first and foremost. He has his mind full just flying, without being conscious that he is a Negro at the same time.'"

Criticising well-meaning commentators of both races, Lambert says: "It is difficult enough to fly for your family and friends without feeling you are trying to succeed as an individual inspiration for 13,000,000 people."

TUSKEGEE. — (ANP) — "The Tuskegee army flying school, still in the process of growing, is the result of the untiring efforts on the part of many interested and devoted persons who desire to place within your grasp an opportunity to fly in the army air force.

"You have reached this goal and you join that initial group of pilots who received their wings in this hall last month. There will be others to follow and from this group there will emerge combat units as evidence of your ability and application."

So spoke Col. Frederick V. H. Kimble, commanding officer, addressing the second graduating class of Negro cadets in the Post theatre Wednesday morning.

Among those who received from Colonel Kimble diplomas and commissions as second lieutenants in the U. S. Air corps were:

Sidney Brooks, Cleveland. He attended Ohio State university. He is a member of the Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity;

The coveted wings were pinned on by Maj. Noel F. Parrish, director of flight training. The invocation and the benediction were pronounced by the post chaplain, Lieut. H. Henry Hooks.

Because of the urgency of the war program at the post the exercises were very simple and brief, being attended only by the cadet classes and those of the personnel directly connected with the exercises. No relatives of the graduates were present.

The graduates were presented to Colonel Kimble by Capt. Roy E. Morse, director of ground school. Lieut. Robert R. Rowland and Lieut. D. G. McPherson are directors of advanced and basic flying, respectively. Lieut. Carl Leutcke is operations officer. Flight instructors are: Lieuts. Robert Lowenberg, Clay Albright, Robert M. Long, and Joseph W. Gurnow.

Negro Porter Flies Bombers Across Ocean

It's quite a jump, vocationally speaking, from being a doorman for a china shop to ferrying bombers across the Atlantic, but Fred Hutcherson of Evanston has done it and in doing so has fulfilled a vow made years ago that he "would be the first Negro to fly the Atlantic."

Flying two and four engined bombers across the Atlantic is all in a day's work now for Fred, a captain in the Royal Canadian ferry command. The first and only Negro to fly the Atlantic, Fred is also, so far as is known, the only member of his race in the ferry command.

Self-Taught Flyer.

Fred's feat is all the more outstanding because he never attended a flying school. A graduate of Evanston Township High school, he is strictly a self-made flyer. He learned the secrets of instrument flying and navigation brooding over books and by trial and error in practice flights over Northwest airport, eight miles west of Evanston. He learned his lessons so well that fellow students asked him to run the ground school. Later Fred became manager of the airport. "A natural flyer," fellow flyers called him.

While learning to fly, Fred supported himself by working as a doorman at Tatman's china shop, where he parked automobiles and carried packages for patrons. But this was far from flying the Atlantic and if the war hadn't come Fred might never have realized his ambition.

But war did come and he volunteered in the Royal Canadian Air force, was commissioned a captain, and became an instructor. Fred was getting closer but he still hadn't flown the Atlantic and it looked at this point as if he would be mothering fledgling pilots for the duration.

Then came an unexpected call for volunteers for the ferry command, whose job it is to get the big bombers to England in a hurry. Fred passed stiff examinations in instrument flying and navigation and one murky morning took off from Newfoundland bound for England. Eight hours and 50 minutes later he landed. This was a year ago.

Since then he has shuttled the Atlantic dozens of times. And for doing what he'd rather be doing than anything else in the world, Capt. Fred Hutcherson, ex-doorman who wanted wings, is earning more than $1,000 a month.

From doorman for a china shop to bomber pilot is the story of Fred Hutcherson Jr. of Evanston, a captain in the royal Canadian ferry command. The only Negro in the ferry command, Capt. Hutcherson, as far as is known, is the only member of his race to fly the Atlantic. He's been doing it for almost a year, earning $1,000 a month plus bonuses.

Third Class of Army Pilots Get Commissions

TUSKEGEE, Ala. — (ANP) — Commissions were awarded to the third class of Army Air Corps pilots to finish the Tuskegee Army Flying School here May 20, at services attended by parents of the graduates.

Will Form Traditions

Col. Frederick V. H. Trimble, commanding officer, told the group:

"The life of Tuskegee Army Flying School has been short in comparison with those institutions which have long histories and great traditions. History for this air base and for those who go out from this air base is in the making.

"It is on you and your immediate predecessors that the history of this air base will be made and tradition formed. The future holds for you great prospects."

Record Clear of Serious Crack-Ups; Field Designed and Built by Colored Workers; Auxiliary Services Function Efficiently

By OLLIE STEWART

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala.—It is a pity that the best part of what is happening in the immediate vicinity of Tuskegee cannot be told. If it were told, they say, it might benefit the enemy. And that perhaps is true. But if it could be told, it would certainly comfort the nation. A dream coming true in this Alabama farm country. A c

Since that time another colored man has made the blue prints come to life in roads and barracks and runways and hangars, and an airfield now stands where last summer there was corn and cotton.

It is the U.S. Army Air Corps Advanced Flying School — designed by Hilyard Robinson, architect, and executed by Moses McKissack and his brother, Calvin, who, as McKissack and McKissack, were prime contractors.

Numbers Withheld

Colored aviation cadets are taking off and landing U.S. Army planes at this field. I can't tell you how many cadets I saw, neither how many planes nor what kind of planes I saw.

But it is permissible to mention that they are good—so good that since the field has been in operation not one flyer has had a serious crack-up. And when these future aces are graduated and commissioned as second lieutenants, the U.S. Army Air Corps will have its first colored combat and pursuit squadron in the history of aviation.

These cadets are receiving the same training routine given to other Air Corps cadets all over the country, and when the building program here is completed, they will have facilities equal to those enjoyed by any group of cadets.

Expansion Planned

Already thought is being given to expansion, and plans are under way to make available here the latest developments in aerial warfare.

For behind the present crop of pioneers who are making history as the first colored men to earn U.S. war wings, is an ever increasing group taking the primary air training which will fit them for the Air Corps Advanced Flying School.

No one can deny that racial prejudice — and racial prejudice alone—makes this a segregated outfit. The cadets themselves are well aware that with white skins, and no increase in mental ability, they might be training at Randolph or Kelly or Maxwell field.

But to their everlasting credit they have chosen to prove themselves bigger men than the men who segregated them, and this nation already owes them a debt of gratitude for their demonstration of tolerance.

However, these intrepid young men who fly the planes are but a cog in the big wheel of this Air Corps Advanced Flying School. They are attached to a pursuit squadron, which at best can have no more than equal rating with other functional units on the post.

Ground Crews Adequate

This flying field has everything that goes to make up a first-rate flying field. For every man in the air, it is said, there are fifteen men on the ground keeping him aloft. And that is true here.

Many of the most necessary functions — absolutely necessary, one might say — are performed here as elsewhere by what is generally known as an Air Base Group Detachment.

Planes have to be greased, repaired, checked and maintained by technical experts. Weather reports have to be prepared and relayed for the benefit of the pilots. Machine guns and other types of armament have to be installed and maintained. Parachutes have to be rigged and constantly checked.

Well, the ground crews here are experts. Many of them had technical training and experience in civilian life. All of them have had specific training in various types of service since entering the army.

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala., Mar. 12—"In past wars, American Negro soldiers have done their full d combat units of the ground forces. Stratemeyer, commanding S Air Corps Training center, addressing the first graduating class of Negro army pilots in the Post Theatre of Corps Advance Flying school at Tuskegee, Alabama, Saturday.

Thus amid the historic setting of the Tuskegee campus was brought to a crowning achievement the first phase of a program launched three years ago by The Pittsburgh Courier for full integration of Negroes into every branch of service in the U. S. Army. At that time The Courier asked for the establishment of Air Corps units to train colored pilots.

DAVIS AMONG AIR GRADUATES

Col. Frederick V. H. Kimble, commanding officer of the Air Corps Advance Flying school, pinned the coveted wings on the breasts of the graduates, among whom were: Captain Benjamin O. Davis, Jr., Tuskegee Instiute; Lemuel Rodney Curtis, Hartford, Conn.; Charles Henry De Bow, Indianapolis, Indiana; Mac Ross, Dayton, Ohio, and George Spencer Roberts, Fairmont, West Virginia. General Stratemeyer presented the diplomas and commissions.

The graduates began their course of training in the Air Corps Detachment Primary Training school, Tuskegee Institute, July 19. After three weeks orientation at the Reception Center, they began their strenuous course in ground work and flight training, conducted by Tuskegee Institute, under contract with the U. S. War Department.

ASSIGNMENTS A WAR SECRET

Following the graduation exercises the new officers left the post for a well deserved furlough. Military secrecy forbids announcement of the exact number or the assignments which the new flying lieutenants will receive. Most of them, however, will go into immediate active service with tactical units, while some may be retained as instructors in the Training Center.

The wartime graduation ceremonies were simple and for the most part confined to attendance by military personnel, officials of Tuskegee Institute and relatives of the graduating pilots.

By STAFF CORRESPONDENT

BALTIMORE

As plans for the formation of a new pursuit squadron for colored aviators develop, so much nearer to realization become the dreams of Earl Bundara, 2213 Madison Avenue, who was "washed out" of the 99th Pursuit Squadron Training School at Tuskegee last fall.

Bundara, who was appointed last August, was given an honorable discharge approximately three months later. The official explaination was that "he had a flying deficiency."

While at Tuskegee, Bundara had successfully passed through the first five weeks of pre-flight training in the ground school and the ten weeks of primary flying training by civilian pilots when the washout came. MAR 28 1942

Had Only 2 More Steps

The next two steps to complete the thirty-five week course includes ten weeks of night and pursuit flying, formations and, finally, ten weeks of advanced aviation, covering instrumental and more night flying, navigation and long hops.

Although Bundara would not confirm or deny the report, it has been said that officers in charge of flight training schools maintain a "washout" ratio whereby so many students must be flunked out of each class.

One of the favorite methods said to have been employed was for an inspector to deliberately order a student pilot to execute a stunt in direct contrast to the proper method or teaching.

Some Washouts Intentional

It was also charged that washouts occur in the flying classes many times when the student has had as few as six hours in the air. In these instances, it was said, students were ordered to perform stunts they had not learned. MAR 28 1942

There is practically no redress to the action taken by the official board which 'passes' on cases of washouts. But with the need for pilots in the new squadron, there is the possibility that many of the washedout students may be gven another chance to become pilots.

They may also be given an opportunity to qualify for navigator bombarier positions or for ground duty in connection with the air corps.

Air Corps Silent on Trainees' Assignment

NEW YORK.—The U.S. Army Air Corps is evading NAACP queries as to whether its proposed 77,000 colored trainees will be aviators or mere laborers, and whether they will be admitted to all training bases.

Col. Fred C. Milner said last week that plans "have not been sufficiently crystallized to admit of publication." The NAACP pointed out that colored Americans are becoming uneasy over whether their men will be trained as pilots, bombadiers and scouts, or be assigned to such "aviation squadrons" as those now working at airports used by white aviators.

CHICAGO—(ANP)—Miss Willa B. Brown, federal coordinator of the civilian pilot training programs conducted by the Coffey School of Aeronautics on Harlem airport, received official notification from the war department stating that the facilities of the advanced C. P. T. P. training centers will be utilized by the U. S. army, thus becoming "feeders" to the army air corps. This notification effects over 700 college and non-college pilot training centers throughout the country, including the one at Tuskegee and the Negro center of the middle west on Harlem airport.

The CAA headquarters, Washington, had informed all advanced flight operators that the training facilities, equipment and personnel of their schools were subject to a rigid inspection by army officials, prior to the war department's notification that the use of these facilities would be under the direct supervision of the army. Since the Coffey School of Aeronautics this week passed the recent army-type inspection, there is no doubt that the Chicago center will be turning out many Negro airmen for the U. S. Army corps.

Cornelius R. Coffey, president of the school, says that as his school meets all of the army requirements, he is ready to do all he can to aid in the national emergency, and that the pilots graduating from this center will give the American Negro reason to look toward them with pride.

Fear Many Of Them Will Just Be Laborers

MAR 24 1942

NEW YORK—(S N S)—The U. S. Army Air Force has said that it will train 77,000 Negroes this year, but it won't say whether they will be bombardiers, scouts or laborers around air fields. Colonel Fred C. Milner of the AAF, said in response to an inquiry from the NAACP that "plans for the training of Negro Aviation Cadets have not been sufficiently crystallized to admit for publication."

When Milner answered the NAACP's appeal of February 18 for the abolishment of the quota system because it shuts out a large number of colored youth who want to join the air arm, he said that "facilities for training Negroes will be expanded as rapidly as possible and quotas will be increased as soon as facilities become available."

No word about whether or not colored cadets would be accepted at all training bases where facilities are already available was said.

The NAACP told the AAF that "Colored people are keenly interested in the actual number of pilots being trained. They are beginning to ask how many of their men will receive training as bombardiers or in reconnaisance work. They already know that certain units are merely laborers around air fields."

Lt. De Bow Tells About Air School

Writes "I Got Wings" In American Magazine

DeBow's story, as told to William A. H. Birnie, gives a colorful picture of the panorama presented by the first Army aviation post for Negroes. For instance:

"Around me, stretching away to the horizon, the red clay of Alabama, dotted with the corn and cotton fields, where the Negroes are working. The same fields where their ancestors worked—as slaves. A little knot of people in one field look up at me. A couple of them wave. I feel a catch in my throat.

"My people . . ."

DeBow was one of the pioneer class of 13 men at Tuskegee. His father is a porter in a white barber shop in Indiana.

He has a double duty, the young aviator says in his article—"to my country and to my race."

Cadets Train At Lubbock Air School

LUBBOCK, Tex.—From every corner of the nation—from Florida, from California, from Michigan—Negro troops have come here to help "Keep 'Em Flying" at the Lubbock army flying school, where the air corps is training heavyweight aviation cadets to fly its big twin-engine planes.

Former cab drivers, farmers, barbers, laborers, these men are concentrating their efforts now toward one end, for theirs is the job of seeing that the large Lubbock fields' fleet of trucks operates efficiently, skillfully, economically.

And handling supplies, equipment and transportation of personnel is all part of the one big air corps job, to "Keep 'Em Flying."

They hail from twelve states—Illinois, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Hexas, Mississippi, North Carolina, Tennessee, Georgia and Arkansas, as well as Florida, California and Michigan.

The 833rd Quartermaster company (truck) is their unit, organized February 6 at Brooks field, near San Antonio, where the men had been transferred from points as widely separated as Fort Bragg, N. AIR CORPS MAJOR TELLS FLYER LETTER A MISTAKE, CAN NOT ENLIST HERE

By ULYSSES S. KEYS

A colored flyer who had met all the qualifications as a flying cadet in the United States Army Air corps and had passed the cadet examination with a grade of 91 per cent was told by Major Floyd Showalter, president of the Air Cadet Board No. 3, that it was an error when the board wrote him to report to the Federal building on March 23 to take the oath of enlistment. Major Showalter told him that colored flyers do not enlist from his board and those were his orders and nothing could be done about it.

The applicant was A. Mansfie'd Bright, 6507 Rhodes avenue, who is the vice president and chairman of the National Airmen's association and has had 125 hours of flying a part of which was had in an Army bombing plane at the Harlem Airport. By occupation he is a mail carrier in the Chicago Post Office.

Rev. Carey Protests

Rev. Archibald J. Carey, Jr., Woodlawn AME's militant minister, went down to Major Showalter's office Wednesday in a huff when Bright told him about his case. Your correspondent accompanied Rev. Carey and Bright to the Old Post Office building where we had a conference with Lieut. William C. Britten of Major Showalter's office about the general policy of the Chicago office on enlisting cadets. Rev. Carey to'd Lieut. Britten that he had come to his office because he was much perturbed over the situation. The people of his church and the members of his race, he said, are making every sacrifice that will aid in the prosecution of this war and that the man who was denied enlistment was a member of his church.

Rev. Carey was told that orders from Washington were that the Chicago office was not to take enlistments but could take the applications from colored persons.

For the militant Rev. Carey that was no answer so he began to interrogate Lieut Britten further as to the source of his orders when Lieut. Griffith of the Chicago office came to help explain to Rev. Carey that really there was no discrimination it was simply the effort of the government to prevent discrimination in the Air Corps by establishing a separate unit at Tuskegee.

Lieut. Griffith took the position that the government was right in its policy of putting Negroes in the Black squadron down at Tuskegee. He asked Rev. Carey if he did not represent some organization. He said that there was an organization which was "attempting to stir up trouble" by protesting against the government's discriminatory policy. He refused to identify it. He said that colored people are segregated against because they protest segregation. His thought was that they should not protest it. Rev. Carey told him that they should be permitted to help win this war fighting like human beings; fighting like citizens—and should be given the same privileges and rights as other citizens. He said that Negroes do not want to be "shunted off to Tuskegee" flying field just because they are Negroes. They want to train anywhere anyone else trains, he emphasized.

The Major Arrives

Major Showalter came in and was apparently startled to see such a large agregation in the office—there were many Air corps officers listening to Rev. Carey expound on the philosophy of equality in the military branches of the government.

Major Showalter, after raising his voice pretty loud to get the attention of Rev. Carey, invited the conferees into his office where he was to'd of the attitude of the colored people of America about the whole policy of government restrictions against them.

Major Showalter told Rev. Carey that there had been a mistake in asking Bright to report to his office to take the oath of enlistment for, he said, the applications of colored people are sent to the Washington office and they are notified from there when and where to report.

'Colored People' Train at 'Kegee

Lieut. Griffith was asked if he would be court martialed if he put a colored cadet through the same routine as he did a white cadet. He said he would not be but though if he did send a colored cadet to a white traiing field that he would later be sent to Tuskegee where the "colored people train."

Bright filed his application in March of last year. He passed his physical examination in January and took his written examination in February and made a grade of 91 per cent. On March 23 he received a letter to report to the Federal building within two days to take the oath of enlistment and be told when and where he would be sent.

He said that when he reported to the board in the Federal building Lieut. Griffith told him that an error had been made and that he should have not been notified to report there.

On the same day Bright received his notice from his draft board that he had been classified in class 1-A for immediate conscription.

His papers for the Air Corps have been sent to Washington where he will be notified when and where to report for his oath of enlistment.

Telegrams and letters were sent to President Roosevelt and to the U. S. Army Air Corps by Rev. Carey and the Chicago Branch of the NAACP asking that the government cease such undemocratic practices in this hour when the American nation faces the greatest peril of its history.

Tuskegee Graduates Fourth Class Of Air Cadets Friday

TUSKEGEE, ALA., July 4.—"I would say that, at this time, this special school has graduated pilots who can fly no better and no worse than the graduates of other Air Corps schools," declared Lieut. Col. Benjamin O. Davis, Jr., executive officer for troops at the Tuskegee Army Flying School, in an address to the fourth class of graduates here Friday, July 3.

Col. Davis delivered the principal address to this class, the largest in the history of the air base to date. Col. Frederick V. H. Kimble, commanding officer, delivered the diplomas to the graduates, while Lieut. Col. Noal F. Parrish, director of training, pinned the wings on the new second lieutenants.

Col. Davis went on to say:

"Most people who visit this post go away with the impression that we are over the hump, that the job is done. It is done in the same sense that you have a military pilot in an individual who can take an airplane off the ground and land it. So much has been demonstrated but this cannot be the complete answer. The only valid test of a fighting unit is in its ability to account for itself in combat. So, understand then, that your work has just begun. You are John Doe, second lieutenant, Army Air Forces, who knows something about military life and something about flying.

"You have a great deal to learn about administrative duties in your squadron. You have yet to learn to fly as a member of a combat team in a fighting airplane. You, must learn these things in a short time. You have before you positions of great responsibility for which you must qualify yourself immediately. You and all the other early graduates of this school have the added burden of proving to all concerned that as military pilots you are as good as any in the world. It is true that your task is difficult and important, but it is my belief that you will accept the challenge and carry on in such manner that your record will be a credit to yourself and to your country."

Col. Davis spoke to the graduates as one who had passed through the same stage. He was one of the members of the first class to graduate at this air base, back in March. At that time, he was a captain. Today, he is the highest ranking negro officer in the Army air forces, being the only lieutenant colonel in that branch of the Army.

The invocation and benediction were delivered by First Lieut. Douglass L. T. Robinson, chaplain for the air base. Capt. Roy F. Morse, secretary of the Ground School, had charge of the diplomas.

Several hundred relatives and friends of the graduates thronged into the Post Theater for the exercises, some of them coming many hundreds of miles from all sections of the United States to witness the ceremonies.

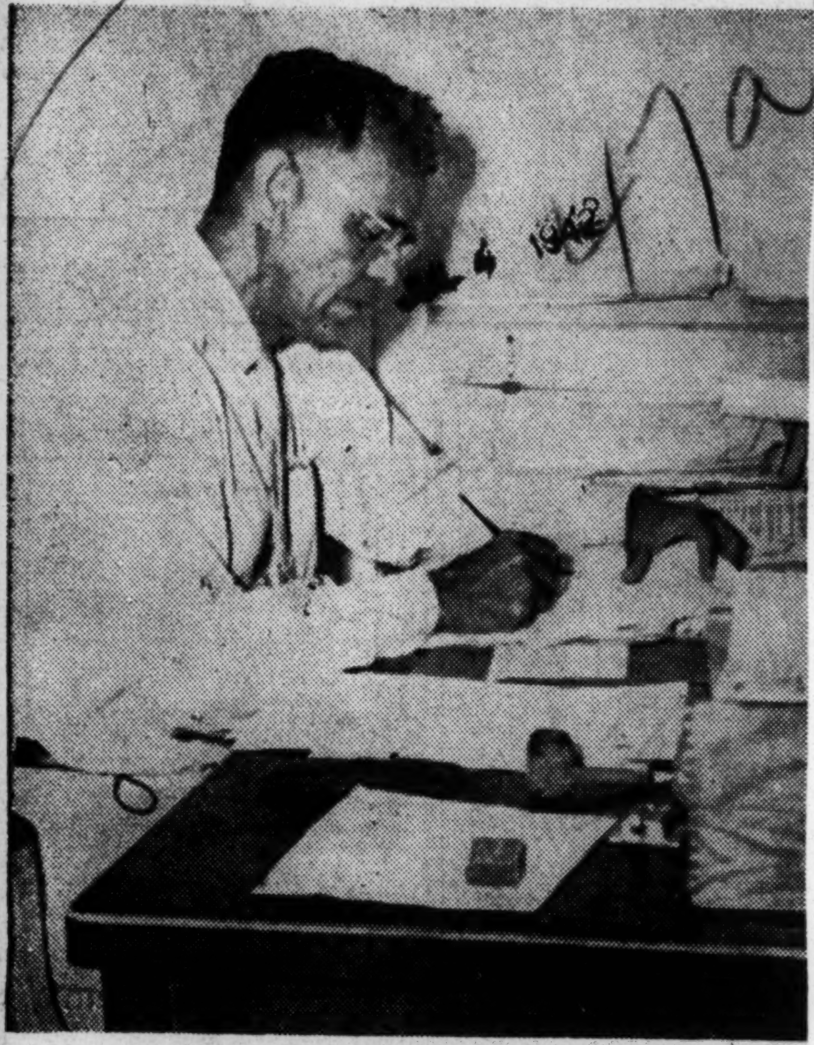
TUSKEGEE AIRFIELD CONTRACTOR



Because of the reputation they have made as contract builders in the South and Southwest, the army did not hesitate to award the contract to the McKissack Brothers of Pulaski, Tenn., to build the huge, modern air base at Tuskegee Institute for the training of colored army cadet pilots. Calvin McKissack, above, and his brother, Moses, have constructed some of the largest projects in the South. They employ white and colored workers, have their headquarters in Nashville and are licensed in six states.

HAVE NO PLANS TO TRAIN ADDITIONAL COLORED AVIATORS

WASHINGTON, D.C., July 2—At the present rate of increase the United States Army Air Force, by the end of 1942, may comprise more than 50 per cent of the personnel of the United States Army. It is already approaching 30 per cent. But, if quick, positive action isn't taken now, the number of Negroes in the United State Army Air Force 1942 amount to less than ONE PER CENT.

Negroes have only the smallest token representation in the Army Air Corps today. It is almost as small as their representation in the Navy Air Corps which is exactly NOTHING.

FACILITIES NOT BEING FULLY USED

The so-called Tuskegee Army Air School is a mere drop in a barrel and all of its facilities are not being used for training Negroes in the various branches of aviation.

This Turkegee school is so small a token that it has a minus character. It shows HOW LITTLE can be done rather than HOW MUCH.

The plans so far made public, supported by the training program at Tuskegee, call for only 150 black AVIATORS, or less.

That means that the Air Corps plans to train 666 WHITE AVIATORS for every ONE BLACK AVIATOR. Compared to the number of white boys who will be trained as aviators, less than ONE-SIXTH of ONE PER CENT of colored boys will be trained.

5,000 NEGROES ON WAITING LIST

It is understood that more than 5,000 colored boys throughout the country have attempted to enlist in the Air Corps. Some of their names have been placed on long waiting lists. Others have been drafted into other branches of the service.

The Air Corps is using the Tuskegee Air School bottleneck, authorized to train only a small number of men, to keep qualified Negro boys out of the Air Corps.

COLORED WASH-OUTS GET DIRTY WORK

The largest number of Negro boys in the Air Corps have been enlisted to do the housekeeping and "dirty work" in the Air Corps.

White boys who fail to make the grade as pursuit aviators are given an opportunity to serve in other branches of the services as navigators, bombardiers, meteorologists, etc.

Black boys who fail to make the grade as pursuit aviators are shifted to the Air Corps' labor battalions at Maxwell Field and elsewhere.

Perhaps the biggest job America has to do in this war belongs to Lieut. Gen. Henry H. Arnold, chief of the Army Air Corps. The nation has awakened to the importance of air power.

The importnce of air power has been demonstrated to such an extent that the Air Corps has been given almost complete independence of action.

The Service of Supply (Quartermaster Department) is overpopulated with Negroes as usual.

The United States Army Ground Forces have their large components of Negro troops with thousands of them concentrated in engineering units and service detachments.

TUSKEGEE A BOTTLENECK

But the Air Corps, dizzily developing by leaps and bounds, is apparently guided by a policy of excluding the Negro citizen.

Hundreds of complaints have been written to the Air Corps concerning the exclusion and restriction of Negro citizens. No results have been obtained.

The flaming desire of thirteen million citizens to serve to the utmost is bottled up at Tuskegee.

The record already made at Tuskegee shows what Negroes can do in aviation if they are given a chance. They have proved themselves capable.

They want a greater opportunity to serve. They want to be among the first to carry the fight to the enemy in Europe.

They want to join other United States airmen who are fighting gallantly on six continents.

They want the doors opened—NOW.

FIRST FATALITY AT THE TUSKEGEE ARMY FLYING SCHOOL

The Tuskegee Army Flying School is saddened because one of its most popular flying cadets met with a fatal accident, the first in the history of the field which has already graduated three classes.

Cadet Robert A. Dawson, 24-year-old flier from San Antonio, Texas, a former civilian flyer instructor, was instantly killed when his training plane was wrecked by coming in contact with a high-powered electric transmission line over a river about 15 miles from the field. Dawson's companion, Cadet Walter Lawson, 23, of Newton, Virginia, escaped with minor scratches after the ship plunged head first into the river where its nose was buried in mud.

No Armed Guards, U. S. Closes Harlem Airport

CHICAGO, Ill.—(ANP) — Harlem airport has been closed on orders of a CAA inspector who charged the field with failing to live up to defense regulations by employing armed guards at each building.

The closing order affects approximately 150 Negroes since colored flyers in the area center their activities about Harlem airport where the Coffey School of Aeronautics is located.

A civilian pilot training program is in progress there and a wing of the civilian air patrol is located on the grounds. The field, predominantly white, is owned and managed by Fred Schumacher, white, who has two government contracts to train civilian flyers.

Dorie Miller Button Game Is Exposed

JUN 13 1942

Agent Stabbed, Counterfeit Emblems Being Sold

Is the sale of the Dorie Miller buttons, the proceeds of which are alleged to benefit the "War Bond Fund for Mr. and Mrs. Conway Miller, Waco, Texas," Harlem's latest racket?

This is the question which the Star-News poses this week as Miller button bootleggers swarmed over the streets and avenues of Harlem. That large quantities of the buttons are bootlegged is not to be denied.

The manufacturer of the bona fide novelties, operating under contract with Ralph Baker, eastern representative of the government-approved Dorie Miller Foundation, is the Whitehead & Hoag Co. Newark, N. J. Thousands of the buttons have been delivered to Baker, according to Miss M. Slynn, an employee of the manufacturer, and about 20,000 are to be delivered at an early date.

Duplications Found

A Star-News reporter uncovered a Park Row novelty house which, as late as last Saturday, had been duplicating the buttons for unauthorized persons. Jack Epstein, a member of the firm which was making the spurious buttons, admitted over the telephone that he had been making the buttons. But when he discovered that he was talking to a reporter he denied that he was still engaged in the manufacture of anything that did not have an accompanying copyright.

"I can't talk about it over the telephone," Epstein said. "If you want any more information you must come down to my store. I can't say any more, please."

The reporter asked whether or not Epstein had a brother.

"Yes," Epstein answered.

The reporter wanted to know his name and whether he could talk to the brother.

Won't Talk on Phone

"Anything else that you want to know," Epstein declared harshly, "you will have to come down here and find out. I don't give out any more information over the phone. Mr. Baker called my attention to his exclusive rights to the buttons and I stopped making them. Why don't you try that novelty house on Broadway somewhere around 19th Street? They were making the buttons, too. Maybe they still are!"

And then Mr. Epstein hung up.

The Star-News also learned that Baker had delegated two Harlem representatives, Lawrence Campbell, 241 West 135th Street, and William Taylor, 169 West 126th Street. The latter was stabbed recently by a woman on West 125th Street while he was selling the Miller buttons and was to have been given a hearing Tuesday.

Is It FBI Matter?

The case is packed with dynamite. If there is fraud attached to the sale, the U. S. Department of Justice and the Federal Bureau of Investigation probably will crack down on the violators of a Federal copyright. And if no appreciable amount has been contributed to Dorie Miller's parents way down there "deep in the heart of Texas" there will also be hell to pay.

Praises Hitler

"Hitler is alright with me," and with those words Miss Martha James, 18, wearing Hitler, Mussolini and Tojo buttons is alleged to have plunged a knife almost to the heart of William Taylor, air raid warden of 169 126th Street, who was selling Dorie Miller buttons at the time.

3 Negro Soldiers Awarded Medals In Rescue of Pilot

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

Somewhere in Australia, July 21. Three American Negro soldiers stationed in New Guinea have received the Soldiers Medal for heroism, according to an announcement today from Gen. Douglas MacArthur's headquarters.

The soldiers, members of an engineers unit, are Pvts. Julius S. Franklin of Charleston, S. C., Harvey M. Crandle of Greenville, N. C., and James Scott of Montgomery, Ala.

The incident for which the awards were made took place in June when an Allied plane, taking off to intercept enemy raiders, struck a log and crashed in the river, splashing gasoline which ignited and started exploding ammunition. Franklin dove into the water despite the burning gasoline and exploding ammunition and rescued the pilot, while Crandle and Scott waded into the river and assisted in the rescue.

Dorie Miller's Mother Comes to Town

JUN 28 1942

Dorie Miller's mother was busy yesterday from the moment she stepped off the train in Pennsylvania Station, New York City, at 7:40 A. M.

It was to help win the war and end jim-crow forever that she came all the way from Texas, she told the Worker reporter. And she was making full use of her opportunities.

Mrs. Miller was the guest of the Citizens Coordinating Committee. She came to take part in the National Negro Achievement Day parade down Lenox Ave., and to receive a scroll in honor of her son from Congressman Vito Marcantonio at the Golden Gate Ballroom last night.

With her was her youngest son, Arthur James, a handsome, clean-cut boy, just 20, who works in a war plant near Waco, Texas, where Mrs. Miller and her husband are sharecroppers.

MAYOR REPRESENTED

From the station, Mrs. Miller was whisked uptown to the Theresa Hotel in a waiting car by a delegation which included Parole Commissioner Samuel J. Battles, representing Mayor LaGuardia, Herbert L. Cook and Audley Moore of the Citizens Coordinating Committee, Miss Fredi Washington of the People's Voice, and Forrest Walker of the U. S. Navy Reserve.

Seemingly untired by the long trip from Texas, the mother of Dorie Miller refused to rest long. Before the parade, she rushed downtown in a taxi to greet the win-the-war conference of the Negro Labor Victory Committee in the Fraternal Clubhouse.

The large room full of delegates rose to their feet and applauded a full minute, then gave three rousing cheers for Dorie Miller.

The woman whose heroic son has become a symbol for the Negro people everywhere is a quiet hard-working farmer's wife. Her wedding ring is worn thin on her finger with years of toil. She speaks directly, vigorously. She knows what the war's about.

FIGHTING HITLER

"I think Hitler would like jim-crow," she said. "Coming up to New York was part of fighting against jim-crow, for me. You know, Hitler would be glad if the people couldn't get together, because then we could not fight him."

She just got a letter from Dorie, she told the Worker. "He said he was feeling fine, and that he saw his papa's picture in the paper, and it looked just like the old days on the farm."

Yes, Mrs. Miller said, she's very proud of her boy. "It seemed," she explained, "like he was trying to do good for his country."

And she's proud of Arthur James, and of her two older sons—Selvia, who has a defense job in California, and Connery, Jr., who has been drafted, and is now in camp. "You might say all I've got are enlisted," she commented. "It makes me feel like the mother of the war effort."

But Mrs. Miller isn't planning to leave all the fighting to her sons. "I was thinking about selling war bonds and stamps after a while," she said.

The war has got to be won. "And then we don't want jim-crow going on after the war is over. We want it dropped forever."

Boston Man Cited As Hero

Manned Gun Which Sank Sub In Arctic Waters

OCT 2 - 1942

BY SAMUEL P. PERRY JR.

Historic Boston is proud to add the name of Earl C. Wolff to the growing list of heroes of World War II. He is one of the heroic members of the merchant marine who brave untold dangers supplying our allies with munitions.

Two days out while enroute to Murmansk from Iceland with a convoy of supplies for embattled Russia, Wolff's ship found itself being trailed by an enemy plane. Submarines working in collusion with the plane succeeded in sinking several ships.

It was young Wolff who personally sighted one of the subs, sounded the general alarm, then manned one of the ship's high-powered guns, and was successful in sinking the sub.

In addition to sinking an undersea raider, Wolff had the harrowing experience of being in the city of Murmansk when it was bombed at the rate of 15 times a day. He was wounded and hospitalized in the Soviet Union for several weeks.

The story of Wolff's exploits may be read in a recent issue of Collier's magazine in an article entitled "They Keep 'Em Sailing," by Helen Lawrenson. It relates the story of the hazards faced by the members of the merchant marine and Wolff's feat in detail.

Educated in the Boston schools, Wolff is married and the father of three children.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

HOUSTON, Tex., May 14—In a dramatic radio address over the nationally-known "Wings Over Jordan" program here Sunday morning, Mrs. Henrietta Miller, mother of Doris (Dorie) Miller, who Monday was awarded the Navy Cross by President Roosevelt, gave a symbolic picture of a typical American boy by a typical American mother.

Introduced to a vast unseen audience by Dr. Glenn T. Settle, director of the program, who lauded The Pittsburgh Courier for "officially establishing the identity of the unknown Negro messman", Mrs. Miller said in part:

"I am very glad to be here on this glorious Mother's Day . . Doris was a coward and I had to spank him very often to make him protect himself . . Doris, as a child was full of fun and his face always wore a smile. He was obedient and he had respect for everyone.

"Oh, how I loved him when he wanted to enlist in the Navy. Times was very squally. There was not work much on the farm . . He said: 'Mother, I am going to try the Navy and if I don't get in the Navy, I am going to try the army'.

"Sept. 15, 1939, is the date when Doris left for the Navy and I have not been able to see him since. How I would like to see my child.

"I went as far with him as I could that day, and that was to see him get aboard the train. Just before getting aboard the train he kissed us all good-bye and I began to cry.

"I am thankful to God that my prayers are still with him each day and night while he's sailing the briny deep. Doris has been gone for two years and eight months. I am praying for his return . .

"Just after the attack on Pearl Harbor, not knowing whether Doris was lost or not, I was very sad until I received a few lines saying:—'Mother, don't worry about me and tell all my friends not to shed any tears for me, for when the dark clouds pass over, I'll be back on the sunny side'.

"Another time he wrote me a letter. He said:—'Mother, prepare a place at the table for me in 1945. I will eat dinner with you all with a smile. Tell all my friends to live the life that I am living'.

Continuing Mrs. Miller (with a sweet smile) "Doris always seemed to be satisfied with what we were able to give him. He was an apt child. He could sew on a sewing machine, cross stitch, embroidery and piece quilts. He always liked to kiss me on the cheek. He was a great hunter and whenever he left with that shotgun, he would always bring the bacon home.

"Doris has not done any more", she concluded, "than any other true American would have done trying to defend his and our country."

Mrs. Miller and her husband Connery, enjoyed their first Pullman ride Saturday night, occupying a comfortable drawing room from Waco, Tex., to appear on the broadcast. They returned home the same way.

NEGRO MESS BOY WILL GET CROSS AS HAWAII HERO

47b

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., May 11.—President Roosevelt today ordered the navy cross awarded to Doris Miller, 23 year old Negro mess attendant on a battleship, who performed distinguished services during the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor.

There have been widespread demands for suitable recognition of Miller's bravery and performance beyond duty under the heaviest fire of the Jap onslaught. Miller's feats were mentioned in dispatches of the attack, but he was not identified by name until a Pittsburgh Negro newspaper made it its business to inquire.

Knox Opposed Award.

It was disclosed yesterday by the National Negro Congress that Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox had recommended against award of the congressional medal of honor to Miller, altho a bill has been introduced in congress by Sen. James M. Mead [D., N. Y.] for that purpose. Knox claimed that Miller had been suitably recognized thru a letter of commendation sent April 1 and an advancement in his rating.

It was considered significant here that the navy department's announcement of the navy cross award said that the President had awarded the medal, altho the secretary of the navy or commanding officers are delegated that authority by the President. Apparently, Mr. Roosevelt saw to it personally that Miller got the award, in view of recent charges that the navy department has shown racial prejudices.

Mead to Push Bill.

Sen. Mead said today that he has brought to the President's attention "again" his bill to confer the congressional medal of honor, the highest possible award, on Miller, indicating that he plans to push for its passage despite Knox's disapproval.

Commenting upon the President's award of the navy cross, Mead said, "I was elated as the pioneer in the movement to honor Doris Miller, the courageous mess attendant, who is one of the outstanding heroes of the Pearl Harbor attack."

In awarding the medal to Miller he was cited "for his distinguished devotion to duty, extraordinary courage, and disregard for his own personal safety during the attack." The earlier commendation from Knox described his brave action on that fateful day as follows:

"While at the side of his captain on the bridge Miller, despite enemy strafing and bombing and in the face of a serious fire, assisted in moving his captain, who had been mortally wounded, to a place of greater safety, and later manned and operated a machine gun until ordered to leave the bridge."

Miller, a resident of Waco, Tex., enlisted as mess attendant third class at Dallas on Sept. 16, 1939. He now rates as a mess attendant, first class.

In connection with Miller's case, it was also recalled that an amendment proposed by Sen. Warren Barbour [R., N. J.] to the pending women's auxiliary army corps bill in the senate, providing against racial discrimination, was knocked out on the recommendation of the war department last week.

Testifying on the bill on Friday, Brig. Gen. John H. Hildring, assistant chief of staff, said: "The war department feels that such an amendment is unnecessary. The war department intends to organize colored units for services at appropriate stations, but is opposed to any amendment which raises the question of discrimination against any person on account of race or color."

The bill was reported to the senate today without the restricting amendment, but there were indications it would be offered in similar form from the floor during debate.

The Black Hero of Pearl Harbor

DORIE MILLER, the Negro hero of Pearl Harbor, will be honored with the distinguished navy cross. This honor upon the brave colored soldier who manned a machine gun outside of the line of his duty to stop the common enemy is a fitting recognition to a man whose devotion to duty, whose extraordinary courage, and whose disregard for personal safety went far beyond human endurance.

Had it not been for the Negro newspapers Dorie Miller would have been forgotten and the deeds that he did would have been a latent memory only to those who knew him personally. The navy did not see fit to identify the colored mess attendant who answered the urgent call of his country. Perhaps the policies of the navy made it an embarrassing task to speak of the heroism of a black boy who had to distinguish himself by doing a good job in a line of duty that only white sailors were authorized to do. Thus, months passed before we were able to know just who the black hero of Pearl Harbor was. Perhaps it was that the technique of ascertaining colored heroes in the navy was not as efficient as the technique of ferreting out colored people accused of crimes. If that be the reason, we can readily understand.

Dorie Miller is a symbol of the American Negro. His courage has been multiplied by black men through the years in and out of the armed forces of the country. The act of doing what he was not supposed to do is characteristic of the son of the colored sharecropper who rises to the heights of the medical profession, the legal profession, or distinguishes himself in the business world. He is the symbol of the indomitable will of the American Negro that not infrequently has occasion to express itself. Dorie Miller's deed so vividly illustrates that intestinal fortitude that made the Negro survive by the same factors that extinguished the American Indians.

We joy in the recognition that President Roosevelt has seen fit to confer upon the hero of Pearl Harbor. It is such acts of his which will add zest to the morale of the colored people of this country.

DORIS MILLER AGAIN

The big news of the week in the Negro press is the story about President Roosevelt awarding the Navy Cross to Doris Miller for "his distinguished devotion to duty, extraordinary courage and disregard for his own personal safety" during the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor. But like many other things of this sort which comes to encourage us, there is attached to the story a statement from Secretary Frank Knox which says that the head of the Navy Department is opposed to a Congressional award to Miller at this time.

We are pleased with the President's action. It is just like Franklin D. Roosevelt to do the thing that he did under the circumstances, and we commend him for his courageous act. We use the words "courageous act" in referring to what the President did, because it is our firm belief that it is a lack of courage which causes Secretary Knox's dereliction of duty toward integrating Negro men into the Navy in times like these.

It is interesting to note here that it took nearly three months of prodding from the Negro press before Secretary Knox would acknowledge that a Negro had performed an unusual feat in the navy during the Japanese raid on Pearl Harbor December 7. We said at that time that Frank Knox was not the man to be the head of the Navy Department and that the first step in a navy shake-up would be to "get rid of Colonel Frank Knox." Further quoting our comment which appeared in the St. Louis Argus March 6:

"A story is told of a Negro mess attendant who is credited with having shot down four Japanese planes by manning anti-aircraft guns on a United States war vessel during an air raid at Pearl Harbor. When he was asked how he learned to operate the cannons, his reply was "I just watched the other fellows when they didn't give me a chance to learn with them."

Here was a case of a Negro mess attendant who has shown superior ability to his white associates because it takes a sailor from three to four years to be trained to efficiently man the guns on a war vessel. But this young Negro, whom genius has touched, was able to man the anti-aircraft guns with efficiency and accuracy just by passing by and seeing the other fellows operate them. Surely this is enough to open the eyes of the Navy Department so that it can see that the United States is being robbed of some of the best talent in the nation when it refuses to allow Negroes to train for positions of responsibility in the Navy because one may properly reason that if an untrained Negro could perform such a feat, God alone knows what a trained Negro could do under similar circumstances."

Despite this courage and daring on the part of Doris Miller, Secretary Knox still insists on denying Congressional recognition to this Negro boy, evidently solely because of his color. We might add here that the difference between a Congressional award and the President's award is that the one who receives the Congressional Medal has the right to the floor of the House and the Senate for the rest of his life. This, we think, is the honor which Secretary Knox is doing his d—est to keep from Doris Miller.

Urges Full Participation In Civilian Defense By Negroes

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Attorney General Francis Biddle will urge the President to give the Navy Cross to Dorie Miller, messman hero at Pearl Harbor, he told a committee of the Fraternal Council of Negro Churches in America, in a conference Monday.

The citation of the Waco, Texas messman by Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox, while a good thing, the Attorney General indicated, was not sufficient recognition of Miller's heroism at Pearl Harbor when the Japs executed their sneak attack.

SIXTH CONFERENCE

The conference was the sixth between members of the committee and Government officials preliminary to the Council's National Conference held in Cleveland Tuesday and Wednesday to plan for mobilizing 6,000,000 church members of the eleven denominations comprising the Council for winning the war.

Mr. Biddle told the committee that he was considering the matter of appointment of colored persons to administrative posts and increasing colored personnel in the Justice Department.

He said he also plans to take up with the President several matters he believes will strengthen morale among the colored people.

WOULD FREE BROWDER

The question of the release of Earl Browder from Federal prison, and the reaction of his case on colored people, was raised by Mr. Biddle himself.

Members of the committee pointed out that Browder's political philosophy did not concern them, but that his long fight in helping to free the Scottsboro boys and Angelo Herndon had caused many colored persons to write the President urging him to free Browder.

Mr. Biddle listed eight cases affecting the civil liberties of colored persons, which he said the Justice Department is vigorously prosecuting.

He also cited eight other cases involving lynching and peonage in Texas, Mississippi and Arkansas which are under investigation.

Reveals Knox's Opposition to Medal for Heroic Negro

Washington, D. C., May 10 [Special].—Proposed legislation to award the congressional medal of honor to a Negro mess attendant who won distinction in the Pearl Harbor attack has been disapproved by Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox, the National Negro congress said today.

According to Edgar G. Browne, president of the congress, Knox has expressed his opposition to the award in a letter to Sen. David I. Walsh [D., Mass.], chairman of the naval affairs committee. The committee has under consideration a bill by Sen. James M. Mead [D., N. Y.], to authorize bestowal of the honor on the Negro hero.

Aided Wounded Admiral.

The Negro is Dorie Miller of Waco, Tex., 22 years old. When Japanese bombs began to fall on his ship, he is reported to have run to the signal bridge and there to have assisted a mortally wounded admiral under heavy fire. After helping to get the admiral to shelter, he returned to the bridge, manned a machine gun which he had never been taught to use, and fired it until its ammunition ran out.

Knox's letter to Sen. Walsh, as quoted by Browne, said that Knox had already written a letter of commendation to Miller and that "in view of the recommendations of the Pacific fleet board of awards and the commander in chief of the Pacific fleet, the recognition already awarded is deemed sufficient and appropriate."

Knox also called Sen. Walsh's attention to the authority of President Roosevelt to award a congressional medal of honor to any individual.

Paper Discloses Identity.

Shortly after the Pearl Harbor attack reports were heard of the heroism of an unnamed Negro messman. An investigation by a Negro newspaper, the Pittsburgh Courier, resulted in the disclosure of Miller's identity.

Bills providing for award of the congressional medal were introduced in both houses of congress during March and were referred to the naval committees. Rep. John D. Dingell [D., Mich.] sponsored the measure in the house.

Says Knox Blocked Medal For Miller

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(ANP)—Secy. of the Navy Frank Knox is blocking proposed legislation to award the congressional medal of honor to Dorie Miller, messman hero of the Pearl Harbor attack, it was revealed here this week by Edgar Brown, of the National Negro Council and United Government employes.

According to Brown, Knox expressed his opposition in a letter to Sen. David I. Walsh, (D., Mass.) chairman of the naval affairs committee. A bill introduced by Sen. James M. Mead (D., N. Y.) to authorize bestowal of the honor upon Miller is under consideration by the committee.

Miller, 22, of Waco, Tex., ran to the bridge of his ship when Jap bombs started falling and helped carry to shelter a mortally wounded admiral. Despite the heavy fire, he returned to the bridge and manned a machine gun which he had never been taught to use, until his ammunition gave out.

Brown said the Knox letter to Walsh pointed out that the secretary had already written a letter of commendation to Miller and that "in view of the recommendations of the Pacific fleet board of awards and the commander in chief of the Pacific fleet, the recognition already awarded is deemed sufficient and appropriate."

Knox also called Walsh's attention to the authority of President Roosevelt to award a congressional medal of honor to any individual.

Honors for Private Brooks

It seemed only proper that the Armored Force should honor its first casualty of World War II. So a ceremony was arranged at Fort Knox, to name the main parade ground Brooks Field after Private Robert Brooks, killed in action near Fort Stotsenberg in the Philippines. Armored Force public-relations officers telephoned to the Mayor of Sadieville, Ky., Brooks's hometown, to ask him to invite the soldier's mother and father to the ceremony. Gladly, said the Mayor. But was the Army aware that Brooks's parents were Negro sharecroppers?

Sure enough, Private Brooks was discovered to have been a light-skinned Negro. The Army's face reddened, but the Army's parade-ground voice never faltered. The ceremony went ahead on schedule. Four Generals were on hand, 30 staff officers, a platoon of soldiers. Declared Major General Jacob L. Devers, Chief of the Armored Force: "In this, the greatest democracy the world has ever known, neither riches nor poverty, neither creed nor race, draws a line of demarcation in this hour of national crisis."

'42 Carnegie Medal Given Va. Soldier

PITTSBURGH.—(ANP)— The Carnegie Hero Fund commission announced at its thirty-eighth annual meeting here last Wednesday that out of the 18 awards made for acts of heroism, one went to a 21-year-old Negro soldier, Pvt. Arthur King, Company C, Ninth Quartermaster regiment, Camp Lee, Petersburg, Va., who saved Mrs. Ethel C. Johnson, 2?, of Pittsburgh from drowning last year.

The report of the commission states on last September 21, Mrs. Johnson pulled herself upon a bridge railing, 43 feet above the Allegheny river and dropped into deep water. King, observing her removed his clothing, dived from the railing and swam 10 feet to Mrs. Johnson who took hold of his wrist.

Supporting her with one arm, King swam 265 feet to shallow water. After the rescue, King was fatigued, his nose bled slightly and his body was sore for a week.

FEB 14 1942

Colored America asks America who was the heroic black messman at Pearl Harbor? The Government has just promoted Joseph Lockheart, a white private at Pearl Harbor, who worked overtime in vain to warn his superiors that the "Japs" were coming. The question asked a thousand times who was the black hero has been answered that surviving heroes go unnamed, was thus refuted point blank by Washington. Unless America has decided that 13,000,000 loyal patriots may still be discounted, it will speedily give them an answer to such questions as: Who was the black hero at Pearl Harbor?

The Hero Of Pearl Harbor

THE unknown hero of Pearl Harbor has been identified. The identity of the man who did what he was not supposed to do that the stars and stripes may continue to wave on the territory of the United States, has been revealed.

It was more than three months after the Pearl Harbor incident before the name of the man became known. It was three months after the daring exploit of a Negro messman who manned a machine gun before the Navy released the name of Dorie Miller.

The delay, of course, was characteristic of the American way of doing things when the issue of color is involved. Had the man been accused of raping or assaulting a white person, or any other crime, his identity would have been known immediately. But this time it was for a heroic act of a man who had executed a feat which characterized bravery and valor. He had picked up where his injured white comrades had left off that the invading Japs may know that the United States would not take their assault lying down.

Now that the name has been revealed, it is not asking too much to request that the Congress of the United States give some fitting recognition to the exploit and memory of the colored mess attendant.

Doris Miller did what he was not supposed to do. He did it well. He did it without practice or training. He did it because he believed in the cause for which he was fighting, although the Navy refused to permit him and the members of his race to rise above the status of servants. But when Miller was needed he rebelled against the obvious. He ignored the naval caste system. He knew that a Japanese bomber would fall just as fast if it was struck with the shell fired by a Negro as it would if hit by a gun fired by a white sailor. Many persons in the Navy, unfortunately, haven't yet got around to that way of thinking.

Dorie Miller, we hope, did not die in vain. He lived to rise above the handicap of color by ignoring it. He lived to illustrate the fallacy of racial discrimination in the

Colored Soldier Honored

(From the Army and Navy Register, Service Officer Post 1857 V F W Oklahoma City)

FEB 28 1942

The main parade ground at Fort Knox, Ky., was named Brooks Field in memory of a colored soldier.

Upon hearing from Washington, D. C., that Pvt. Robert H. Brooks, killed near Fort Stotsenburg, P. I., on December 8, was the Armored Force's first casualty of the war. Maj. Gen. Jacob L. Devers, Chief of Armored Force, ordered that the field be named in his honor. His parents are colored share-croppers living near Sadieville, Ky.

Gen. Devers, in his speech of dedication, touched upon this matter as follows:

"For the preservation of America, the soldiers and sailors guarding our outposts are giving their lives. In death there is no grade or rank. And in this, the greatest democracy the world has known, neither riches nor poverty, neither creed nor race draws a line of demarcation in this hour of national crisis."

The ceremonies were among the most impressive ever held at Fort Knox. At reveille on December 23, the flag was put at half mast. Shortly before 11 o'clock all commanding officers and their staffs at Fort Knox took their places near the flagpole. Nine generals were in attendance. A platoon of dismounted infantry of the 1st Armored Division formed in a double rank facing the flagpole. The band of the 5th Armored Division played appropriate music. Gen. Devers delivered the address, in which he said, in addition to the above:

"On December 8, the first day that America entered the war, Pvt. Robert H. Brooks died on the battlefield near Stotsenburg in the Philippine Islands. For him, the first soldier of the Armored Force to be filled in action, this parade ground, with its flag now at half mast, will be named 'Brooks Field.'

"Reveille has sounded for all living Americans. In the factories and on the farms—in the mines and on the railroads—in the homes and in the offices all are answering the call. Yet none can make a greater sacrifice for the nation than the soldier who gives his life. For Robert Brooks, the bugle will sound taps."

Armored Force Chaplain Lieut. Col. William D. Cleary offered a prayer. Taps was sounded and three volleys were fired by the platoon.

Gen. Dever's letter of condolence to the parents of this soldier follows:

"My dear Mr. and Mrs. Brooks:

"It is with the deepest regret that I have learned of the death of your son, Robert, who gave his life in the defense of his country, December 8, 1941, in a battle near Fort Stotsenburg, Philppine Islands. With appreciation of your suffering, my sincere sympathy goes out to you.

"Robert was the first battle casualty of the Armored Force, and because of this, and because of his excellent record, I have directed that the main parade ground at Fort Knox be named Brooks Field in honor of your son.

"The dedication of Brooks Field will take place at 11:00, Tuesday morning, December 23, and I am sending this letter to you by special messenger in the hope that you may attend this ceremony.

Doris Miller, 'Unnamed Messman,' Operated Gun During Raid

WASHINGTON—(ANP)—In letters addressed to President Roosevelt and Secretary of Navy Frank Knox here Friday, Dr. Emmett J. Scott, former secretary of Howard university and assistant in charge of Negro work of the Republican National committee, asked that official recognition be given to the Negro mess attendant "who never before fire a gun," and who manned a machine gun on the bridge until his ammunition was exhausted."

Calling attention to a published report of eyewitness accounts "officially passed by the navy" of the courage and heroism displayed by Doris Miller at Pearl Harbor on December 7, Dr. Scott declared the purpose of his letters was to invoke "your good offices in suitably recognizing and reward Doris Miller."

"As you are fully advised, the navy department has long been criticized for its present policy regarding the utilization of the services of Negro citizens above prescribed limits," said Dr. Scott.

"Doris Miller's heroism far surpassed that of Lockard's. He was under fire. he superbly met an emergency, he displayed initiative and action in that emergency and brought added glory to the arm of service in which he loyally serves."

Joseph Lockard, white, figured prominently in the official dispatch as the one who gave warning of the approach of Japanese planes at the outbreak of hostilities. Lockard has been promoted and is now reporting to an officers' candidate training school on the way to receiving an officer's commission in the U. S. Army.

Holding that the United States professes an ideal of democracy in which every citizen is presumed to stand on the level of equality with every other citizen, "without regard to race, creed, color, or national origin," Dr. Scott averred "I do not seek to argue that this young colored man deserves at the hands of his country every possible reward that it can bestow, including a distinguished service medal, promotion and such other reward as is usually awarded by the navy to the brave and true.

"Your prompt and favorable action will evoke an expression of approval worthy of your fair, just and generous action, and send a thrill of just pride and appreciation through the ranks of the 13,000,000 colored people of our nation."

HONOR HERO. MESSMEN ON CBS PROGRAM

NEW YORK CITY, Apr. 2—As thirteen million voices clamor for due recognition for the first two Negro heroes in the present war, Dorie Miller and Andrew T. Whittmore, messmen on the Battleship Arizona, the vast outlet of the Columbia Broadcasting System brought their deeds closer to home Sunday night from 10:30 to 11:00 p. m. (EWT), as a feature of its nationally heard program, "They Live Forever."

In a clear and dramatic fashion the program told how Andrew T. Whittmore, messman, was killed by a Japanese bomb during the attacking enemy squadron's first run over its Pearl Harbor target that memoriable day in December, 1941. His buddie, Dorie Miller, messman, lost no time in avenging his friend and a white sailor's death who caught the blunt of the Japs' treacherous attack. Although not trained to serve or handle anything but a tray of food, Miller dashed to the Arizona's gun deck, stationed himself behind a machine gun and was ready for the Japs' second and successful attack. His was a heroic deed and like all the heroes of the present war, Colin Kelly and the others, Miller and Whittmore will live in the hearts of all true Americans, white and colored, forever. CBS itself deserves a tribute, for unlike the Navy Department, it did not leave out America's black sons in honoring those who are giving their all so that democracy may survive.

. . . And Still Messmen

The Navy was in the news last week in more ways than releases of victories and disasters. Secretary of Navy Knox kicked-out over [illegible]00 seamen, radio operators, and shipyard workers as "un-American," in interest of national defense; President Roosevelt submitted Navy names for promotions, and the Navy boasted of an increase of its Negro personnel from 511 to 1051 in the last four months.

But, in all this shifting, promotion and employment, the Negro is still limited to menial messman positions in the Navy . . . despite the fact that Secretary Knox publicly commended Dorie Miller for bravery at Pearl Harbor on December 7.–S.W.G.

There Is Power In "The Blood"

You have been reading quite a bit about the refusal of the American Red Cross to accept blood from Negro doners There is nothing "AMERICAN" about that decision, as you know. There is nothing democratic, charitable or christian about that conclusion, either.

JAN 19 1942

You see now what Prejudice can do. You are sorry the Red Cross saw fit to bow, in serious times, when "anybody's" blood might save a life or lives, to race prejudice.

Men of science had a word to say anent the controversy. Hear the eminent men of medicine:—There is no scientific difference between blood of white and colored people. There is no way of distinguishing between blood of different races' once it is drawn." ALL blood is RED!

That's rotten. The excuse, thinner than tissue paper, is that white soldiers would not submit to a transfusion if they knew the blood came from the veins of a colored person. Can you feature a man, under the influence of ether, almost dead, asking whose blood is being injected into his veins? How many speeches have you heard of a man makng on an operating table while in great pain or unconscious, about the type of blood he needed or from whom it came?

You are in a great conflict to preserve a certain way of life, but you can't go about that work of preservation, in a democratic, christian way. People are always above their heads or beyond their depths when they discuss morality and blood. The less said about whose blood is where, etc.—the less chance of embarrassment for folk given to bragging about what blood flows through their arteries.

You hate to see racial discrimination practiced by an organization that for many years was "Christian". Some people in this country would rather lose the war than do away with Jim-Crow and racial prejudice. If nobody wants your blood, keep it, you will then have strength enough to get down on your knees and pray for the un-AMERICAN RED CROSS! JAN 19 1942

Meritorious Conduct

"The Navy Department, having carefully considered all reported instances of meritorious conduct by officers and enlisted men of the navy during the surprise attack by enemy Japanese on U.S. naval forces at Pearl Harbor, T.H., on December 7, 1941, takes pleasure in commending Miller for the following service which is recognized as according with the best traditions of the naval service:

"For distinguished devotion to duty, extraordinary courage and disregard of his own personal safety during the attack on the fleet in Pearl Harbor, Territory of Hawaii, by Japanese forces on December 7, 1941.

"While at the side of his captain on the bridge, Miller, despite enemy strafing and bombing and in the face of a serious fire, assisted in moving his captain, who had been mortally wounded, to a place of greater safety, and later manned and operated a machine gun until ordered to leave the bridge."

APR 9 1942

Along with other sons of Texas, Doris Miller, mess attendant w h o helped remove his dying captain from the bridge of their bombed and burning ship at Pearl Harbor and then manned a machine gun against low-flying and strafing Jap planes, was this week commended for heroism by Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox. Miller is the first Negro from Texas to be so named by Secretary of the Navy Knox.

Miller, who is the son of Conery Miller of Waco, Texas, for a long time remained unnamed although reports spoke of his heroism. Through the efforts of Congressman Mercantonic of New York, the identity of the son of a Texas farmer, was made known.

Southern Youth Conference Donates Money for Purchase

TUSKEGEE—(A N P)—Highlight of last week's Southern Negro Youth conference, held in the Institute's Logan hall, and attended by dignitaries throughout the south, was presentation to Mr. and Mrs. Conery Miller of $100 by the Conference "to buy at once a U. S. Defense Bond from William Pickens."

The Miller parents were thus honored because of the heroic act o ftheir son, Doris, at Pearl Harbor last Dec. 7, when the Japs' treachery lit the candle between the United States and the Japanese empire.

The Millers gave Mr. Pickens enough of the money for a $100 bond and a $25 bond. The bonds will be sent them by the U. S. Treasury department, he said.

This patriotic gesture by the youth conference came just after Dr. Pickens, representative of the eDfense Savings Staff, U. S. Treasury department, and famed Gen. B. O. Davis, U. S. army, had delivered the closing speeches. Also present, and participating in conference activities, was Capt. B. O. Davis, Jr., son of the general. Capt. Davis is a West Point graduate and now on duty with the 99th Pursuit squadron at Tuskegee.

Proud Father Gets Hero Son's Medal

BARKSDALE FIELD, La.—(SNS)—Because he gave up his life to save a drowning comrade, the soldier-son of a World War veteran was cited for heroism Thursday, June 11, at Barksdale Field amidst the impressive ceremonies which the U. S. Army reserves for those it honors.

His parents, Mr. and Mrs. Reuben Netherly of Newville, Texas were presented the posthumous award by Lieut. Col. Joseph J. Ladd, acting Barksdale comander.

With a fanfare of bugles and the roll of drums the colored detachment marched smartly in review before the parents of the heroic soldier. Standing at attention alongside the parade grounds also were several companies of white troops.

Mr. and Mrs. Netherly stood proudly beneath The Flag in front of the base headquarters building and watched the troops give them "eyes right." Also with them was Pvt. Netherly's grandmother, Mrs Birdie Kelley of Newville.

Mr. Netherly stood snappily at attention during the ceremony. Once again in memory he was marching with the 15th Regiment of the Buffalo Division, with which he was stationed at San Antonio in the last war.

But this time it was different. He was out in front being honored.

At this point, Capt. Podge Reed read the citation in a loud, clear voice which could be heard all around the parade grounds.

"Citation for soldier's medal posthumous award," he read. "L. C Netherly, deceased (Army Serial Number 38,053,496), private, Company A, 65th Infantry Training Battalion, United States Army. For heroism displayed in attempting to rescue a comrade from drowning near Camp Wolters, Texas on July 26, 1941.

"When several soldiers were swimming in a pond after completing a night march, one of the men was seen struggling in the water. Realizing his comrade was in grave danger of drowning, Private Netherly, with utter disregard of his own safety, suddenly jumped into the water and went to his rescue. In the struggle the soldier in distress was saved but Private Netherly lost his life."

Then Col. Ladd stepped forward and presented the bronze medal to Mr. Netherly and uttered words of praise for his brave son.

The entire day was one which the Netherlys will never forget. On their own farm in East Texas they had arisen early, for there was a five-mile walk to the highway over an almost impassable dirt road. An Army car was waiting for them at the nearest point to their farm.

Neighbors, even as proud as the Netherlys, waved them farewell.

When the Netherlys arrived at field, it was time for lunch. They were guests of honor of Barksdale's 2nd Aviation Squadron. A special white table cloth was brought out for the occasion.

The dinner brought back memories to Mr. Netherly.

"It's a lot different from the beans we got in the last war," he chuckled.

After lunch, the Netherlys were escorted about the air base and shown the sights. As planes zoomed overhead and as the army "peeps" rolled by, former Private Netherly of the first World War declared it was a lot different from the last time. He nodded his head with approval frequently as he witnessed the various activities.

Navy Slights Miller, Hero of Pearl Harbor

NEW YORK, N. Y. — The name of Dorie Miller, gallant messman, was not included in the Navy's latest list of citations for heroism displayed by American naval personnel during the attack on Pearl Harbor last December 7 by Japanese bombers.

The New York Times, however, has just published a dispatch from its Honolulu correspondent, Robert Trumbull, revealing that the Navy's Service Cross has been awarded to Sergeant Thomas E. Bailey, of St. Joseph, Mo., a white member of the medical corps, for displaying the same sort of heroism attributed to Miller.

Bailey's citation, as reported by the Times, reads as follows: MAY 9 - 1942

"Sergeant Bailey swam to an adjacent battleship when the Oklahoma capsized and assisted in the rescue of the crew.

"Then, on his own initiative, he manned an anti-aircraft gun in the midst of the bombing and strafing and despite the fact that he had no previous experience with this type of weapon."

IN CALIFORNIA

Miller has been in the California Bay area for the past 11 days. His ship is undergoing repair.

MAY 9 - 1942

America's No. 1 hero says that he has been in two battles since that at Pearl Harbor.

A hospitality and recreation entertainment and program committee is preparing a great party for Dorie. He is much talked to and much talked about while on the Pacific Coast.

To Unveil Plaque For Pearl Harbor Victim At Washington

APR 23 1942

NORFOLK — A plaque in memory of Irving C. Anderson, son of Jonas Marcellus Anderson, 2431 Hale Street, and 1933 graduate of Booker T. Washington High Shcool, who was killed in the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor on December 7, will be dedicated at memorial services to

Young Anderson, mess attendant, first class, is the first known graduate of Washington High School to die in action since the outbreak of war. He was serving on the S. S. Arizona when the Nipponese bombers struck their surprise blow.

A graduate in the class of 1933, he was well known and well liked by Washington students and Norfolkians.

Anderson, 25, was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Jonas M. Anderson of 2431 Hale Street. He had been in the naval service six years as a mess attendant. APR 23 1942

After his training period at the Norfolk Training Station, he was assigned to the ship on which he died.

The young seaman had not been home for two years. In June of 1941, he married Miss Anna Logan while in California and left immediately for maneuvers in the Pacific.

SPOTLESS RECORD

His record in the service was spotless, and while in Norfolk he held membership at St. John AME Church. Anderson had also studied printing for two years at Hampton Institute after graduating from high school.

He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Anna Anderson, who lives in California; parents, two sisters, Mrs. A. B. Rasberry and Miss Martha Anderson, a senior at Knoxville College, and a brother, Marcellus Anderson, all of Norfolk.

PRESIDENT MAY GIVE DORIE MILLER MEDAL

MAY 9 1942

Pittsburgh Courier

(Special To The Courier)

WASHINGTON, D.C., May 7—Dorie Miller, messman hero of Pearl Harbor, now in the United States, may be given the Congressional Medal of Honor.

It was learned here late last week on unimpeachable authority that President Roosevelt is considering making some official recognition of the heroic action of the 22-year-old Texan, who manned a machine gun during the infamous attack on Pearl Harbor by Japanese troops last Dec. 7.

Neither Navy officials nor Stephen Early, secretary to the President, would affirm or deny the possibility of Presidential action.

However, it is strongly hinted that the matter of a medal to Miller was presented to the President at his cabinet meeting Friday. MAY 9 1942

President Roosevelt has the power and authority to make such an award, without the necessity of conferring either with the Congress or with Navy officials.

ORGANIZATIONS ACTIVE IN FIGHT FOR ACTION

Pittsburgh, Pa

Realizing the wide-flung morale effect the conferring of official recognition on Dorie Miller for his heroic exploits would have on the entire Negro group, the Fraternal Council of Churches, the Southern Negro Youth Council, the National Negro Congress, leading fraternities and sororities, as well as thousands of individuals, joined The Pittsburgh Courier in its proposal that some tangible recognition of the youth's bravery be cited.

The Pittsburgh Courier first "broke" the story on Dorie Miller, following weeks of intensive search. Their "scoop" was widely heralded on the radio and in the daily press of the nation.

The Fraternal Council of Churches even went so far as to take up the matter with Attorney General Francis Biddle.

DORIE MILLER IS NOW IN CALIFORNIA

According to an ANP release by Lena Wysinger, Miller is now somewhere in the Bay Area of the Pacific Coast and has been there for the past 11 days.

His ship, according to this report, is undergoing repairs.

In talking with Mrs. Wysinger, Miller says he has been in two battles since Pearl Harbor.

Negro Mess Attendant Is Decorated

Washington, May 11—(INS)—The Navy Department today announced that Doris Miller, Negro mess attendant, has been awarded the Navy Cross by President Roosevelt for heroism displayed during the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor.

Miller was cited "for his distinguished devotion to duty, extraordinary courage and disregard for his own personal safety during the attack."

On April 1, Secretary of Navy Frank Knox commended Miller and also advanced him in rating. The Secretary's commendation stated that "while at the side of his captain on the bridge, Miller, despite enemy strafing and bombing and in the face of a serious fire, assisted in moving his captain, who had been mortally wounded, to a place of greater safety, and later manned and operated a machine gun until ordered to leave the bridge."

Dorie Miller Promoted To Higher Messman Job

He has been given an advance in rating, however, so that where he was originally Mess Attendant Third Class when he first enlisted September 1939, he now has the glorified title of Mess Attendant First Class. He still is permitted to hustle trays of food.

Rogers Says:-

NO NEGRO GOT THE CONGRESSIONAL MEDAL IN WORLD WAR I—CITES PROOF IN HISTORY DISPUTE

BY J. A. ROGERS

Pittsburgh Courier

DORIE MILLER has been awarded the Navy Cross. But the regrettable thing is that it came not as a result of spontaneous patriotic pride; not from the admiration of a brave deed as the other medals so far awarded but as the result of much agitation by Negroes and their white friends. Dorie Miller either deserved the medal or he did not deserve it. In fact it appears he got it only through intervention of the President.

Mr. Rogers

Why wasn't it awarded without all this unseemly fuss? An old navy man gave me what seems to be the answer — at least it has a familiar ring — but because it would make good propaganda for Hitler and in the hope that the same will not occur again, I refrain giving it, at this time.

CITES OLD WAR ORDER

As regards the fact that Dorie Miller was not mentioned in the dispatches and that what he did was known only by chance, we can be generous and say that in the commotion of battle brave deeds by white men also went unrecorded; but, one fact is evident: Ever since the first World War there has been a tendency to play down deeds of valor by Negroes, not by the white American public but in military circles. We do not forget the order that was issued from AEF headquarters in France in 1918 to the French commanders and French people advising them not to praise the Negro troops too highly or to fraternize with them as this would offend white Americans. A copy of this order was later published in a French periodical and in the Negro press.

DID this order explain why not a single Negro was awarded the Congressional Medal in the World War though several earned it. Some 20 or more black men won this highest decoration in the Civil War; and some four or five in the Spanish-American War. How was it then that none got it in the World War, especially after the praise lavished on them by the French commanders and the large numbers of medals awarded them by the French?

MUST PRESS FOR MEDAL OF HONOR

Not only Negroes but all well-thinking white people will feel a lot better if they know that deeds of valor by Negroes in this war are going to receive impartial recognition. From the most primitive times the brave man has always been admired even by the foe and when captured special honors were often shown him. Americans cannot afford to be less generous to a comrade-in-arms than the foe.

IN THE meantime we must not rest until Dorie Miller gets the Congressional Medal. If any man deserved it, it is he. Senator Mead of New York has such a bill in Congress. Let us give him our fullest support.

Herr Westbrook Pegler came back last week with a justification of his attack on the Negro press but it is so incoherent and weak that the best thing to do is to ignore it. He names some Uncle Tom Negro admirer of his who praised him for having taken "a crack at the yellow journalism of Negro newspapers", which reminds me of the following lines from Pope:

"All seems infected that the infected spy

DISPUTE OVER YOUR HISTORY

William Lee Tyson of New York City writes me to say that he had an argument with a man over a statement in "Your History" to the effect that slave masters used to marry their Negro slaves to their white women servants in order to hold the white women and their mulatto offspring slaves. He says that his friend declares that no such thing happened.

I SUGGEST that Mr. Tyson ask his opponent just what book or books he has read on the subject; pin him down for an answer, and if he can't laugh at him. One encounters any number of "smart" individuals who will deny that, this or that thing ever happened—a thing they are often hearing for the first time. I have learned to ignore such people. All such are trying to do is to start an argument and strut their miserable, conceited egos.

PREJUDICE GROWS IN THE SOUTH

However, for Mr. Tyson's benefit I will give proof. In the Archives of Maryland, Vol. 1, pp. 433-34; and Vol. 3, pp. 203-04, will be found the law that fixed a penalty of "10,000 lbs. of tobacco" on masters so marrying their white woman servants. See also Johns Hopkins University Studies in History and Political Science, Nos. 3 and 4; as well as my own 100 Amazing Facts About the Negro, No. 41, where the text of MacCormac is given.

THE explanation of such marriages is that there was much less color prejudice in Colonial America than there is now. Indeed it is not too much to say that there is much more color prejudice in the South now than there ever was in the darkest days of slavery. It happens that I am now doing research for the second volume of my "Sex and Race" which deals with the United States and I am amazed at the number of legal mixed marriages that took place in the South during the days of slavery and of the number of Negro slaves and free Negroes who used to live openly with white women; as well as of the number of divorce cases in which some rich white man named a Negro slave as co-respondent.

Negro Awarded Cross for Heroism

WASHINGTON, May 11.—(AP)—President Roosevelt has awarded the Navy cross too Doris Miller, Negro mess attendant first class, for heroism displayed during the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor.

Secretary Knox had commended Miller April 1 and he had been advanced in rating recently as preliminary awards for his bravery.

The action which won Miller these several honors was that while at the side of the captain on an unidentified ship, Miller "despite enemy strafing and bombing and in the face of a serious fire, assisted in moving his captain, who had been mortally wounded, to a place of greater safety, and later manned and operated a machine gun until ordered to leave the bridge."

Asheville, N. C. Times
May 12, 1942

Negro Mess Boy Wins Cross

SOME weeks ago Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox published an order for the first time entitling Negroes to positions as non-commissioned officers in the Navy. Last Monday, on the Secretary's recommendation, President Roosevelt awarded the Navy Cross to Doris Miller, Negro mess attendant, for gallantry in action at Pearl Harbor.

This 22-year-old native of Waco, Texas, had never fired a gun before his enlistment in the Navy two years ago. He is now recognized, in the Secretary's words, for "his distinguished devotion to duty, extraordinary courage and disregard for his own safety."

Secretary Knox's recommendation relates that this cook or waiter stood by his captain "despite enemy strafing and bombing and, in the face of serious fire, assisted in moving his captain, who had been mortally wounded, to a place of greater safety, and later manned and operated a machine-gun until ordered to leave the bridge."

Doris Miller demonstrated in the acid test at Pearl Harbor that his Government's estimate of the bravery and the resourceful initiative of the Negro was not misplaced.

The first American to shed his blood in the War for Independence was Crispus Attucks, a slave, killed in the Boston Massacre. In every war America has waged the Negro has borne himself as a man and a patriot, although in our still far from perfect democracy he often finds himself denied some of the fundamental rights of man.

COURIER CAMPAIGNS FOR RETURN OF DORIE

SPECIAL TO THE COURIER
(By Staff Correspondent)

WASHINGTON, D.C., June 25—Where is Dorie Miller?

Why can't Dorie Miller, the messman who risked his life to save that of his dying captain at Pearl Harbor, be returned to this country so that his people may see him?

Why does the Navy Department find it so easy to return other men—commanders of battleships, commanders of submarines and destroyers, aviators and other personnel—and so difficult to return the heroic mess boy, Dorie Miller? Men who fought in the Coral Sea in May have been returned to the United States.

Men who fought at Midway three weeks ago have been returned to Hawaii and the United States.

Men who participated in the raid over Tokio in April are here pepping up production in war plants.

But Dorie Miller, the mess boy who grabbed a machine gun at Pearl Harbor December 7 and stuck by it until his ammunition was exhausted, can't be found and can't be returned.

"Where is my boy?" the mother of Dorie Miller wants to know.

Fifteen heroes of this short war—American and English heroes (all white)—have been taking the message to the people of this nation that we are at war. But all the people of this nation are not white.

Thirteen million of them are of the color and race of Dorie Miller . . . Hundreds of millions of those who fight with and for the United Nations are colored, as is Dorie Miller.

White and black and yellow and brown heroes are all shedding the same red blood for freedom's cause. Black and yellow and brown people have the same pride in their heroes that white people have in theirs.

The Navy Department has given Negro citizens little enough opportunity and little enough encouragement. It has offered to Negroes a limited segregated training program and asked them to be happy about it. It has suggested to Negroes that they try to make good under this limited segregated program. It has hinted that if they make good under this restrictive program the Navy Department may, out of the goodness of its heart, open the doors a little wider.

Such an attitude is insulting to citizens who believe in themselves and the nation they have helped to build. No such proposition would be put to any other class of American citizen. Negroes want no concessions from the Navy.

They want the same privileges and opportunities for service and sacrifice and advancement vouchsafed to all other citizens.

They want to play their full part in naval aviation. They want each and every branch of the naval service opened to them on the basis of merit. They want to command battleships, aircraft carriers, submarines, naval and air squadrons if they show ability. They don't want artificial barriers or rules and regulations obstructing their advancement and service.

If Secretary Knox showed the same forthrightness in the Navy Department that he showed last week in the Hudson Motor company strike, the Navy Department barriers would vanish over-night. A simple, routine order from Secretary Knox would bring Dorie Miller back to the United States.

We want the Secretary to issue this order so that he may perform the same service among his people that the white heroes are performing among their people.

If they are needed, he is needed.

If they can be spared, he can be spared.

Dorie's Valor Seen In Mother

By ST. CLAIR BOURNE

Special

"I got a letter from Dorie last Wednesday. He doesn't write very often. He said he was well and feeling fine. I don't know when he'll be coming home. He doesn't either. But we sure will be glad to see him." Mrs. Henrietta Miller spoke without the least affectation. She was talking about a youth whose name has been on the lips of the entire country. But her words were not those of a hero-worshipping woman. She was, plainly and simply, a mother talking about her son. Sturdily built example of womanhood, unassuming in manner and yet completely unawed by the attentions showered upon her, Mrs. Miller exhibits the same traits of character with which recitals of his heroic exploit endow her son Dorie. There's a down-to-earth quality about her which convinces one that in an emergency she too has what it takes to meet the situation squarely.

She is appreciative of the fuss being made over Dorie. No mother is proof against that. But it hasn't in the least upset the balance of her everyday life.

"I guess I'll have to be getting back home soon," she said quite matter of factly, when someone asked her how long she expected to be in New York. The reason—and she have it readily—she has to help her husband, Conery, on the farm near Waco, Tex. He was also invited to visit the big town but he felt it better for him to stay home and carry on until she returned.

Mrs. Miller will tell you as much about Dorie as you ask her. She doesn't seem to feel that everyone she meets is eager to hear about her son, so she doesn't force it on anyone.

And besides, she has three other sons. Selvia, 27, the oldest, is married, has a defense job in California. Conery jr, 25, also married, is in the army, in a training camp. Arthur James, 20, the youngest (Dorie is 22), has a defense job near his home in Texas, accompanied his mother to New York. Arthur James, incidentally, has received his draft questionnaire and expects to be called soon himself.

The Millers are a Texas family completely, all native-born. Mrs. Miller's maiden name was Murry. She and her husband, Conery sr, raised their four sons on the farm, haven't had the easiest time of it, but are still managing to get along.

The effect of the depression on farming was indirectly responsible for Dorie joining the navy. He signed up in Waco, after trying vainly to find employment to help the family along.

That was three years ago, this coming September 16. At first he served on the USS West Virginia. Later he was transferred to the Arizona. There's where the japs found him at Pearl Harbor.

The Millers' yearning to see Dorie again is not prompted by the fact that he has become a hero. They just want to see him again.

"When he wrote me before," Mrs. Miller said, "he said he guessed he might not be back home until about 1945. I guess maybe he's about right too."

Song of Dorie Miller In Schomberg Library

Emmett (Babe) Wallace is a mighty proud young man these days because his Song of Dorie Miller has been placed in the famous Schomberg collection, and is now also on file in the Research Institute of America. Emmett, whose appearance on a recent America At War program was an important milestone in his professional career, will make his bow once more to Harlem audiences when he goes into Smalls Paradise, July 28, as singing emcee—at the tidy little sum of 75 smackers per week.

Wallace, one of the most personable and popular performers in show business, has been front man for the Ella Fitzgerald band, and is the composer of the songs A Chicken Ain't Nothin' But A Bird, and Git It, Git It, I Love To SeeYa' With It.

Texas Politicians Block Hero Miller's Congressional Medal

Informer
JUN 27 1942
Houston, Texas

(From New York Amsterdam Star-News)

Texas politicians, the Star-News was told this week, were primarily responsible for official denial of the coveted Congressional Medal to Dorie Miller, heroic Negro messman who raced from the galley of the U.S.S. Arizona during the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor last December 7 and distinguished himself "above and beyond the call of duty."

This startling information came to light as a result of the story published in last week's Star-News to the effect that buttons, allegedly for the benefit of Mr. and Mrs. Conery Miller of Waco, Texas, parents of Dorie Miller, were being bootlegged in Harlem. It is definitely understood that the Admiralty was in the forefront of the fight to have the Congressional Medal awarded to Miller.

The official report of the action has not yet been released, but observers insist that it was the howls from congressmen "deep in the heart of Texas" that ruled only the Navy Cross for Miller. The Congressional Medal of Honor carries with it the life-time privilege of going on the floor of the Congress of the United States.

Meanwhile, in Harlem, the latest offender in the Miller button bootleg case was Guy Dewitt, 2027 Seventh avenue. According to information from Jacques Isler, representative for the Dorie Miller Foundation, Dewitt will not be prosecuted despite the fact that he sold fradulent Miller buttons and was liable to prosecution on charges of conspiracy to defraud. Baker, however, cleared up many points relative to the sale of the phony buttons.

In an exclusive statement to the Star - News, Baker revealed that conflict had arisen when he contacted the Chicago division of the March on Washington Movement several weeks ago. Alton Davis, the Windy City promoter, member of the Chicago - Washington march committee, saw the correspondence and inquired from Baker what right he had to place the buttons on sale since he, Davis, had official approval as representative of the Miller family.

"The heroic deed of Dorie Miller," Davis wrote, "will not be exploited for personal gain."

Will Buy Parents a Home

In the same communique, Davis set forth the purpose of the campaign. "The proceeds," according to the letter, "are to be used for the erection of a monument in Dorie Miller's honor and to purchase a home for his parents."

Baker's buttons, an enterprise of the N. J. Student Aid Fund, were on the eastern market long before Davis' product was on sale. Davis, however, was in possession of the copyright for the manufacture and distribution of the novelty.

Davis seemed willing to cooperate with Baker. He broadly hinted that many distributors who had contacted him were morally questionable. However, in a letter to Baker dated May 7, Davis said:

"Your desire for the franchise covering the State of New York and Washington, D. C. meets with our approval. There are some things I want you to know. First, the Dorie Miller Memorial buttons are copyrighted and as such Federal law covering such rights prohibits the production of a facsimile.

"Therefore, we would advise you to supply us with a certified statement from your manufacturers as to the number they produced and we will rush them a letter of authority covering said amount and eliminate any possible legal action against you."

Davis' correspondence called attention to the fact that the public has been inquiring where the money derived from the sales is going. "I notice," Davis wrote, "that in the sale of the Douglas MacArthur buttons no mention is made of what is to be done with the proceeds."

The local counterfeiting case was discovered May 17 at the Yankee Stadium. "Pitchmen" were peddling the buttons outside the ball park when Baker came upon buttons that were not of the original lot. He tried to trace them, he says, but had little success.

After a hurried trip to Washington to consult Government officials about the matter, Baker returned to New York and found the streets literally flooded with spurious Miller buttons.

It was then that he decided to prosecute, to protect nimself. But, detectives attached to the 28th and 32nd divisions advised that he take no action until he uncovered the manufacturers. It was found that two of the chief offenders were Jack Epstein, 116 Park Row, and the National Badge and Emblem Co., 872 Broadway and 18th street.

Both violators of the copyright charge. The buttons retail for 10 cents, four cents of which goes for production, advertisement, etc.; two cents to the salesmen and the remaining four cents to Miller.

U-Boat Member Gets Awards

Lonnie David Jackson has won promotion in addition to receiving the silver star as a member of a navy submarine's crew of which every member was decorated by the war department.

JUN 4 1942

Jackson was one of the crew of the submarine which loaded a fortune in gold, silver, and securities at Corregidor while the fortress was under Japanese attack. This fortune originally was evacuated from Manila banks and other banking houses to prevent its seizure by the japanese. To load it all took several days. The submarine finally reached this country February 4.

As the voyage was undertaken for the army, the war department decorated each member of the crew with the silver star. Jackson's promotion, of course, was by navy authorities.

Jackson was promoted from mess attendant to officers' cook third class. He comes from Salisbury, NC. His wife, Annie E. Jackson, is now living in Portsmouth, NH, where there has long been a United States naval base.

Ship's Log Reveals Heroic Deeds Of Chief Stewart, Saved 24 Men

Many and daring are the deeds of valor performed by the men of the merchant marine. The following story, which appeared in the Seafarer's Log, organ of the Seafarer's International Union, is an example of the heroism displayed by our men who go down to the sea in ships.

Twenty-four SIU brothers owe their lives to the coolness and courage of Earnest Oxley, Negro chief steward. Oxley, under almost impossible circumstances, single handedly launched a life boat after his ship had been torpedoed and one by one pulled 24 of his shipmates into it from the waters of the Caribbean.

And yet, when the men reached a safe port, Oxley and the rest of the steward's department had to fight like hell to keep the authorities from segregating them from the rest of the crew and sending them to a fourth rate rooming house.

But here's the story from the beginning:

At 5 o'clock in the afternoon of June 17, a large SIU freighter was attacked in the Caribbean by a Nazi sub which sent a single torpedo crashing into No. 4 hold. Many men were trapped below deck and were killed. Those above were thrown into complete confusion because of the complete lack of any decision from the officers.

Some men had been blown overboard by the explosion, others jumped over, some hacked desperately at the lines holding the life rafts—but none went near the life boats!

It seems that the skipper had called the ship's crew together the day before for a life boat drill. In the best brass hat manner, he had announced that if the ship was actually attacked, he would shoot the first man that moved toward the life boats without orders from him.

The ship was settling rapidly after the explosion, the boat deck was awash within three minutes. It looked like the ship would go down taking all the life saving equipment with her and leaving the crew struggling alone in the water, many of them without lifebelts.

Earnest Oxley is not a young man, and he isn't a sailor. But he's been going to sea as cook and steward for many years and he could teach many a cocky kid a thing or two.

He took the situation in at a glance, the fact that the officers had funked out, the fact that many men were in the water and he knew some of them couldn't swim, and the fact that it was still possible to launch the life boat.

Oxley ran quickly to the boat, it was swung out but lashed against the ship. Oxley hacked at the lines, cutting himself in the process, and swung the boat free just as the ship listed sharply to port. The falls fell free. Oxley jumped into the boat and shoved it away from the sinking ship.

A member of Oxley's steward department, young James Battle, was in the water and had been holding a life raft close to the ship so the older men could jump on it if he failed in launching the boat. Oxley pulled Battle into the boat, and between them they rowed around and pulled to safety all the crew in the water. Twenty-four men climbed into the life boat, and were rescued 10 hours later by a fishing smack that saw their distress signals.

When the crew was landed at a safe port, the men were taken to a first class hotel to rest up. That is, all but Oxley and the members of his steward's department. They were loaded into cars and taken to a fourth class rooming house which wasn't fit for the worst gas-hounds on the waterfront, let alone maritime heroes.

Oxley immediately protested and demanded that he and his mates receive as good quarters as the rest of the crew.

It was all pretty upsetting to the authorities. Having a hero on their hands that objected to a fourth rate rooming house was something they hadn't expected. But Oxley hadn't braved a torpedo merely to be frightened by a couple of shoreside stiffs—and he held firm.

Result: All the stewards department were lodged in a first class hotel, given the best of food and treatment, and returned to New York by first class transportation.

Big Housing Project To Be Named Brooks

CHICAGO, Ill.—(ANP)—The $4,840,000 victory housing project of 834 units under construction by the Chicago Housing Authority heretofore designated has been named the Robert H. Brooks homes in honor of Pvt. Robert H. Brooks, Negro soldier who was killed in action near Fort Stotsenburg in the Philippines last December 8 and was the armored force's first casualty of the war.

Now being rushed to completion, the Robert H. Brooks homes will provide housing for war workers whose incomes are below $2,100 a year. Plans are being made for a formal dedication ceremony of the new homes to take place on August 9.

The late Pvt. Brooks' parents, Mr. and Mrs. Roy Brooks, are sharecroppers, living near Sadieville, Ky. They have granted permission to the Chicago Housing authority to name the new victory homes after him.

Gen. Devers' letter of condolence to the parents of Pvt Brooks invited them to attend the ceremonies. He stated: ". . . Robert was the first casualty of the armored force, and because of this, and because of his excellent record, I have directed that the main parade ground at Fort Knox be named Brooks field in honor of your son."

On December 23, in as an impressive a ceremony as has ever been held at Fort Knox, this soldier was honored when the parade ground was named Brooks field. Nine generals and their staffs were in attendance at the ceremony.

Son Of World War Veteran Gives Life For Comrade

"The Informer"
Houston, Tex.

BARKSDALE FIELD, La. — Because he gave up his life to save a drowning comrade, Pvt. L. C. Netherly of Newville, Texas, the soldier son of a World War veteras, was cited for heroism Thursday, June 11, at Barksdale Field, amidst the impressive ceremonies which the U. S. Army reserves for those it honors.

A member of the army for four months, Pvt. Netherly was 19 years old. He was awarded the soldier's medal. His parents, Mr. and Mrs. Netherly of Newville, were presented with the posthumous award by Lieutenant Colonel Joseph J. Ladd, acting Barksdale commander in the absence of Colonel Charles T. Phillips.

With a fanfare of bugles and the roll of drums, the colored detachments marched smartly in review before the parents of the heroic soldier. Standing at attention alongside the parade grounds also were several companies of white troops.

Mr. and Mrs. Netherly stood proudly beneath The Flag in front of the base headquarters building and watched the troops give them "eyes right." Also with them was Pvt. Nethery's grandmother, Mrs. Birdie Kelley of Newville.

Mr. Netherly stood snappily at attention during the ceremony. Once again in memory he was marching with the 165th Regiment of the Buffalo Division, with which he was stationed at San Antonio in the last war. But this time it was different. He was out in front being honored.

Occasionally, as the troops marched by, he would fondly touch the medal he was wearing on his lapel, the medal he had reecived for participation in the last war. True, the ribbon was tattered with age, but the medal itself had been especially polished for the ceremony. It gleamed and sparkled in the afternoon sun.

Came time for presentation of the soldier's medal and there was a little hesitancy. Orders said that the mother should receive it, but "mother" nudged the erect Mr. Nertherly and suggested shyly that he step forward and get it.

"You know what to do," she whispered, "You were a soldier."

Then she looked proudly at him, and Mr. Netherly, beaming with pride, stepped forward.

At this point, Capt. Podge Reed read the citation in a loud, clear voice which could be heard all around the parade grounds.

"Citation for soldier's medal posthumous award," he read. "L. C. Netherly, deceased (Army Serial Number 38,053,496,) private. Company 4, 65th Infantry Training Battalion, United States Army. For heroism displayed in attempting to rescue a comrade from drowning in a pond near Camp Wolters, Texas, on June 26, 1941.

"When several soldiers were swiming in a pond after completing a night march, one of the men was seen struggling in the water. Realizing his comrade was in grave danger of drowning, Private Netherly, with utter disregard of his own safety, suddenly jumpd into the water and went to his rescue. In the struggle the soldier in distress was saved but Private Netherly lost his life."

Then Colonel Ladd stepped forward and presented the bronze medal to Mr. Netherly and uttered words of praise for his brave son.

Once again came the fanfare of bugles and the roll of drums. Marching rhythmically and in perfect step, the colored detachment moved on. It was a great day for them, even as it was for the Netherlys. They had reached the peak of drill, and their drum and bugle corps was performing at an official ceremony for the first time.

The entire day was one which the Netherlys will never forget. On their own farm in East Texas, they had arisen early, for there was a five-mile walk to the highway over an almost impassable dirt road. An army car was waiting for them at the nearest point to their farm.

Neighbors, even as proud as the Netherlys, waved them farewell. All of Newville were happy to hear about their getting the medal.

When the Netherlys arrived at the field, it was time for lunch. They were guests of honor of Barksdale's Second Aviation Squadron. A special white table cloth was brought out for the occasion.

The dinner brought memories to Mr. Netherly.

"It's a lot different from the beans we got in the last war," he chuckled.

After lunch, the Netherlys were escorted about the air base and shown the sights. As planes zoomed and roared overhead and as the army "peeps" rolled by, former Private Netherly of the first World War, declared it was a lot different from the last time. He nodded his head with approval frequently as he witnessed the various activities.

Secretary Says Engineer Battalion Excelled in New Caledonia

WASHINGTON, Aug. 27—An aviation engineer battalion composed of Negro troops performed "exceptionally meritorious" service in New Caledonia immediately prior to the Battle of the Coral Sea, Secretary Stimson said this morning.

He announced that a second infantry division, the Ninety-second, composed of Negro troops, will be formed at Camp McClellan, near Anniston, Ala., during the month of October. It will be commanded by Brig. Gen. Edward M. Almond and will have white and Negro officers.

Mr. Stimson said that Major Gen. Alexander M. Patch had informed him of the fine work done by the Negro battalion in New Caledonia. The troops worked twenty-four hours a day moving equipment many miles overland. They rushed to completion an airdrome which shortly afterward was used by Army and Navy aircraft in the Battle of the Coral Sea.

These Negro engineers unloaded gasoline from a supply ship which had anchored in an uncharted roadstead of the island. They transported the fuel ashore in rafts and moved it rapidly to the airdrome, just in time to service aircraft in the above engagement, the Secretary explained.

Mr. Stimson announced formation of a second new artillery division, the Eighty-fourth. It will be activated in October at Camp Howze, near Gainesville, Texas, and will be commanded by Brig. Gen. John H. Hildring.

42 Negroes Have Held Congress Medal Sought For Dorie Miller

WASHINGTON, D.C., May 28—If Dorie Miller, 22-year-old messman, who proved himself a hero in the Japanese sneak attack on Pearl Harbor on December 7, receives the Congressional Medal as has been proposed in measures introduced in both Houses of Congress, he will be the forty-third member of his race to receive that high award.

Negroes received these medals during the Civil, Indian and Spanish-American Wars... eight of the men honored were attached to naval vessels. It is significant to note that no per-last being presented for valor in 1898.

The death of Master Sergeant George H. Wanton, of this city, several years ago, rendered the last holder of the honor so far as the Negro is concerned.

13 HEROES IN ONE BATTLE

Heroism demonstrated in one engagement during the Civil War, that of Chapin's Farm, Va., during the Union pressure on Petersburg brought the Congressional honor for 13 men, the highest number granted at any one time.

In those engagements there were 316 colored Union soldiers engaged. Their losses were 178 men killed, wounded, or missing, considered a high percentage by army officials.

Four were honored in the Spanish-American War for bravery at Tayabacoa, Cuba, after facing enemy fire to rescue wounded comrades.

BOTH HAVE MEDALS

Speaking of the chief petty officers now at Great Lakes, Officer Strivers was born on January 25, 1895, at Rosedale, Miss. He enlisted in the Navy on April 26, 1918, at Meridian, Miss. He has a wife, Mrs. Mary Strivers, whose address is given as 240 Hammer avenue, Corona, Calif. His home address is given as 942 W. 41st street, Los Angeles, Calif.

Officer Rollins was born on May 28, 1893, at Suffield, Conn., and enlisted in the Navy on June 6, 1917, at Boston, Mass. He has a wife, Mrs. Ricker Rollins, whose address is given as 1 Matthew Henson street, Norfolk, Va. His home address is 3146 Imperial avenue, San Diego, Calif.

Both of these men have to their credit one good conduct medal, which Navy officials esteem, also three good conduct pins. Prior to May 10, when they were ordered to the Great Lakes Station, they had been attached to the Naval Air Training Station at Norfolk, Va.

Dorie Miller's 'High' Award

The facts: Secretary of Navy Knox actually won out in disapproving legislation for the two top honor citations, Miller was granted the lowest possible navy award, the Navy Cross, given for "heroism not being sufficient to justify the Medal of Honor or the Distinguished Service Medal—SWG.

WASHINGTON, May 28—The National Negro Congress, through Edgar G. Brown quotes Knox as having written Senator Walsh: "In view of the recommendations of the Pacific Fleet Board of Awards and the commander-in-chief of the Pacific Fleet, the recognition already awarded is deemed sufficient and appropriate."

CARLISLE BARRACKS, June 4—Information has just been received at Carlisle Barracks that His Excellency Monsieur Elie Lescot, president of the Republic of Haiti, hes decorated Brigadier-General Addison D. Davis, assistant surgeon general, U. S. Army, and commandant of the Medical Field Service, with the National Order of Honor and Merit of Haiti in the grade of grand officer. At the same time President Lescot decorated Col. Albert S. Dabney, assistant commandant of the Medical Field Service School and Col. Egar Erskine Hume, Medical Corps, second in command at Carlisle Barracks, with the same order in the grade of commander.

These honors were accorded the three American officers in recognition of courtesies extended to Major Louis Maximilien, of the Haitian Army, who was recently graduated from the Medical Field Service School, having taken the same course that is given to American officers. Major Maximilien made a glowing report to the Haitian government on the value of the training he received at the Medical Field Service School and particularly on the courtesies that were accorded him. On the day before his graduation a special review was held in his honor at which the Haitian National Anthem was played and accorded the same courtesies as the Star Spangled Banner. Major Maximilien returned to Port au Prince and has resumed his duties as commandant of the Military hospital and assistant to the surgeon general of the Haitian army.

The National Order of Honor and Merit of Haiti is the highest decoration which that government awards. The grade of grand officer is next to the highest grade in the order and just below it comes the grade of commander. The insignia consists of a white enameled cross of four arms, and in the center the arms of Haiti. It is suspended from a ribbon of light blue edged with red. The cross is worn at the neck by commanders and grand officers. Grand officers, in addition, have a plaque worn on the right side of the chest. The plaque consists of the insignia mounted on a silver star approximately three and a half inches in diameter.

One of the comments made at the time of Major Maximilien's graduation at the Medical Field Service School pertained to the courtesies that have been extended Negro officers at the school. There have been a number of Negroes graduated in each of the classes at the Medical Field Service School and these officers are now serving in widely separated stations throughout the service. Reports received from many of them indicate that they are highly efficient and are carrying on the traditions of the Medical Field Service School and living up to its motto which is: "To conserve fighting strength."

This Is His Name

Another story of human courage has come from the Pacific. There have been many, there will be many more. This one is about a Negro sailor—a mess attendant. It recalls to mind the Negro mess attendant at Pearl Harbor who stood his ground, firing a machine gun at attacking war planes despite the shower of bullets and bombs.

This story is told by a young naval ensign who was rescued, with other seamen by the Negro.

After a U. S. destroyer was hit by the Japanese and was sunk, the ensign reports, a powerful Negro mess attendant, swimming, towed a raftload of wounded seamen through the shark-infested waters near the Solomons for six hours before a barge sighted the raft and picked up the men.

The ensign said that he did not know the Negro's name, but knew only that he was called "French." At the time that the Negro began to tow the raft and the wounded men, he was warned that the water was infested with sharks. "I'm gonna tow this old crate in," the Negro replied. "Just keep telling me if I'm going the right way."

The ensign did not know this man's name. But all Americans should. His name is legion. His name is the name of many Negro soldiers and sailors who fought in the first World War—his name was on the roster of the fighting 369th. His name was on the list of those men killed at Pearl Harbor. His name—but there is little to be gained from simple recounting. His name is legion.

He is an American hero, a man of whom whites and Negroes alike can be very proud.

Mayor La Guardia praised the members of the National Maritime Union at City Hall yesterday as he presented thirteen medals for heroism and 112 silver pins to merchant seamen who had been on torpedoed vessels.

As a noonday crowd of several thousand watched the ceremony, the Mayor said the medal presentations were a feature in the country-wide observance of National Maritime Day.

"When the history of the war is written," the Mayor said, "the work of the men and women of the National Maritime Union should receive full recognition. These medals are badges of defiance to our enemies. Wear them proudly and we will crush and defeat them in their own territories."

Miss Carmen Maria Quinonez, a stewardess, received one of the silver pins for having guided a woman and three small children to safety when their vessel was torpedoed. After leaving the vessel she administered first aid to three injured passengers in a lifeboat. The merchant seamen wore sashes saying "Torpedoed at Sea" and "Keep 'Em Sailing."

Fifteen hundred members of the union marched to City Hall, with twenty cadets from the training ship Prairie State as a guard of honor. The sailors brought their own band along to supplement the music of the Sanitation Department band.

Frank J. Taylor, former Controller, who is now president of the American Merchant Marine Institute, said this country's victory would be won largely by its merchant marine and added that ship production had increased three times over its 1941 volume. Joseph Curran, president of the National Maritime Union, said the merchant seamen who had been torpedoed were back on duty and praised the indomitable spirit of the men. Earle D. Wolfe, credited with sinking a submarine on a voyage to Murmansk last December, received a medal for the feat.

Question Honor To Elsberry

JUN 9 1942

Ellsberry, a mess attendant, was the first Birmingham citizen to die in the armed forces in World War II.

(Efforts and suggestions that one or two Negro parks in Birmingham be named for Ellsberry have failed, despite the sentiment of Negro people in Birmingham.)

"This mess-man business is a mess. Julius Ellsberry, Negro mes attendant, so says the National Federation of Constitutional LiLberties, manned a machine gun at Pearl Harbor and otherwise performed heroics until he was killed. Nice going for Julius, but ain't this the same thing for which they gave Dorie Miller a Navy Cross? How about a cross for Julius' family, and what about that Filipino mess attendant, reported by an eye witness as aiding Dorie or Julius? What happened to him? Did he get pushed overboard as Julius and Dorie fought over who was to fire the gun? Who manned what gun, when, anyhow? Julius can't talk, but Charley would like to get Dorie over a bottle of beer and find out what about this mess . . .

In citing the 26-year-old sergeant for the high award for heroism, the war department general order read:

". . . For heroism displayed on the night of January 5, 1942, at San Bernardino, California. Seeing that a soldier was aiming a calibre .45 service automatic pistol at another soldier with intent to kill, Private O'Berry, with utter disregard of his own personal safety, succeeded in overpowering and disarming the soldier, thereby preventing the killing of the intended victim and possible injury of other soldiers. The heroism displayed by Private O'Berry on this occasion reflects great credit upon himself and the military service."

O'Berry, who attended Rust college in Mississippi and Philander Smith college in Arkansas, was inducted into the Army last July at Camp Robinson, Ark. He was transferred to San Bernardino, Cal., soon after that and recently went to Ft. Ord via cadre.—Photo by Fort Ord Panodama.

Navy Cross For Hero

PEARL HARBOR, Hawaii—A scene during the ceremony held at Pearl Harbor on May 27 as Admiral C. W. Nimitz, Commander-in-Chief of the Pacific Fleet, pinned the Navy Cross upon the blouse of Dorie Miller, mess attendant, first class, who distinguished himself during the Jap sneak raid upon Pearl Harbor on December 7th, 1941.

Name Housing Project After Negro Hero

JUN 23 1942

(Special to the Daily Worker)

CHICAGO, June 22.—In tribute to a Negro soldier killed in the Philippines, the new Victory housing project here will be named the Robert H. Brooks Homes.

Brooks was the first casualty of the armored forces in war. He was killed in action at Fort Stotsenburg, Philippine Islands, on Dec. 8.

His parents are sharecroppers, who live near Sadieville, Ky.

The housing project, consisting of 834 units, will provide home for war workers whose incomes fall below $2,100 a year. The formal dedication will be held on Aug. 9.

Residents of the Ida B. Wells housing project, tenanted by Negroes, were today congratulated by Mayor Kelly on completion of their first anniversary.

"In one short year," he wrote, "the Ida B. Welles homes has become one of the showplaces of the city and a model of its kind throughout the country."

Why Not Bring Back Dorie Miller?

THESE WHITE FOLKS sure know how to mismanage this war. The failure to include Dorie Miller in the triumphant tour of heroes is just another indication. In this war hero party now touring the United States not only are black faces missing, but also Chinese and Russians. Yet, if it had not been for these two races civilization would have been lost already.

This may have begun as a white man's war, but it won't be a white man's victory. Paraphrasing General MacArthur's statement concerning Russia's army—THE HOPES OF CIVILIZATION REST UPON THE ARMIES AND PEOPLES OF RUSSIA AND THE DARKER RACES OF THE EARTH.

We say—bring back Dorie Miller now! He has been kept away too long as it is. If he's a hero, it doesn't matter whether he's black or white. In hours of crisis color of skin can't matter very much. Dorie Miller's captain didn't care whether Dorie Miller was black or white. The main thing that mattered was that Dorie Miller carried him to safety and that he manned a gun until the ammunition was exhausted.

And so in those historic hours of Pearl Harbor once again a black man rose equal to the challenge. Today we can truly say that from the days of Crispus Attacks to the days of Dorie Miller the Negro has presented an unblemished and unbroken record of loyalty and courage.

When Dorie Miller is brought back, don't send him on a segregated tour of Negro districts; have him march with the other heroes, wherever they go. His presence will not only boost the hopes of the Negro people immeasurably, but will be a living lesson in democracy for the VANISHING UN-AMERICAN.

Secretary of the Navy Knox should immediately send the order through It would be a grand face-saving move on his part. Knox was not very strong on giving Dorie Miller a medal, but if he brings him back, all is forgiven.

We feel sort of sorry for folks who try desperately to hold on to yesterday's world of prejudice in the midst of this rising tide of world democracy. We hold no malice toward them for their mistakes in yesterday's world, but we are judging them with exactness in today's society. This rising tide cannot be stemmed. No barrier of yesterday is high enough, no bulwark strong enough, no mythical belief logical enough. Cutting across those barriers and around those bulwarks and sending those myths back to the thin air whence they came, the rising tide of world democracy sweeps on.

UNITY FOR VICTORY IS ITS KEYNOTE. If we are united in war, we will be united in peace. If we are united in peace, we will be united in a world democracy.

UNITED FOR VICTORY cannot come from the top, but must rise from out of the yearnings and necessities of the masses—those who have been pressed to the earth. Here the Negro must make his great decision and take a historic stand side by side with the working people. On this side lies victory of arms and victory of peace. Failure to take this stand will condemn us to ignominious obscurity for uptold generations.

It takes a hero to make a decision and we call therefore for a new race of heroes—heroes like Dorie Miller on the battlefield and on the home front, standing firm with the working cl[illegible]

Negro Swimmer Tows Raft Full Of Wounded Sailors to Safety

OCT 22 1942

By the Associated Press.

HOLLYWOOD, Oct. 22.—A young naval ensign related last night how a powerful Negro mess attendant swam six hours through shark-infested waters, towing to safety a raft load of wounded seamen from a U. S. destroyer sunk by the Japanese off the Solomons.

The ensign was Robert N. Adrian, Ontario, Ore. He was wounded in the engagement, he said in an NBC radio broadcast but despite his injuries he was able to cling to the side of the overloaded raft while the strong-stroking Negro seaman inched his way shoreward.

The mess attendant was known to Adrian only as French. Adrian was immediately hospitalized on reaching safety, and never was able to get the hero's full name.

The rescue occurred after the sinking of the destroyer Gregory by Japanese naval guns. Adrian, wounded in the legs and face, was drifting, aided by a seaman when they sighted one of the Gregory's rafts.

With Adrian and his companion clinging to its sides, the raft started drifting seaward. It was then that the messman stripped off his clothes and tied a line about his waist.

When Adrian warned him against chancing the shark-infested waters, the Negro responded, "I'm going to tow this old craft in. Just keep telling me if I'm goin' the right way," the Ensign related.

Six hours later a barge sighted the raft near shore and the seamen were taken off.

93rd Division Has Distinguished Combat Record from World War

BY STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The reactivation of the 93rd infantry division, at Fort Huachuca, Ariz., on May 15, adds another laurel wreath to the colored soldiers unselfish service record in the military history of the United States. From Bunker Hill to Metz the colored soldier has written his name in blood as a tribute and testimonial of his implicit faith in the tenets of democracy. And now in the greatest battle of them all, World War II or the War of Survival, he is once more on the march in defense of those privileges and liberties. At his best he has unselfishly answered his country's call to repel the enemy, now storming Liberty's gates.

The veterans and recruits now forming the component combat complement of the 93rd have a glorious and unselfish service record to uphold from World War 1 the 93rd has a distinguished and courageous combat record, studded with citations and performance praise, that marks it as a typical "soldiering unit," and this, my readers, in army parlance means real fighting men, schooled in discipline, masters of military tactics, courageous and merciless in action.

The old 93rd was authorized by Congress in May, 1920, for the first time. It was composed of National Guard units from New York, Ohio, Illinois, Conn., Mass., Tenn., Maryland and Washington, D. C.; 369th Infantry, 370th Infantry formed the 185th infantry brigade; the 371st infantry and the 372nd infantry formed the 186th infantry brigade. This division of all colored soldiers with white officers participated in a meritorious campaign that leaves the new 93rd an honorable record to maintain or better.

The insignia worn by this fighting unit was a circle of dark blue with a French helmet of light blue in the center. This division was quartered with a French colonial division who had for an insignia, a bloody hand. Many of the men of the 93rd wore this latter insignia. The insignia was two inches in diameter and the helmet was placed at an eye level angle.

The present 93rd has been activated, with the 25th infantry, well known for its past exploits in the Phillipines and Hawaiian possessions, the 368th infantry and the 369th infantry as a nucleus because of wartime censorship it is not feasible to mention the new additional components which will give the armed forces of the United States another formidable arm, which symbolizes America's powerful growing military might. Suffice to say that from present indications, this division is on its way to play the biggest role any colored unit has ever had the privilege of playing in the complete eradication of Aggressors, Inc., who now thrive on human misery and unprecedented servitude. Therefore, the men assigned to form this "greatest of them all" will undoubtedly be the "cream of the crop," and will be the envy of the recruit and the pride of the nation. JUN 12 1942

In general a division consists of infantry, cavalry, field artillery, coast artillery, air corps, engineers, and signal corps. The staff branches include the general staff corps, the adjutant general's department, the inspector general's department, the quartermaster's corps, the finance department, the medical department, the ordnance department, and the chemical warfare service. Of course World War II has added some additional features that constitute a surprise package for the Mikado and the twirpish housepainter.

The major staff of the 93rd headed by Maj. Gen. Charles P. Hall, his tireless working Chief of Staff Col. Cecil J. Gridley and the Post Commander Edwin N. Hardy along with the remainder of the competent officers of the general and special staff sections of the 93rd Infantry Division are painstakingly working to make this a combat unit, second to none. With such leadership. the 93rd is going to be the pride and boast of this man's army.

From recruit to line officer the full emphasis will be on SOLDIERING. As stated by the post commander, "We are primarily concerned with making and training soldiers, men who will be capable of performing the rigorous duties of combat service with efficiency, accuracy, and willingness to see a job well done, and who in their hearts and minds have at all times, the gravity of their task, and the knowledge of the responsibility and trust that is their honored privilege to hold and protect at all times. We shall not deal in personalities, nor treat men as individuals. Rather they shall all be recognized and treated as soldiers."

This is the acknowledgement and recognition of the high morale under which this division will operate. JUN 12 1942

The important thing to remember is that the reactivation of this division gives the recruit every opportunity for advancement, depending upon his aptitude and willingness to assimilate military training, based upon the desire to become a competent first class soldier. It has the enviable position of becoming the toast of a fighting nation, that has always found her colored citizenry, willing to answer the call for patriots, when the Stars and Stripes were challenged.

Here at Fort Huachuca, the members of the 93rd infantry division have every opportunity of advancement, provided they have the ambition and the willingness to work. The "buck private" can run the limit of his ability, and before he has finished his required time in the service, he may and can be covered with chevrons and medals. Of course, these badges of achievement are earned and not given out as Christmas gifts. All the recruit is asked to do is "soldier."

On a short routine inspection tour of a small section of the post, I have discovered some soldiers that merit the attention of the public and also those possible selectees who will soon be numbered among Uncle Sam's finest.

In the 25th Infantry I found First Sergeant Samuel Baker who has been in the service 29 years and who is the proud possessor of the Soldier's medal given in honor of his heroism in a huge grease fire which threatened the lives of men here at the post. His friend and inseparable "buddy," Peter Hardley Jr., also of the 25th Infantry, and staff sergeant par excellence, received his Soldier's medal for saving the lives of officers and their wives when a soldier ran amuck and killed four people on the post. He has a service of 24 years.

Over in the medical division is Master Sergeant Robert G. J. McLurkin in charge of the station hospital, who has been in the service for 30 years and was the first colored Technical Sergeant in the medical division, receiving that coveter honor in 1922. He was made master sergeant in 1938.

A shining example for recruits is Sergeant Major George B. Edwards of the 369 infantry division, who made this rapid advancement in the short time of 13 months after being drafted. Sgt. Edwards has shown exceptional ability, and according to his superior officers is a biilliant and talented soldier and shows promise of moving on up in the ra... The rank is a very important one in the smooth working mechanism of complicated army routine. He has just passed his 26th birthday.

Crack marksman First Sergeant Joseph H. Clarke of Lake Charles, La. He has been a champion with the Browning Automatic for 11 years, the bayonet for 14 years and the .45 cal. service piece for two years. Recently he scored 321 out of a possible 350 with the new Garland automatic rifle. He also has been in the service for quite some time, having served 22 years.

'That's My Boy!' Says Newark Mother Of Negro Hero Who Towed Life Raft

N.Y., N.Y. OCT 25 1942

The Navy is trying to identify and locate "a big Negro named French" so it can give him a medal. There's a woman in Newark who can tell them who he is.

"He's my boy," says Mrs. Millie French, a fat, jolly woman who lives at 12 Newark St. "He's my big boy Fred. I'm so proud since I saw the story in the papers, I'm just a new woman."

French's exploit was related by Ensign Robert N. Adrian in an NBC broadcast from Hollywood Thursday. Adrian said that when the destroyer Gregory was sunk by the Japanese in the Battle of the Solomons, he was on a raft so crowded with wounded American seamen that some had to cling to the sides. OCT 25 1942

A powerful Negro, known only as "French," tied a line around his waist and announced that he was going to "tow this old crate in."

He plunged into the shark-infested waters, swam for six hours, until the raft was sighted by a barge near shore. French was near collapse but still swimming.

Mrs. French says her boy Fred was 20, had enlisted in the Navy as a mess attendant when he was 18.

When he was last home on furlough, in June, he told his mother:

"Don't you ever worry about me. If the ship goes down, I'll just start to swim."

On Sept. 16 Mrs. French got a telegram saying her son was missing. She says she didn't worry too much, knowing what a powerful swimmer he was.

"He learned to swim in the Passaic River when he was a little boy," Mrs. French said. "He'd go fishing for crabs with the other boys, but instead of going after crabs, he'd just swim. OCT 25 1942

"He was crazy about ships. He wanted to join the Navy when he was 17 but I wouldn't sign the papers.

"He was such a pain. His teacher in high school came to the house and said I had to make him stop reading Navy books in school. He was so crazy about the Navy, he'd dream about it all night long and jump up and down in bed.

"My other boy William, he said, 'Get that guy out of here. Sign him in so I can get some sleep.'"

Dorie Miller's Medal

Dorie Miller, colored hero of the Pearl Harbor disaster, has been awarded the Navy Cross for unusual valor and defending his country, even though playing a role for which he had never been trained. For some reason, not yet clear to this newspaper, Miller was not given the Congressional Medal, which is given upon recommendation of members of the U. S. congress.

Under the circumstances it seems that Miller's behavior could be best approved and reserved for nation-wide rallying of other Negroes were congress to vote an award to him. The tribute would be even wider than that already paid by the navy.

How About Dorie Miller?

THE UNITED STATES NAVY, target all these years of every American who deeply resented the discrimination it practiced against Negroes seems to have had a sudden change of heart and now has embarked on its Jim Crow way of establishing a complete Black Navy within the regular structure of our sea-going forces.

While we are prone to accept in this instance the situation on the theory that "half a loaf is better than none," and will continue our fight until the last vestiges of discrimination because of race, creed or color are destroyed, we cannot help but point to the widespread enthusiasm that has swept the Negro districts since the Navy's new policy went into effect.

Two young colored Americans—world heavyweight champion Joe Louis, and Dorie Miller, a humble messhall attendant from Texas—are responsible for what is going on today between the Navy and the Negro. Louis' unprecedented gesture in fighting for nothing to benefit the Navy Relief Fund, and Dorie Miller's act of heroism at Pearl Harbor did more than all the talking and writing we could do for the next 20 years to change the Naval attitude toward us.

Now with Negroes going into the Navy, the Coast Guard and the Marines from all sides (as rapidly as separate quarters and training bases can be built or found for them), we would like to call the Navy's attention to this fact: Nothing would help drive home the new program more than the appearance of Dorie Miller in person at the big military rallies for which such heroes as Commander Bulkeley, General Jimmy Doolittle and others have been brought in.

Why let Miller, the No. 1 hero of Pearl Harbor, continue to sling hash in a warship messhall when his talents and the respect he has won would find him of infinitely greater use back in the United States?

TWO NEGRO SOLDIERS IN NEW GUINEA CITED FOR HEROISM

Scott of Montgomery, Ala., and Franklin of 58 West 128th street, New York, formerly of Charleson, S. C., both Negroes, were recommended for citation by Major Jack Berry, Rose's squadron leader. Scott and Franklin were assisted by Pvt. Harvey M. Crandle, 21 of Greenville, N. C., and Sgt. Jerome Trent, 29, of Johnson City, Tenn., also colored.

Rose's plane crashed while it was taking off to fight raiding Japanese Navy Zero planes. Its fuel tanks burst and spread burning gasoline on the surface of the river.

Just Before Chow

'It was just before chow," Franklin said. "I was walking away from the river after taking a bath when four Cobras took off because of an air raid.

"The last one crashed and smacked into the water about 150 yards from me. At first I didn't know what to do. There were about 20 Zeros over my head, machine gun bullets from the exploding plane were exploding everywhere and there was gasoline burning all around. Why, there were even two dog fights going on above.

"But I couldn't back up and do my duty at the same time, so I went into the water after the pilot.

"Scott, here, and Sgt. Trent were in the boat we were using for a ferry and were even closer than I to the plane, but were on the other side of the river. I finally reached the pilot, who was hanging half out of the plane where one door was off. I lifted the pilot's head out of the water and about that time Scott arrived and helped me work him ashore. Crandle also helped and some American mechanics helped pull him up on the bank."

"Water Much Too Hot"

"What Franklin said is exactly right," Scott put in. "It was much too hot in the water that day."

"Those bullets were coming every which way," he said. "The pilot was dazed and he had an awful looking cut across his nose, but we've heard he is as good as new now. We loaded him into a truck and took him to the hospital; at least, all of us except Franklin. He had to go back for his clothes."

CAIRO, Sept. 17.—Tucked away in today's list of awards for valor in battle is one which deserves to be read in America. To Pvt. John Booysen, Negro member of a South African anti-tank regiment, goes the Military Medal, a high distinction conferred in recognition of extreme bravery.

On June 14, Booysen was in a slit trench near his vehicle when, as the citation says, he "noticed something amiss" at a gun position 150 yards away. Under heavy fire he left his trench and crawled to the gun position, where he found the whole gun crew wounded.

Booysen stayed there under machine gun fire, tending to the wounded, then, disregarding his own safety, he crawled to a nearby infantry post to ask that medical aid be called. He was told this was impossible and, despite advice to the contrary, crawled to another infantry post, where he induced an officer to wireless for a doctor.

Then he returned to the gun position, which was still under heavy fire, and stayed with the wounded for two hours until an ambulance arrived. He helped to evacuate the wounded then went back to his vehicle which had been hit by a shell and badly damaged.

Booysen wrecked the vehicle with a hammer, to destroy its usefulness should it fall into enemy hands, then himself withdrew to a safer place.

3 Privates Decorated By Gen. MacArthur

AUG 29 1942

GENERAL MacARTHUR'S HEADQUARTERS, Australia — Privates Julius Franklin, Charleston, S. C.; Harvey M. Grandle, Greenville, N. C., and James Scott, Montgomery, Ala., received Soldier's Medals at the orders of General Douglass MacArthur last week.

The three combat engineers were decorated for rescuing the pilot of a pursuit plane whose machine crashed into a river in New Guinea. Despite the fact that gasoline, which spread on the surface of the water, became ignited, the three men swam to the plane and rescued the pilot.

They were the first Negroes to be honored for bravery in this area.

Yorktown Captain Saved Negro Seaman

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 17.—Capt. Elliott Buckmaster, commanding the aircraft carrier Yorktown in the battle of Midway, risked his own life to rescue a Negro mess attendant when the ship sank, it was disclosed here today at the 12th Naval District headquarters.

Buckmaster, 53 years old, took the mess attendant who was in distress from a crowded life raft, and swam with him to a whaleboat.

He then put the Negro attendant into the only available space, ordered the coxwain to make for the nearest destroyer, and swam back to the raft.

There he remained until taken off in the regular rescue operations.

A Japanese bomb crashed through the Yorktown's deck on June 4. Two hours later torpedo planes attacked. Most of the crew was forced to leave. For three days the disabled ship remained afloat. Japanese submarines attacked. The destroyer Hammann, hit by Japanese sub torpedoes blew up along side the Yorktown. On June 7 the crippled aircraft carrier sank.

Coxwain Howard Sites of Austin, Texas, told of the bravery of two carpenter's mates trapped in a compartment five decks below the flight deck. The telephones were still in operation though rescue was impossible. "When you sink her (the Yorktown) put the torpedoes up forward. We don't want it to last long," the trapped men said over the phone.

3 U. S. Negroes In Australia Given Medals

Swam Through Flaming River To Rescue Fighter Pilot.

GENERAL MACARTHUR'S HEADQUARTERS, Australia, Aug. 21.—(AP)—Three American Negro soldiers who swam through a flaming river to rescue a fighter pilot "from death or serious injury" today were awarded the Soldiers' Medal, the first time Negroes have been decorated in this war zone.

The three, members of an engineer unit, were Private Julius S. Franklin, of Charleston, S. C.; Private Harvey M. Grandle, of Greenville, N. C., and Private James Scott, of Montgomery, Ala.

Last June the fighter pilot's plane stalled on take-off and plunged into the river, where its spraying gasoline was ignited. Franklin dove into the river, swam to the plane and pulled the pilot to safety. Grandle and Scott, disregarding the danger of exploding ammunition and flames, also went into the river to assist.

'Justify His Sacrifice', Army Honors Colored Hero

SELFRIDGE FIELD, Michigan, Oct. 8 — A new "Don't Talk" army poster at Selfridge Field depicts the heroics of Pvt. Robert H. Brooks, a Negro member of the Armored Force, who gave his life in defense of the Philippine Islands at Fort Stotsenberg.

"Justify His Sacrifice," is the plea of the poster designed, published and distributed at this Army Air Base by the S-2 (intelligence) section. It states that "Private Robert H. Brooks did not hesitate in giving his life in the defense of his country. Would you make his sacrifice unnecessary by revealing information that might cause other members of our Armed Forces to lose their lives while en route to combat areas? . . Don't Talk Army."

Also printed on the three-color poster is the following statement made by Major General J. L. Devers on December 23, 1941:

"For the preservation of America, the soldiers and sailors guarding our outposts are giving their lives. In death there is no grade or rank. And in this, the greatest Democracy the world has known, neither riches nor poverty, neither creed nor race, draws a line of demarcation in this hour of national crisis."

An Unknown Hero—

Negro Tows Raft Loaded With Wounded Seamen For Six Hours

HOLLYWOOD, Oct. 22 (AP)—A young naval ensign related last night how a powerful negro mess attendant swam six hours through shark-infested waters, towing to safety a raft load of wounded seamen from a U. S. destroyer, sunk by the Japanese off the Solomons.

The ensign was Robert N. Adrian, Ontario, Ore. He was wounded in the engagement, he said in an NBC radio broadcast, but despite his injuries he was able to cling to the side of the overloaded raft while the strong-stroking negro seaman inched his way shoreward.

The mess attendant was known to Adrian only as "French." Adrian was immediately hospitalized on reaching safety, and never was able to get the hero's full name.

The rescue occurred after the sinking of the destroyer Gregory by Japanese naval guns. Adrian, wounded in the legs and face, was drifting, aided by a seaman when they sighted one of the Gregory's rafts.

With Adrain and his companion clinging to its sides, the raft started drifting seaward. It was then that the messman stripped off his clothes and tied a line about his waist.

When Adrian warned him against chancing the shark-infested waters, the negro responded, "I'm gonna tow this old crate in. Just keep telling me if I'm goin' the right way," the ensign related.

Six hours later a barge sighted the raft near shore, and the seamen were taken off.

Sister Identifies Heroic Negro Who Rescued Shipmates

OMAHA, Neb., Oct. 23.—(INS) The heroic negro mess attendant who swam for hours towing a raft loaded with wounded American seamen and an officer from the destroyer Gregory through shark-infested waters, was identified by his sister today as Charles J. French, 22, of Omaha.

"That's him," Viola French declared after reading an account of French's achievement in an Omaha newspaper.

"We heard from him about two weeks before the Gregory was sunk, and we've been worried about him. But, we aren't now."

French is the negro who told an officer, "I ain't scared sir," and plunged into the water to tow the raft to shore. Six hours later, still swimming, but near exhaustion, French was picked up by a barge which had sighted the raft near shore.

He served a four-year term in the Navy ending last November, and re-enlisted after Pearl Harbor.

Another Mid-Western Youth Deserves Medal For Bravery, Courage

OCT 30 1942

Swam Six Hours in Shark-Infested Waters to Pull Injured Sailors to Safety; Was Messman on 'Gregory'

The Middle West has scored again with another World War II naval hero.

OCT 30 1942

The Solomon Islands hero who towed a raft full of wounded men to safety through shark-infested waters has been identified as Charles J. French, 22, of Omaha, Neb. French has a sister, Viola, living at 2703 N. 25th street, Omaha.

The first Negro World War II hero was Dorie Miller of Waco, Texas.

French's heroism was brought to light last Thursday in Hollywood, Cal., by Ensign Robert N. Adrian, white, of Ontario, Ore., who was one of the men saved by the Omaha lad's brave act.

Talking on NBC's program, "It Happened in Service," Ensign Adrian told how a Negro messman whom he knew only by the name of French, swam for six hours through shark-infested waters towing a raft full of wounded white navy men to shore.

The ensign did not know the hero's name, saying that he was known only as "French."

OCT 30 1942

Hero a Messman

French, like Dorie Miller, was a messman. He was a part of the crew of the American destroyer Gregory which was sunk in the battle of the Solomons.

Many men and officers were floating in the water. Some including French took to a raft which soon became so loaded with wounded sailors that some of the men had to hang on to the sides.

Ensign Adrian, who was wounded in the legs and face during the Japanese attack, was drifting in the water aided by another seaman when a raft from the Gregory approached. The raft was so crowded that Adrian said he could not get aboard so he clung to the sides.

French, the only able-bodied man aboard the raft, had taken charge. He saw that the raft was drifting out to sea so he determined to do something about it. He began stripping and made a rope of his clothes.

"I warned him," said Ensign Adrian, "that the water was infested with sharks. He continued to strip off his clothes and said that he was going to try to tow the raft to the Solomons."

"I told him again that the water was full of sharks," said Adrian.

French said, "I'm not scared, sir, and if you'll help me tie this rope around my middle I'll tow the raft to shore."

OCT 30 1942

Deserves Hero's Medal

Adrian aided him tie the rope around his waist and French dived in and began pulling the raft toward shore. He pulled the raft for six hours until a barge sighted the raft near shore with French still swimming but near collapse.

Men who witnessed the heroic deed said that if there was any way that a hero's medal could possibly be won, they would see that French had one.

The story was told by Ensign Adrian as soon as he reached the shores of California.

French is about 5 feet, 6 inches, and weighs nearly 200 pounds. His father died when the hero was only 5. His mother died when he was 10. In addition to his sister, French has a brother and a half-brother.

French served a four-year term in the navy, ending his enlistment in November, 1941, just after being in the convoy the Reuben James was escorting when sunk. After Pearl Harbor, French re-enlisted.

Adrian said that when he reached shore he was too sick to think of asking French his full name. On the radio program, he said that the hero was on leave in the United States and broadcast a plea to learn his whereabouts.

NEGRO A HERO IN SOLOMONS AREA

SWIMS AND TOWS RAFT

Filled With Wounded Seamen From Destroyer

HOLLYWOOD, Oct. 31 (INS). — Identity of a negro mess attendant, who swam for six hours in shark infested waters towing a life raft filled with wounded seamen from the U. S. destroyer Gregory, was revealed tonight by the National Broadcasting Company as Charles Jackson French, of Forman, Ark.

Previously identified only as "French," the mess attendant's heroism following the sinking of the Gregory in the Solomon Islands area was told on an NBC broadcast last week by Ensign Robert Adrian, one of the ship's officers.

The broadcasting company said the Navy Bureau of Personnel disclosed that French safely reached a port somewhere in the Pacific.

Unidentified Hero Her Son Newark Mother Fondly Says

OCT 31 1942

NEWARK, NJ—Mrs. Millie French, 123 Newark st, is very proud of her son, Fred, because she is positive it was he who swam six hours thru shark-infested waters in the Pacific, towing a liferaft laden with wounded men from a US destroyer. Report of the exploit, radioed last week without full identification of the Negro messman concerned, stirred the nation.

Mrs. French first heard of the incident when Fred's old boss brough her a NY paper with the story. From the description she knew it was Fred, she says.

Fred tried to enlist in the navy when 17, she recalled, was told to wait another year. He was very restless, "mad about joining the navy," she revealed.

He finally got in the navy in 1939, graduated from Norfolk Training School in September, 1940. His powerful six-foot, 250-pound frame won him a certificate from the Athletic Association of Newark for gymnatics.

Altho the navy department doesn't seem able to reveal the identity of the hero, Mrs. French is convinced. Last month, he said, she received a letter from the navy that he was missing in action, but refused to believe him dead. Now she expects to see him almost any day. He is devoted to her, she fondly says.

First revelation of the exploit came from a radio commentator, interviewing a navy ensign who was one of the wounded on the raft. The ensign knew the messman's last name, French, but not his first, was hospitalized immediately after being rescued and never got the chance to find out the full name, he said in the broadcast.

Two Cities Claim New Naval Hero

CHICAGO.—(ANP)—Just who is the messman known only as "French" whose act of heroism in swimming through shark infested waters near the Solomon islands, as he towed a raft load of wounded white sailors to safety, resulted in praise of his feat over the radio?

Thus far, he has been "identified" by "relatives" in the two widely separated cities, Newark, N. J., and Omaha, Neb.

In the eastern city, he was identified by Mrs. Millie French as "my son, Fred B. French," according to Alfred A. Duckett, Pittsburgh Courier correspondent. She said a telegram had come to her from the navy department listing her boy as "missing" but she had refused to believe he was dead.

The description of the messman as "husky" and "powerful" was another indication that the hero is her son. She said Fred is 5 feet 11 inches tall and weighs 250 pounds. His former employer, a white Newark merchant, also believes this is her son.

However, out in Omaha, the messman was identified as "my brother, Charles J. French," by Viola French, who said their father died when he was five and the mother passed when he was 10.

There are also a brother and a half brother in this family of Frenches. The Kansas City Call carried an article on the Omaha identification.

The messman referred to in Omaha is 22 years old, 5 feet 6 inches tall and weighs about 200 pounds. He is also powerful and husky.

Youth Who Swam 6 Hours In Shark Infested Seas Is Visiting Sister

NOV 7 - 1942

WASHINGTON—The newest naval hero of World War II is Charles Jackson French of Omaha, Neb.

Official identification of the mess attendant who towed a raft load of wounded men through shark-infested water for six hours, was made early this week by the Navy bureau of personnel here.

Through his feat, which saved the lives of injured sailors off the U. S. Destroyer Gregory, which was sunk by the Japaneses off the Solomons, French, takes his place in history alongside Dorie Miller.

French's heroism was first revealed by Ensign Robert N. Adrian of Ontario, Ore., who told of the thrilling incident in a nation wide NBC radio broadcast last week.

Visiting his sister in Foreman, Ark., last week on a furlough, French left for his home in Omaha when official Navy announcement of his heroism was made and he was invited to a big celebration on Armistice Day.

French is a 22-year-old youth who served a four-year enlistment which ended November, 1941. After Pearl Harbor French re-enlisted.

He is about 5 feet, 6 inches and weighs 200 pounds.

His father died when he was only 5. His mother died when he was 10.

French's sister, Viola, who lives at 2703 North 25th street in Omaha, called him long distance when she learned of his heroism and told him: "I used to call you my little brother but I'll have to call you my big brother now."

When Ensign Adrian first revealed in Hollywood that a Negro messman had saved a raft-load of white seamen, he said he knew the hero only as "French."

Adrian was wounded in the legs and face during the Japanese attack and was drifting in the water aided by another seaman when a raft from the Gregory approached. The raft was so crowded that Adrian could not get aboard and had to cling to the sides.

French, the only able bodied seaman aboard took charge. He noticed that the raft was drifting out to sea. Promptly he stripped his clothes off and made a rope out of them. He tide one end around his waist while wounded seamen held the other end. Then he jumped into the sea.

"I warned him that the water was infested with sharks," said Adrian.

NOV 7 - 1942

French replied: "I'm not scared. I'm going to tow this old crate in. Just keep telling me if I'm going the right way."

He pulled the raft for six hours and finally the shore line was sighted. French was still swimming but near collapse. A barge sighted the raft and the seamen were taken off.

Adrian was immediately sent to the hospital and was not able to learn the hero's name until NBC made inquiry after he told his story on the radio.

NEGRO WAR HEROES

New York Age

LAST WEEK THE DAILY press carried a story of a white officer recently furloughed home after undergoing the rigors of many hours at sea on a raft, as a result of the sinking of a U. S. destroyer in the Solomon Island area, before he was rescued. Upon his arrival here, he told of the heroism of another Negro messman who towed a raft-load of his fellow sailors to safety when he found that all hands aboard were too weak from hunger and exhaustion to save themselves. Although the white officer was unable to identify the Negro messman except by the nickname "Frenchy," identification was subsequently made by the messman's mother, Mrs. Millie French of Newark, N. J. His name is Fred French and we hope the Navy Department will give him some fitting recognition for his heroism.

The same paper that carried the story of the Solomon Island rescue also contained a story that another Negro, Lewis Jones, had been sentenced to three years in federal prison because he refused to obey his draft board and fight for Uncle Sam. He objected to the jim crow treatment Negroes receive in the army. The court suspended sentence for three months to give Jones time to "change his mind."

The reason we link the two stories is that we are prone to boast of the fact that Negroes are all potential heroes and make the world's best fighting men, and many of our leaders orate that the American Negro has never been a traitor to his country. This war has blasted this fallacy, not that Jones is a traitor, but several Negroes have been indicted for conduct harmful to the prosecution of this war.

Like other racial groups, Negroes are not all of one piece. We have heroes, and many who are less than heroic stature, so that we shouldn't be too boastful of those who become heroes, nor feel bad for those who are cowards or who feel that they have no reason to fight.

Richmond, Va., Times-Dispatch
November 8, 1942

The Spirit of Victory

THERE is talk of bad feeling existing between whites and Negroes in the service, both at home and abroad, but for those prone to criticize, there comes this interesting item from Great Britain:

An American Negro seaman fell from a dock in Liverpool. A British fireman dived in to rescue him. JASON EASLEY, a white United States gunner aboard a ship, heard shouts for help from the fireman. The gunner dived 35 feet from the ship into the water, swam to the struggling fireman and Negro and helped make the rescue. EASLEY, a Southerner from Amite, La., received a silver award for saving the Negro.

The role of Americans in the war is not apportioned according to races, or according to what each race will accomplish in winning it. It is a common fight by all for all.

Victory will take the combined cooperation and good-will of all, regardless of race, at home and abroad. A total war effort is necessary to accomplish a total triumph.

HEROIC NEGRO'S ACTION

How a Negro mess-attendant saved the lives of six sailors in the Solomon Islands was told by a young naval ensign who was one of the men rescued. He had returned to the United States after his terrible ordeal in the islands.

For six hours, said the ensign, the Negro swam in shark-infested waters, towing the raft loaded with wounded sailors.

The ensign was Robert N. Adrian, Ontario, Ore. He was wounded in the engagement, he said in an NBC radio broadcast, but despite his injuries, he was able to cling to the side of the overloaded raft while the strong-stroking Negro seaman inched his way shoreward.

The mess attendant was known to Ensign Adrian only as "French." Ensign Adrian wa simmediately hospitalized on reaching safety, and never was able to get the hero's full name.

The rescue occurred after the sinking of the Destroyer Gregory by Japanese naval guns. Ensign Adrian, wounded in the legs and face, was drifting, aided by a seaman, when they sighted one of the Gregory's rafts.

With Ensign Adrian and his companion clinging to its sides, the raft started drifting seaward. It was then that the messman stripped off his clothes and tied a line to his waist.

When Ensign Adrian warned him against chancing the shark-infested waters, the Negro responded, "I'm gonna tow this old crate in. Just keep telling if I'm goin' the right way," the Ensign related.

Six hours later a barge sighted the raft near shore, and the seamen were taken off.

When the heroic stories of the war are read by future generations, that of the Negro sailor will be one.

Birmingham Man Awarded Soldier's Medal For Heroism

NOV 7 - 1942

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—(SNS)—Ernest Johnson, 24, a Birmingham soldier, has been awarded the Soldier's Medal for Heroism in London for rescuing a British soldier from a storeroom after the explosion of three land mines, The Birmingham News Wednesday quoted an AP dispatch from London as revealing.

Johnson is one of the first soldiers to be cited for a valorous feat during the war. He was singled out for this award.

U. S. Army Headquarters in England broke the news, relating that Johnson performed the heroic act in company with another soldier, 2nd Lieut. Vernon G. Adams of Kittanning, Pa.

Although two other mines remained unexploded, Johnson and his white companion went through deathly danger to rescue the British soldier from possible certain doom.

NOV 7 - 1942

Mrs. Emma Russell, the hero's mother, lives at 2419 3rd Avenue North. "I am too happy to talk," she said thrillingly when interviewed yesterday.

Mrs. Russell said that the hero was born in Benton, Lowndes county. He is the only child and was drafted into the Army in May, 1941.

No Color Line In Courage

There is no color line for courage. A Birmingham Negro, Ernest Johnson, is awarded the Soldier's Medal for Heroism following his rescue of a British soldier in danger of death from fire in a London building containing unexploded land mines.

When the British soldier was trapped in a storeroom, Johnson probably did not stop to wonder about whether he or his race was fairly treated. There was probably no question in his mind at the time of whether he enjoyed all the privileges of a citizen of the United States. He probably did not hesitate while he pondered over questions of Jim Crow laws, segregation, lynching, poll taxes, and a lot of other things.

Instead Ernest Johnson saw a soldier and an ally in danger. He was in the service of his country, risking his life for it, and he did his duty as he saw it. He is a credit to Birmingham and to Alabama, and we can all be proud of him.

Through such acts, through willing acceptance of duty and obligation, the Negro will win ever-increasing recognition.

Heroic Negro Seaman Honored By British For His Daring Feats

New York Age
New York, N. Y.

LONDON, England.—Heroic lifesaving in shark-infested waters in Caribbean has brought signal honors to Able Seaman Cecil Desmond Woods, Negro, of the Netherlands West Indies. The tanker on which Woods was serving was dogged for four hours by an enemy U-boat in the Caribbean. The ship sought desperately to evade the sea raider, but finally four torpedoes crashed into her hull and she sank in five minutes. The colored seaman plunged into the water. Despite the darkness of a moonless night, he caught sight of the ship's second cook, who could not swim and gave him his own life belt. He then hurried to the assistance of the Third Officer who was on the verge of going down. After hauling the officer aboard a raft, Woods swam to the Chief Engineer who was swimming about badly injured. He pulled the engineer aboard the raft, but the engineer died ten minutes later. The colored seaman with another crew member, then rowed the raft 15 miles to land.

The fifteen crew members who were lost, were the first victims of the U-boat campaign in the Caribbean.

Recognition of Wood's courage came last month when the Royal Humane Society of London announced that its decoration, the Ribbon of the Bronze Medal of the Society, had been awarded to Woods. The decoration is in the form of a ribbon because the Society, owing to the scarcity of metals, is not presenting the actual medal until after the war. A check for 25 pounds sterling, goes with the decoration.

The Government of Curacao, Netherlands West Indies, and private quarters in Curacao have sent money and flowers to the mother of the seaman to express their admiration for his valor. Wood's mother lives on the Island of Saba, also in the Dutch West Indies.

93rd DIVISION GETS ITS "FIRST HERO"

DEC 26 1942

FORT HUACHUCA, Dec. 24—First Lieutenant Stanis Melendez of the 318th Engineering Battalion, 93rd Division, who hails from Pittsburgh, Pa., is the latest candidate for hero honors.

Dec. 1, the Engineering Battalion was engaged in river crossing operations on the Colorado River in California around 4:30 p. m. when an assault boat containing men from Company D was swept by a swift current into a foot-bridge that had been constructed across the river and was overturned. Four soldiers were thrown into the water.

FORGETS ABOUT OWN SAFETY

Lieutenant Melendez was the medical officer on duty at the time and was at the scene of the accident. He proceeded in a power-driven boat to the spot where the men were last seen. Arriving at the spot, Melendez dived into the water fully clothed and, with utter disregard for his own safety, tried to rescue the enlisted men.

The current was swift and strong, made dangerous because of a strong undercurrent of eddies and whirlpools. Despite the great risk, Melendez dived again and again in repeated efforts to rescue. He managed to grab the hand of one man, but the current broke his hold and carried the victim under.

Melendez worked heroically, became exhausted and finally had to be helped from the water. Three men were carried away, all told. Three were carried away by the current and the other saved himselft by swimming to rescue the boat.

Victims were Cpl. Amos Rogers, Austin, Texas, and Privates Teeordly Govan of Memphis, Tenn., and Silas Stevenson of Baltimore, Md., all of Company B.

Now recognized as first hero of the 93rd Division, Lieut. Melendez has been recommended by his superior officers as a candidate for a soldier's medal.

Navy Cross Awarded to Dorie Miller

WASHINGTON

The Navy Department announced Monday that President Roosevelt has awarded the Navy Cross to Dorie Miller, mess attendant, "for his distinguished devotion to duty, extraordinary courage and disregard for his own personal safety" during the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor.

Miller, a native Texan, with no opportunity for technical training in the navy, nevertheless manned a machine gun during the attack on December 7 until his wounded commander ordered him to abandon the bridge of their stricken ship.

Rating Advanced

On April 1, Secretary of the Navy Knox commended the young hero in a letter and Miller who last week was in California, has been advanced in rating as a preliminary reward for his bravery.

MAY 16 1942

Last week the Senate voted down a bill introduced by Senators James M. Mead and Alben W. Barkley, both Democrats, of New York and Kentucky, respectively, which would have authorized a Congressional Medal for Miller.

Knox Disapproved Medal

Secretary Knox, however, had disapproved legislation to award a Congressional Medal to Miller. The views of Mr. Knox were made known in a letter to Senator David I. Walsh, chairman of the Senate Naval Affairs Committee, opposing this bill.

Opposition to the award of the Congressional Medal to Miller is said to be based upon the fact that such an honor carries with it for life the privilege of the floor of the House of Representatives.

Despite this opposition, plans are already being made to continue the request that the award be made.

Edgar G. Brown, director of the National Negro Council in a statement Tuesday said,

"Despite the action of Secretary Knox recommending against the award of a Congressional Medal to Miller, colored people of the nation are appealing to Congress to support the measure introduced by Senator Mead and Congressman John Dingell (Dem.) Michigan to accord the same honor to this colored American as to other heroes of the nation regardless of race, creed or color.

"Secretary Knox also failed in the first release of the Navy Department to note even that Miller was in the engagement at Pearl Harbor, though he cited more than 200 others for bravery and heroism.

"The favorable action of President Roosevelt is very acceptable. The National Negro Council, however, will continue to urge Congress to support efforts to see to it that Miller receives a Congressional Medal and the privilege and right of the floor of Congress for the rest of his life which are accorded such recipients."

The last holder of the Congressional Medal was Master Sergeant George H. Wanton, who died in 1940. Sergeant Wanton, a native of Paterson, N.J., was a member of the Tenth Cavalry.

During the Spanish-American War he distinguished himself by saving the lives of sixteen captured comrades at the risk of his own.

A CROSS FOR MESSMAN MILLER

Dorie Miller, Negro messman, has received the Navy Cross from President Roosevelt for "his distinguished devotion to duty, extraordinary courage and disregard for his own personal safety" during the attack on Pearl Harbor. As the citation states: "While at the side of his captain on the bridge Miller, despite enemy strafing and bombing and in the face of a serious fire, assisted in moving his captain, who had been mortally wounded, to a place of greater safety, and later manned and operated a machine gun until ordered to leave the bridge." The best parts of the story are left out. What was a messman doing on the bridge beside the captain? Certainly what he did was "above and beyond the call of duty." It was, for a man of any race or color, magnificent.

Miller got his cross and an advancement in rating on the recommendations of the Pacific Fleet Board of Awards and the fleet commander in chief. The Navy gave honor where honor was due. It would be a still greater honor if Miller could know that what he did for his captain, his ship, his service and his country would contribute toward removing the still existing discriminations against Negroes in sea service.

Dorie Miller Gets Navy Cross At Sea

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Standing on the deck of a United States warship somewhere in the Pacific, Dorie Miller, heroic Negro Navy man, was presented the Navy Cross which had been awarded to him by President Roosevelt for bravery in action during the battle of Pearl Harbor. The ceremony took place on May 27.

Admiral Chester W. Nimitz, Commander-in-Chief of the Pacific Fleet, personally pinned on Miller's breast the bit of ribbon and cross of bronze that spell extraordinary bravery above and beyond the mere call of duty. Lined upon the warship's deck beside Miller and also decorated with the Navy Cross for heorism were eight Naval officers.

As Admiral Nimitz presented the decoration to Miller, he complimented the Navy man as being the first representative of his race to be so honored in this war.

Miller's act of heroism took place on the U. S. S. Arizona during the Japanese attack on the Pearl Harbor naval base, last December 7. Miller assisted in manning a machine gun on the battleship's bridge, firing at the attacking Japanese bombers until the gun was put out of action.

He then aided in getting his mortally-wounded commanding officer to a place of greater shelter, and not until his ship was hopelessly out of action did he and the others with him leave the vessel.

"This marks the first time in the present conflict that such high tribute has been paid in the Pacific fleet to a member of his race," Nimitz said of Miller. The ceremony occurred on the deck of a warship.

APR 30 1942

BY J. ROBERT SMITH
(Star-News Labor Editor)

For bravery on the high seas above and beyond the call of duty, Mayor LaGuardia conferred three medals awarded by the National Maritime Union "as badges of defiance to our enemies" on Alfred A. Smith, Eric Williams and Miss Carmen Maria Quinonez, at the National Maritime Day observance at City Hall Plaza, Friday.

The three colored sailors were among the 125 who received silver torpedo pins and medals for their valor.

In making the presentation, the Mayor said, "Wear them proudly, and we will crush and defeat our enemies in their own territories. Our seamen are not only trained and experienced, but have the guts to win."

Tell Their Story

Relating their story to reporters, Smith and Williams declared that it was a lucky combination of rain, storm and a weak flashlight that saved the lives of eleven members of the Steamship Prusa crew who spent 31 days in a lifeboat after their ship was torpedoed on December 19.

A heavy wind was blowing on the 30th night of the epic lifeboat voyage. The waves were storm-tossed, lightning flashed and there was darkness all about. Captain Boy, master of the Prusa ordered the third mate to set the course West South West for the Solomon Islands.

Since there was no chart in the boat and no way of telling where she was, the crew did not know that the Gilbert Islands lay only a little distance off and that the Solomon Islands were 1,000 miles away, the men said.

Sighted Land

After drifting into the unknown for 30 days and nights, on the 31st day, according to Williams, "Smith and I were sitting on the forward part of the boat taking our clothes off and drying them in the sun. Smith turned to me and said that if we didn't find an island in a few days we wouldn't live long.

Smith replied, "I hope God will help us find an island. Something has to happen. I don't think we can hold out much longer." Smith asserted that just as he said that, he looked ahead and exclaimed to Williams, "I see an island." Climbing up to the mast the two men verified the fact and hailed the news to their white crew mates below, drawing an ovation of hopeful cheer from all hands.

The lifeboat had traveled 2,400 miles from the spot 180 miles off Hawaii where the Prusa was torpedoed. Smith, who had sailed as messman but had previously many years experience on deck, explained that the boat was unable to make Hawaii because a strong trade wind was blowing away from that island.

Since the galvanized lifeboat lacked both a sturdy keel and a standing jib, the crew was unable to sail in that direction, but had to run with the wind.

Natives Wonderful

APR 30 1942

Three miles off the Gilbert Isle of Nukunau, the lifeboat capsized. All the 11 men in the boat made the shore which was on the morning of January 19.

"The natives on the British-controlled island treated us swell," Williams declared. Continuing his story he said, "there was no money on the island and none was asked for. There was a white Catholic missionary on the island and one Sunday we both went to church."

A Moneyless Church

Humorously, the sailors told reporters, "It was the first church we have visited where the preached didn't ask for money."

After landing the men said they were like babies learning to walk all over again. "We didn't know how to use our legs. We were weak and had to walk on our hands and knees to get to a hut. The natives had to lift us up," Smith said.

On the islands the diet of cocoanuts and pumpkins was varied by fish and a pig which the natives supplied every three days.

Discriminated Against

Smith and Williams said the captain and fourth mate would not permit the white fellow-survivors to eat at the same table with them. Both men related that after the tenth day on the wide ocean, when nerves were beginning to be frayed and uncertainty of the future to prevail, the captain, fourth mate and chief engineer began occasionally to call them "nigger" and "b.....d."

Williams said the fourth mate kicked him in the stomach and once the captain kicked him in the head. Smith, who was one of the strongest men in the boat did not have to suffer such indignities.

Helped Mother, Children

APR 30 1942

When the San Jacinto was torpedoed last April, thanks to the heroic work of Miss Quinonez, she saved the life of a mother and three children.

When the torpedo struck on the port quarter of the ship, Miss Quinonez told reporters, she was asleep in her room. She immediately put on some clothes, grabbed a flashlight and proceeded to a room where she knew the quartet were. She guided them to the deck and put them in a lifeboat.

She made strenuous effort to aid a middle-aged woman and her small grandson, but they were motionless on the deck covered with blood and debris. Attempts to awaken them failed and she, realizing that they were dead, got into a lifeboat, being one of the last persons to leave the ill-fated San Jacinto.

Congressman Marcantonio Unearths Identity Of Anonymous Negro Hero of Pearl Harbor

MAR 10 1942

(Daily Worker Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON, March 9.—Shortly after the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor, news dispatches told of the gallantry of a Negro messman who manned a machine gun aboard a naval vessel.

But this Negro messman remained anonymous. The news stories did not mention his name. Nor did they tell the whole story of his heroism.

Rep. Vito Marcantonio determined to find out more about this heroic Negro, and he wrote to Secretary of the Navy Knox on Feb. 12 to get the details.

Marcantonio revealed today that the Navy Department has now supplied him with the facts he asked for and the Navy's official account of the messman's exploits makes a thrilling and inspiring story.

The name of the Negro messman is Doris Miller, mess attendant, second class. He was born in Waco, Texas on Oct. 19, 1919. He enlisted in the navy at Dallas, Texas, on Sept. 16, 1939. He is the son of Connery Miller, Route 1, Box 339, Waco, Texas.

A letter from the Navy Department to Marcantonio gave the following description of young Doris Miller's heroism:

"In company with two officers and several enlisted men, Miller was on the signal bridge of a battleship when the commanding officer of the vessel received a fatal abdominal wound," the letter from the Navy Department to Mr. Marcantonio stated.

"While the others sought to construct a stretcher to lower the captain to a safer location, a naval reserve lieutenant and Miller manned a pair of machine-guns and fired upon the attacking planes until fires started by bombs rendered the machine guns useless.

"Unable to lower their captain on an improvised stretcher, four officers and men, including Miller, carried him from the blazing bridge of the ship to a more sheltered deck under the port side anti-aircraft guns. Dying, the captain ordered the officers and men to abandon the ship. Finding other means of escape blocked because of the flames, they made their way to shore, hand over hand, along lines strung deckward from a boat crane."

Marcantonio wrote to Doris Miller's father in Texas stating that "the entire nation is deeply proud of your son."

"He is a symbol of the determination of the Negro people to do everything possible to smash the Axis powers," Marcantonio wrote.

"His heroic action in defense of his country brings closer the day when our Navy will gladly accept the services of its Negro citizens in every capacity."

Marcantonio did not need to say more. Doris Miller's heroism is argument enough for extending to the Negro people full equality in the nation's armed forces.

Congress Hears Many Pleas To Honor Dorie Miller For Valor Shown At Pearl Harbor

Senator Barkley Of Kentucky And Others Ask Citation; Texas Solons "Don't Say A Mumbling Word" In Praise Of Boy From Their Home State

WASHINGTON, March 26—(ANP)—The halls of congress rang with praise Friday when Sen. Meade of New York and Sen. Barkley of Kentucky in the senate and Rep. Dingell of Michigan lauded the name of Dorie Miller, the newly-found hero of Pearl Harbor, while the name of Robert H. Brooks also came in for a medium of praise during the orations.

Mead and Dingell, evidently using the same copies of a prepared address, said in part:

"The United States Navy department in an official release disclosed the identity of the Negro sailor who manned a machine gun on the battleship at Pearl Harbor December 7, 1941, although he had heretofore been confined to the duties of a second class mess attendant."

"Since those tragic hours on the the Sabbath of December 7, 1941 at Pearl Harbor, 12,000,000 Negro citizens have with pardonable pride rejoiced in the feat of the unnamed colored hero (who was mentioned in news relases at the time).

"Mr. President, there were many sailors at Pearl Harbor who were to be cited for exceptional bravery, several of them Negroes. I understand one colored sailor from New York will be added to the roll of honor for his valor and courage under fire.

"It is fitting and proper for the senate to honor all American soldiers and sailors regardless of race, creed or color.

"Dorie Miller, I believe, should be voted the Congressional Medal of Honor or any other citation in keeping with the great tradition of the United States navy.

"Representatives of the 12,000,000 loyal and patriotic Negro people will be cheered by this recognition of one of their own by the congress—house of representatives and the senate."

WASHINGTON—(A N P)—The halls of congress rang with praise Friday when Senator Meade of New York and Senator Barkley of Kentucky in the senate and Rep. Meade and Dingell, evidently using the same copies of a prepared address, said in part:

"The United States Navy department in an official release disclosed the identity of the Negro sailor who manned a machine gun on the battleship at Pearl Harbor December 7, 1941, although he had heretofore been confined to the duties of a second class mess attendant."

PROUD RACE CITIZENS

"Since those tragic hours on the Sabbath of December 7, 1941 at Pearl Harbor, 12,000,00 Negro citizens have with pardonable pride rejoiced in the feat of the unnamed colored hero (who was mentioned in news releases at the time).

"Mr. President there were many sailors at Pearl Harbor who were to be cited for exceptional bravery, several of them Negroes. I understand one colored sailor from New York will be added to the roll of honor for his valor and courage under fire.

"Representatives of the 12,00,-000 loyal and partiotic Negro people will be cheered by this recognition of one of their own by the congress—house of representatives and the senate."

Sen. Barkley then spoke:

"I asked Sen. Meade to yield to permit me to call attention to the fact that a Negro soldier was one of the first casualties in this war, performed heroic service. His name was Robert H. Brooks, and he came from Sadiesville, Ky. He was a private in the United States army. He has been signally honored by officials and commanders at Fort Knox, Ky., because of heroism in the performance of his duty.

"He was the first American soldier to die with the armed forces of Gen. MacArthur. The main parade group at Fort Knox, Ky., was named in Brooks' honor and six generals were present at that occasion.

"I am glad to add Robert H. Brooks' name to that of the Negro sailor commented upon by the senator from New York."

TEXANS SAY NOTHING

Neither of the Texas senators, Tom Connally nor W. Lee (Pass the Biscuits Pappy) O'Daniel said a word about the Texans so signally honored by the New York senator, neither did the well-known Texas group of representatives, Wright Patman, Martin Dies, Sam Rayburon or Hatton W. Summers, all of whom are vocal to the extreme, raise a voice in praise of the Negro from their own home state, leaving it to a Michigan representative to tell the story.

It is believed that sufficient action will be stirred to have Miller awarded the Congressional Medal. The late Sgt. George W. Wanton was the only Negro holder of this award. Sgt. Wanton, who died last summer, received his medal for heroic performance under fire in the Spanish American war.

IS SECOND NEGRO TO BE CITED BY NAVY

WASHINGTON.—(ANP)—Official recognition of the bravery of another Negro messman who distinguished himself during the Pearl Harbor defense against the Japanese invaders last Dec. 7 was made by Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox here last week. This honor went to Dorie Miller, 20-year-old Texan who helped remove his dying captain from the bridge of a blazing battleship and then manned a machine gun, which because of the navy's jim crow policy, he had never been taught to operate.

Miller, who hails from Waco, Texas, is the second messman to be honored by the navy. The first, William M. Brooks, Jr., of St. Louis, was cited last month by Sec. Knox and President Roosevelt for "distinguished devotion to duty and extraordinary courage and disregard for his own safety."

Sec. Knox, in commending Miller of his service, "For distinguished devotion to duty, extraordinary courage and disregard of his own safety during the attack on the fleet in Pearl Harbor, T. H., by Japanese forces on Dec. 7, 1941. While at the side of his captain on the bridge, Miller, despite enemy strafing and bombing and in the face of a serous fire, assisted in moving his captain, who had been mortally wounded, to a place of greater safety, and later manned and operated a machine until ordered to leave the bridge."

The commendation will become a part of Miller's service record. However, in spite of the display of bravery of Negro seamen during the Pearl Harbor raid, neither President Roosevelt no Sec. Knox has seen fit to relax the jim crow policy of the navy which prevents Negroes from serving in in any other than a messman capacity.

Attorney General Reveals Plan To Church Leaders

CINCINNATI, Ohio.—(ANP)—Participation in civilian defense by Negroes was urged and promised at a mass meeting of Negroes in Taft Auditorium. Gov. John W. Bricker told the assembly that civilian defense was making great strides throughout Ohio.

The governor recommended organized units as the best insurance against bomb attacks. "They are not going to attempt to bomb us if they know we are prepared," he said.

"We all hope and pray that no bombs will fall in Ohio," Gov. Bricker said," yet we know full well what it means to be caught unaware. We are not going to be caught unaware in Ohio. Everyone of us has a duty to perform and we must not fail."

The meeting was sponsored by public-spirited citizens and more than 100 Negro, religious, industrial, fraternal, social, and educational organizations. A musical program was interspersed between speeches.

Charles V. Carr, Cleveland, racial relations advisor in civilian defense for the fifth region, told the assembly that Negroes have been deprived of their rights many times.

WARNS AGAINST FAILURE

He urged that this should not prevent the Negro race from doing its full duty in the present emergency. He warned that if it failed, their failure would be used against them after the war.

A group of 100 Negro troops and a band from Fort Knox were guests of honor at the meeting. All of the speakers paid tribute to this group, and urged that while they are offering their lives those at home should do their part in winning the war.

Miller's action in manning a gun in a service of the Navy which had long been discriminatory to Negroes has received national praise and been credited with the Navy's recent opening of its various branches to men of color.

Negro Mess Attendant Awarded Navy Cross

WASHINGTON, May 11.—(U.P.)—Doris Miller, negro mess attendant who never fired a gun until he joined the Navy, was awarded the Navy Cross by President Roosevelt today for gallantry at Pearl Harbor during the surprise Japanese air attack.

The decoration was recommended by Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox for "his distinguished devotion to duty, extraordinary courage and disregard for his own safety."

The 22-year-old negro, a native of Waco, Texas, was said by Knox to have stood by his ship captain "despite enemy strafing and bombing and in the face of serious fire, assisted in moving his captain, who had been mortally wounded, to a place of greater safety, and later manned and operated a machine gun until ordered to leave the bridge."

Norway Negroes To Entertain Post Soldiers

Numerous Negro service men now training in the Columbia area will receive a taste of true "Southern hospitality" Sunday, when they will be guests of Negroes of Norway, where an "open house" will be held for the servicemen.

Forty soldiers from Fort Jackson and 18 enlisted men from the Columbia Air base will attend the gala event. They will leave Columbia by special bus Sunday morning at 7:30.

The WPA Defense Recreation committee in Columbia, E. L. Davis, representing the people of Norway and the special services officers from both training centers have been instrumental in arranging Sunday's much welcomed "open house," reputed to be the first of its type yet staged for the benefit of Negro service men in the Columbia area.

Upon arrival in Norway early Sunday morning, the service men will be split up into smaller congenial groups and will be received into the homes of the many townspeople who have volunteered their services for this event.

Fried chicken dinners, with fixings galore, will be prominently featured among the many special events and gala activities scheduled to run well into Sunday afternoon. Upon completion of the festivities, service men will be returned to their respective bases by bus.

"Our men are really looking forward to a fine time on Sunday," commented Lieut. F. E. Stancil, special service officer of Fort Jackson's Negro area. "For many, it will be the first time they've been able to enjoy the stimulating atmosphere of a private home since their induction into the army. After they've had a taste of Sunday's event, I know they'll be looking forward to attending many more like it in the future."

Other cities, towns and villages in the vicinity of Columbia which would like to contribute to the "congeniality and contentment" of Negro service men in training by staging one or more of their own "open house" events, are urged to contact Miss Winnie Eskrigge, chairman of Columbia's WPA "Home Hospitality" committee, by letter or by phoning Columbia 2-8608.

Dr. M. F. Whitaker of Orangeburg is chairman for Negro participation in the drive.

"South Carolina's quota in metals collection has been set at 66,000 tons," LaGrone said. "By encouraging a systematic and thorough program of collection, we hope to do better than that.

SEP 11 1942

SAN ANTONIO, Texas.—(ANP)—When U. J. Andrews, 37-year-old editor of the San Antonio Register, was reclassified from a 1-A status and given a six-month deferment, a selective board member was so enraged he quit. Andrews, whose deferment was appealed to Washington by the Register's publisher, Valmo C. Bellinger, declared:

"There is a great scarcity of Negro journalists in this country, and they are needed to keep up Negro morale during wartime."

The draft board members, Ed McClannahan, submitted his resignation, charging that "undo favor and discrimination were shown in the Washington move."

Camp Adair, Oreg., Sept. 4 (AP). Dancing George F. Miller, Negro lad from Denver, is in the Army despite his flat feet, insufficient teeth and scant 90 pounds.

Miller, known professionally as "Li'l Curlry," was rejected in the draft. But President Roosevelt heard about his dancing and donations to a hospital fund in last year's President's Birthday Ball in Denver for infantile paralysis sufferers. He also heard Miller wanted to be a soldier.

So the President arranged to have Miller's nine teeth supplemented by the necessary store teeth and suggested that such a dancer's flat feet couldn't be very bad. So Miller shuffled past the recruiting officer and into the Army.

Criticism Of Way Law Has Worked Brings New Order

SEP 4 1942

Family Heads May Expect To Be Deferred Until Single Men Are Inducted; Classification Of All Registrants Must Be Completed By October 16.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Responding to a nation-wide demand that a fairer system of drafting men for the armed forces be put into effect, Major General Lewis B. Hershey, director of the Selective Service, sent out an order on September 1 to State Directors, advising them, in the future to apportion calls for men from their states so that, in so far as feasible, no board will be calling one type of registrant with dependents while there are men without dependents listed with other boards.

These State Directors were advised to continue placing calls so as to place the heaviest loads on those boards having most single men, or men with collateral dependents only. These directors were asked to complete on or before Octobr 16, 1942, the initial classification of all registrants liable for military service. This schedule must be met, it was emphasized, because the serious military situation requires that the Selective Service System must prepare to fill calls during the coming year which will be equal to or be in excess of the monthly calls made in August, September and October of this year.

It is hoped that men from small towns as well as those from large cities will be called on a uniform basis. This leveling off process, General Hershey estimates, might require several months to accomplish because of the time required to process registrants and accord them the full rights of appeal.

Criticism of the way the draft had been working had pointed out that some draft boards were sending married men to the army while other draft boards in the country had many unmarried men who were not being called. This criticism gained momentum recently when Senator Robert A. Taft of Ohio stated that it was his intention to propose legislation that would correct the injustice that was being done many married men. This condition is acknowledged by General Hershey who told the state directors that,

"Obviously the distribution of registrants by types among local boards is not uniform; and for that reason efforts to speed classification should particularly be concentrated and calls should be levied upon those boards within your state from which single men without dependents can be made available for induction. Calls should be levied upon boards with substantial numbers of registrants having collateral dependents until a reasonable uniformity among local boards in your state has been accomplished."

Gen. Hershey called for a reclassification of Class III-A and Class III-B registrants. Class III-B registrants, he rules, must be engaged in essential war work besides having dependents, to be deferred. "Collateral dependents" is defined as meaning men, with wives or children, who do not live with their families in a home; also men having parents, brothers, sisters grandparents, grandchildren, divorced wives, persons under 18 years of age whose support has been assumed in good faith or persons of any age physically or mentally handicapped, whose support has been assumed in good faith.

It is ruled that registrants having wives and children, or children with whom they maintain a bona fide home and who were married BEFORE DECEMBER 8, 1941 and at a time when selection was not iminent, shall NOT be placed in Class I-A (available for induction) until such action is authorized by the National Headquarters.

It is pointed out that it will take at least 60 days for the draft boards to conform to the charge in policy of calling men. Gen. Hershey, however, reaffirms the general policy of the selective service act which he holds is to follow the order of dependency deferment set up in the regulations to the fullest extent consistent with the local board's ability to furnish the number of men required for the military forces each month.

"It is our further policy," said Gen. Hershey, "to follow the order of deferments on a nation-wide basis and the same situation will apply to men reaching the age of 20 thereby becoming eligible for selection."

The classification drive now under way for completion by October 16, is the first effort ever made to enumerate our Nation's total manpower of military age, Gen. Hershey pointed out and said,

"We have reached a point where such a nation-wide survey is possible and also imperative."

No rule was laid down by Gen. Hershey with regard to the men from ages 46 to 65, who under present law are not subject to military service.

Harvey Anderson Wrote to the President and Now Everybody Is Happy

PM-N.Y

By Arnold Beichman

PM Exclusive

On July 25 of this year, Harvey Anderson, a 22-year-old Negro, wrote a letter to the President. He told the President that he was married, that he soon would be a father, and that he had been unemployed for four months.

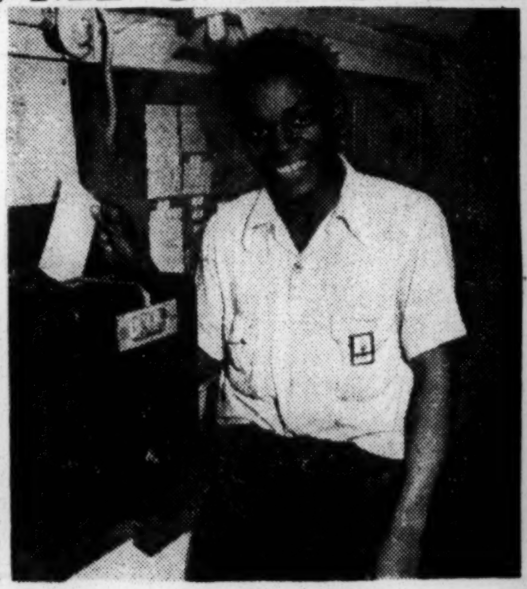
He also told the President that he was down to his last pair of shoes and his last pair of trousers and that he was trying very hard to get some work. He said he hadn't eaten very much for two days and he reassured the President that he had never been arrested or in jail.

Harvey got the idea of telling the President his troubles because he read how the President helped a 386-pound West Coast shipyard worker, who wrote a letter, get an oversize pair of pants.

"I figured," said Harvey, a quiet-spoken, modest youth, "that if the President was the kind of fellow who would help another fellow get a pair of pants, maybe he'd help me get a job."

From the White House the letter went to the War Man Power Commission (WMPC) and from there it went to Edward Lawson, the Commission's field assistant in New York.

And then Lawson sent the letter to Local 1225, United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America, CIO. This is the union which shifted its convention from Indianapolis, because the hotel owners refused to drop Jim Crow restrictions against Negro delegates. Instead the convention will be held in Cleveland, starting Labor Day.



Harvey Anderson

On Aug. 4, Harvey, who lives at 241 W. 148th St., received a note from Sidney Mason, the local's business manager, to come down to his office for an interview.

On Aug. 6, the local sent Howard to the Polarizing Instrument Co., a war plant at 155 Perry St. which has a labor contract with the union. Howard went there and he got a job.

Howard works in the plant's shipping and receiving department and makes $26.51 a week. He's happy and his employers are happy he's working there.

A couple of weeks after Howard got the job, his wife gave birth to a girl at Harlem Hospital. His wife is now working, too, in the garment district, and his mother-in-law takes care of the baby.

Pretty soon, Howard expects to be drafted. He won't mind.

Jim Crow Foe? 4-F In Draft

OCT 1 2 1942

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(A N P)—When Negro selective service men appear before certain local boards, they are being disqualified by psychiatrists who label them mentally deficient depending on answers to certain questions put to them.

The story, which comes from unimpeachable sources, declares that Negro selectees are asked: "What is your opinion on segregation?" If the answer denounces segregation, the man is classified as mentally deficient and placed in Class 4-F.

Such a large number of these classifications are coming into the selective service headquarters, officials are asking what the answer can be. Some men thus classified are holding positions in important posts and because of this classification, they are in constant danger of losing their jobs.

What prompts these questions remains problematical with interested officials at a loss to explain what the result will be. Too many Negroes are getting this classification to permit it to go unchallenged. An official investigation is believed under way.

OCT 9 - 1942

With characteristic enthusiasm, Hattie McDaniel, one of Hollywood's most brilliant actresses, is devoting long hours each day to enlisting support for the war effort, both among her own people and Americans all.

Whenever she can get away from her screen duties, Miss McDaniel plunges into some endeavor connected with advancing Democracy's cause. She recently returned from a quick dash to Indianapolis, where she represented the Negro players of Hollywood at the Inter-racial War Bond Rally held there.

"Whatever I can contribute I am only too anxious to," the jovial popular actress declared. "When I look around me and see how the men and women of Hollywood all are joined in magnificent support of the war effort I realize how completely this is a strugggle which demands the most of all of us."

Miss McDaniel is an honorary member of the American Women's Voluntary Services, and is active on the Hollywood Victory Committee, which arranges for talent to entertain at Army and Navy camps throughout the country, and abroad, and is in charge of supplying stars to all other patriotic appearances. Ethel Waters, Ben Carter and Clarence Muse are also members of the Committee, which includes many of Hollywood's greatest stars.

Miss McDaniel and her coworkers do not confine their war work to race, although they naturally give that portion of their service the most attention. With Negro troops stationed around Southern California, as well as elsewhere throughout the country, making sure that they have regular entertainment is a real task.

A few weeks ago Miss McDaniel took a company of performers to a camp along the Mexican border, where the famous 10th Calvary was stationed to perform at the 75th anniversary celebration of the renowned Spanish-American War outfit. Bette Davis and Dinah Shore were enthusiastic members of that party.

"I'm indeed proud to be a member of this profession these days," said the talented actress, who in 1939 won the Academy Award for her role in "Gone With the Wind."

"When I see how other men and women of the screen are doing such tremendous jobs as helping the Treasury Department sell a billion dollars worth of War Bonds this month in the 'Stars Over America' campaign, I just want to pitch in and do more all the time.

"On the studio lots everyone is trying to figure out how he or she can bend more effort and energy to the task ahead. Practically everyone has been putting 10 per cent of their salaries into War Bonds, and with this new drive many are increasing their pledges to double that. But none of us feels that buying War Bonds is making any sacrifice. It's just a good investment, with interest.

"There's not a studio in town that isn't devoting much of its talent and organization—below cost—to making special pictures the government wants. They're turning out hundreds of reels of shorts to be used in training soldiers and sailors, films we never see when we go to the picture shows, but our boys in the armed service are seeing them and benefitting from them.

"Then there's a lot of tme and effort being contributed in making these shorts the government does want the people to see—those which carry vital messages on conservation, morale, nutrition, how to combat sabotage, spotting enemy planes, fire-fighting and all the other things a people at war have to be educated in.

"Not many of us get a chance to act in any films like that, so we just have to go ahead doing all the war work we can outside the studio and realize that the government does think our work inside the studio is vital, too. Of course it is, in keeping the public entertained, so everybody won't get too jittery over the War. England learned that lesson.

OCT 9 - 1942

"Then, too, it's fine to think of how the pictures we are turning out are being flown, in 16 millimeter size, to our troops wherever they are stationed. More than 161 full-length pictures already have been turned over for this magnificent mission, I am told, as a gift from the motion picture industry. Often the boys abroad see the latest Hollywood pictures before they are shown in this country."

A serious expression replaced the usual smiling countenance of the beloved actress as she reflected on the gravity of the times.

"On thnig that brings the war close home," she continued, "here at the studio as well as off the lot, is the fact that daily I am telling my friends and co-workers among the men good-bye as they go off to war. The studios are contributing their full share of men to the various armed forces, and they go forth willingly, yes gladly, to answer the call. More than 2000 have already gone, fully twelve per cent of all the men workers in the studios.

OCT 9 - 1942

"And for us who stay at home, particularly for us women, there is an ever-growing need for greater service, for more sacrifice of time and energy, as we do our bit, whether it be rolling bandages, driving ambulances, entertaining troops on leave or anything else we can possibly do which will contribute to the final victory that lies ahead."

Negroes Plan Bond Supper

A Bond Supper designed to sell $1,000 worth of War Bonds has been arranged for the night of August 28, it was announced today by Prof. Charles Orr, executive chairman for the Negro Division of the Tuscaloosa County War Savings Committee. Admission will be limited to persons purchasing at least one "E" bond at a cost of $18.75.

Plans for this event were developed at a special meeting of division leaders held at Industrial High School early this week. President Luther Davis of the City Commission delivered an inspiring address to the group, stressing the necessity for all-out purchases of War Bonds and War Savings Stamps.

Also arranged by the group is a Patriotic Rally on August 30. At this rally the bond campaign will be emphasized as will be the part played by negroes in the Tuscaloosa Citizens Defense Corps, and in the armed services. An honor roll of negroes now in all branches of the armed forces will be compiled and photographs of service men will be displayed.

Professor Orr requested that relatives of negro men in service please furnish him with names, and wherever possible, pictures of the men. This material may be turned over to C. E. Trout, negro county agent, at the Van Hoose Building, if more convenient.

Any negro groups wishing patriotic speakers for any meetings are asked to contact Dr. A. B. McKenzie, chairman of the Speakers Committee, or Professor Orr.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

To the editor of The Advertiser:

Last Monday night I had the distinct pleasure and privilege of sitting in a Laurens Negro church with about ten other white people and hearing the Laurens Negroes start their scrap campaign with a determination and patriotism such as I have not yet found in the junk jumble. Two of the brethren went to the core of the matter more clearly and emphatically than any of the Congressmen who have fought their politics-via-war since December 7. One of the speakers was from Greenville; his record of junk collecting there makes the rest of us look like pikers. He warned the Negroes that they had as much to lose in the war as the white man does, and he suggested to them some of the methods which they can use in the common fight for "our country and our freedom."

The other speaker was a Clinton preacher. He recently wrote a letter to this paper which had as much truth in it as anything that has ever hit these columns. He is still speaking the truth fluently and forcefully. He still emphasizes that discrimination and segregation are two different things. He still thinks his race deserves a better chance and that they can prove their worth to South Carolina so that the white man will be proud of them. He is a worthy speaker not only for his race but for all Americans who realize the importance of the war—and its dangers. He emhasizes that the white man cannot get along without the Negro and the Negro cannot get along without the white man, and that if we are to succeed, we will have to work together.

Those Negroes at that meeting gave us something to live up to. They have faith in our help and they deserve it. Are we willing to measure up to this faith and join in this American campaign as whole-heartedly as they are doing?

I am convinced that if the Laurens junk collection is to be a success that much of the credit will be due to Negroes' efforts— efforts made with the help and co-operation of the white people. Help your cook's church; let her have your junk. Urge the Negro men and children whom you know to search your place for junk and to take it to their school or church. All of them do not yet know of this campaign, so not only give to them but tell as many of them as you can about it. You will be helping both Uncle Sam and the good Negroes of Laurens who are pledged to join in seeing us through this war—working and fighting together for a common cause.

Lewis Jones.

A serious expression replaced the usual smiling countenance of the beloved actress as she reflected on the gravity of the times.

"On thing that brings the war close home," she continued, "here at the studio as well as off the lot, is the fact that daily I am telling my friends and co-workers among the men good-bye as they go off to war. The studios are contributing their full share of men to the various armed forces, and they go forth willingly, yes gladly, to answer the call. More than 2000 have already gone, fully twelve per cent of all the men workers in the studios.

"And for us who stay at home, particularly for us women, there is an ever-growing need for greater service, for more sacrifice of time and energy, as we do our bit, whether it be rolling bandages, driving ambulances, entertaining troops on leave or anything else we can possibly do which will contribute to the final victory that lies ahead."

A Bond Supper designed to sell $1,000 worth of War Bonds has been arranged for the night of August 28, it was announced today by Prof. Charles Orr, executive chairman for the Negro Division of the Tuscaloosa County War Savings Committee. Admission will be limited to persons purchasing at least one "E" bond at a cost of $18.75.

Plans for this event were developed at a special meeting of division leaders held at Industrial High School early this week. President Luther Davis of the City Commission delivered an inspiring address to the group, stressing the necessity for all-out purchases of War Bonds and War Savings Stamps.

Also arranged by the group is a Patriotic Rally on August 30. At this rally the bond campaign will be emphasized as will be the part played by negroes in the Tuscaloosa Citizens Defense Corps, and in the armed services. An honor roll of negroes now in all branches of the armed forces will be compiled and photographs of service men will be displayed.

Professor Orr requested that relatives of negro men in service please furnish him with names, and wherever possible, pictures of the men. This material may be turned over to C. E. Trout, negro county agent, at the Van Hoose Building, if more convenient.

Any negro groups wishing patriotic speakers for any meetings are asked to contact Dr. A. B. McKenzie, chairman of the Speakers Committee, or Professor Orr.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

To the editor of The Advertiser:

Last Monday night I had the distinct pleasure and privilege of sitting in a Laurens Negro church with about ten other white people and hearing the Laurens Negroes start their scrap campaign with a determination and patriotism such as I have not yet found in the junk jumble. Two of the brethren went to the core of the matter more clearly and emphatically than any of the Congressmen who have fought their politics-via-war since December 7. One of the speakers was from Greenville; his record of junk collecting there makes the rest of us look like pikers. He warned the Negroes that they had as much to lose in the war as the white man does, and he suggested to them some of the methods which they can use in the common fight for "our country and our freedom."

The other speaker was a Clinton preacher. He recently wrote a letter to this paper which had as much truth in it as anything that has ever hit these columns. He is still speaking the truth fluently and forcefully. He still emphasizes that discrimination and segregation are two different things. He still thinks his race deserves a better chance and that they can prove their worth to South Carolina so that the white man will be proud of them. He is a worthy speaker not only for his race but for all Americans who realize the importance of the war—and its dangers. He emhasizes that the white man cannot get along without the Negro and the Negro cannot get along without the white man, and that if we are to succeed, we will have to work together.

Those Negroes at that meeting gave us something to live up to. They have faith in our help and they deserve it. Are we willing to measure up to this faith and join in this American campaign as whole-heartedly as they are doing?

I am convinced that if the Laurens junk collection is to be a success that much of the credit will be due to Negroes' efforts— efforts made with the help and co-operation of the white people. Help your cook's church; let her have your junk. Urge the Negro men and children whom you know to search your place for junk and to take it to their school or church. All of them do not yet know of this campaign, so not only give to them but tell as many of them as you can about it. You will be helping both Uncle Sam and the good Negroes of Laurens who are pledged to join in seeing us through this war—working and fighting together for a common cause.

BETTER THAN IT SOUNDS

"AMERICA'S young men, who must bear the brunt of our fight against our enemies have, without a shadow of a doubt, the intelligence and educational attainments to do their job effectively," say the statisticians of a leading life insurance company, who point out that an entirely false impression to the contrary has been conveyed by recently published statistics on Army deferments for "literacy" requirements, and on the proportion of our adults over age 25, who have had less than five years schooling.

"From the fact that 430,000 men have been deferred for Army service because of inability to meet the Army's educational requirements, and from the fact that 10,000,000 persons over age 25, according to the 1940 census, had less than five years schooling, the inference has been drawn that there is an appalling lack of education among our young people," the statisticians say. "As a matter of fact, the two sets of figures are quite unrelated. The Army has, for good and understandable reasons, set an educational standard which is distinctly more severe than that applied in World War I."

While pointing out that the Army's educational standard "is entirely justified in view of the great importance and large scale use of machines and other complicated equipment by our new Army," the statisticians assert, however, that it is a "rash generalization to assume from the Army's action, that persons with less education are 'illiterate' and lacking in intelligence. In both civil and military life, they say, many persons have attained prominent positions with no greater educational advantages than the present minimum of Selective Service. As famous examples of this they cite Abraham Lincoln, Benjamin Franklin, Andrew Jackson, Horace Greeley, Walt Whitman, Mark Twain and Thomas A. Edison, all of whom, the statisticians say, "had little or no formal schooling."

The indiscriminate use of the word "illiteracy" has made for confusion, the statisticians explain. Illiteracy—the inability to read or write—has been used in census investigations before 1940, and this term has been confused both with inability to meet the Army's intelligence standard, which is not based on a specific amount of education, and also with the new census classification of less than five years schooling. "Obviously," the statisticians say, "these are not the same. Indeed, the very fact that the basis of census statistics regarding the educational status of our adult population was shifted upward in 1940, for the first time, from frank illiteracy to the amount of schooling received is a clear indication of the educational progress of the nation as a whole.

"The facts with regard to schooling among persons 25 years or more years old do not indicate the educational status of young people today, but reflect rather the educational conditions of a generation or two ago. The school ages of a great majority of these persons date back more than 20 years. New census figures for 1940, just released, show that among men in the broad age group 18 to 44, only 5.3 per cent had failed to complete four years of grade school. At ages under 25 this proportion was slightly under 4 per cent. Moreover, in the white male population under age 25, those with less than four years' schooling comprised only a little more than 2 per cent of the total, and in the northern and western sections of the country, only 1 per cent in this age group.

"Illiteracy, as well as insufficient schooling is concentrated pretty much in three population groups—namely, survivors of the pre-1914 immigration, Negroes, and white persons from certain sections of the rural South. Moreover, the proportion of those totally illiterate has been declining steadily, and even in the past ten years, there has been a marked reduction. Thus, among adults over age 25, in 1940, only 3.7 per cent had had no schooling, some of whom undoubtedly could read and write, as compared with 5.6 per cent of frank illiteracy among persons in this age group in 1930. The efforts to wipe out illiteracy in this country during the past decade have met with great success, especially among Negroes."

NEGROES SHOULD BE TAKEN TO THE ARMY

There is considerable complaint here that so few Negroes are being drafted for military service. People in this section think they foresee a serious situation if the draft board continues to take young white men away from their homes and leave the Negroes.

It is claimed that colored men are turned down on the ground that they are illiterate. It has been said that, in this section, there are very few illiterate blacks, and even if there were, a person who cannot read or write can shoot as true as anyone else. It was pointed out that the Revolutionary War would never have been fought if General Washington had refused all illiterate soldiers.

White men do not relish the idea of Negroes being left at home while white men are taken and carried away to be used as "cannon fodder." There is talk of petitioning the congress to do something about it.

The First Georgia District would be proud to have its congressman, Hon. Hugh Peterson, start a move to change the status of things, and put Negroes into the service. All Georgia would be glad to have Senators George and Russel do something about it.—Glennville Sentinel.

Negro Rubber Canvass Set

Call On Houses Tomorrow, Wednesday; Pick-up Points Fixed

The colored division of the Greenville salvage committee, of which Henry Percival is chairman, today announced plans for a house-to-house rubber canvass to be conducted by members of the colored civilian police.

The drive will start tomorrow and continue through Wednesday.

During that time the auxiliary police will call on every home in their precincts, collecting all available scrap rubber. The salvaged material will be carried to collection points within each precinct and picked up there by a truck provided by the Greenville rubber salvage committee.

The colored division has participated in a large degree in the rubber salvage campaign, collecting over 400 pounds at a picnic at St. Anthony's Friday of last week.

This week's drive is expected to salvage several thousand pounds of usable scrap.

The collection points and the times at which the collection truck will call at each:

Corner of Gibbs and Martin streets, Clifton Wood and Robert Quiller in charge, from 2 until 4 p. m. Tuesday.

Manly and Ann streets, Commander Bruce Bowen in charge, from 2 until 3 p. m. Wednesday.

McBee avenue and Mordecai street, Commander Fred Allmon in charge, from 3 until 4 p. m., Wednesday.

Negroes Organize Civilian Defense

On last Tuesday night, a very appreciable group of Negroes met Mr. F. V. Clayton, Pickens county defense director, at the Pickens county Training school to be informed of and included in the Civilian Home Defense program.

Brief remarks were made by the principal, M. N. Sullivan, who presented the speaker.

The program was concisely and definitely outlined by Mr. Clayton. He began his discussion by making complimentary remarks relative to progress made in and around the school. He mentioned also the part he had played in the making of the plant.

Before diagraming on the blackboard the mechanism of the program the speaker emphatically stressed the unconscious attitude of the average American as to the seriousness of the great crisis which we now face.

We were urged to turn a deaf ear to the words of traitors to the extent that we make haste to see that these words are reported to those in position to investigate and act accordingly. We were urged further to "stand pat" and be true blue Americans, realizing that each man, woman ,and child has a part to play in this great American drama of freedom, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

After receiving this splendid information, and a detailed explanation of the significance of the program and its application, it is our belief that each individual left the meeting with a keener feeling of security in organization, and more cognizant of the fact that he does have a part in helping protect this country.

Those living in Pickens and vicinity were asked to volunteer to register each Monday and Wednesday at the library at the Training school, between 9 a. m. and 4 p. m. The purpose of registration was made clear —that we are doing so to protect South Carolina, to protect Pickens in case of an emergency, and not to be sent to Pearl Harbor.

Talmadge Pushes Auto Four Miles in Mud in Four Hours

Proves That Nothing Is Wrong With His Physical Condition

* * *

Rather Slow, But Was Most Enjoyable Ride I Ever Experienced

—By W. T. Anderson—

YOU AND MANY other people of Georgia have heard stories and whisperings about the decrepit condition of Gene Talmadge —that he was looking "powerful bad" and this was the matter with him and then something else?

Well, in the sometime vernacular of Gene, it ain't so.

If there had been anything wrong with him mentally or physically, after his experience of last Sunday, he would have been buried and forgotten by this time.

It happened this way:

THE GOVERNOR of Georgia came to Macon to talk to the Negro defense meeting at the auditorium. It was a big meeting, and did credit to the efficiency of Dr. Sol Clements in getting the message over to his people and then arranging an interesting program. He managed to bring in large delegations from distant points in the state. The feature that astonished me was that Negroes could be induced to come such great distances at their own expense to learn what they could do as their share of defense work and what was expected of them by their country. Ben Davis of Atlanta, the celebrated political fixer and manager of the Republican party — when there was one — amused his audience and impressed it with his wit and wisdom. He said some Negroes had told him they didn't want to hear Gov. Talmadge make a speech, that he wasn't a friend of the Negro, etc. He said he told them all they had heard against Gov. Talmadge was what some white folks who were mad with him had said, and nobody could believe a witness under these circumstances.

Ben continued that he had watched Gov. Talmadge's work and attitude toward the Negro for a long time, and his own conclusion was that Gov. Talmadge was fair to everybody, white and black, that he didn't have any race prejudice, and nobody had ever heard him say one word that was mean or bitter or unjust toward the Negro race.

DR. HOLLEY of Albany, paid eloquent tribute to Gov. Talmadge's fairness and desire to see the Negro race progress on its own lines and among its own people. He also said many nice things about the editor of The Telegraph, the latter expressing the hope that some day he might deserve the tribute.

Freeman Hart, member of the Governor's staff, and possessing a penchant for entertaining, barged in when the meeting adjourned and urged a number of us to come out to his retreat at Montpelier Springs, where he had 18 quail broiling, and that he had some tea and coffee, and hot biscuits, and bird gravy, and red pepper pods in it, and in all that downpour of rain he had an idea things would be right pleasant out at the lodge.

THE GOVERNOR asked Lige Maynard, city attorney, to go with him and Mallory Mann and me, out to Freeman's place, and even improved on Freeman's bill of fare. Passing out of Lizella I told Mallory Mann to turn right at the next corner, and Lige Maynard said no, to go to second turn up the pavement, and everything would be hunky-dory.

When we arrived at the second turn, Lige changed his mind and said it was the third road we needed. About a half hour afterward Lige remarked ruefully as the good old Monroe county roads got slicker and redder and muddier, "Bless my soul, if we haven't done come to Moran's."

THAT DIDN'T mean much to me, but to Lige and Gene, both old Monroe county boys, it was duck-soup. They got to talking about having caught possums and run rabbits and how many birds they had killed in that section—and whose place is this right here, etc.?

We asked a Negro we tooted out of his cabin—there being nobody to slap us for blowing out auto horn—which way was Montpelier Springs and how far? He said go down to the bridge and turn right, and it's four miles back toward Macon.

The Monroe county commissioners anticipated our visit, and scraped the roads for us. If it hadn't rained all Saturday night and Sunday the trip would have been a cinch. But about 100 yards on that road from the bridge, uphill, we came to a slipping, sliding stop. The governor said, "Oh, Lord, we are stuck." He jumped out of the car into mud more than shoe-mouth deep, and went lickety-split through the woods. I thought he going after mules or help, but he wasn't. He was just getting warmed up for his job.

HE CAME BACK and called to all hands to get out and push. Lige and I were all the hands available, as Mallory Mann was driving, and as it was his car it was best that he stay on that job. Lige and I climbed out of the car somewhat gingerly, stepping carefully here and there to avoid mud, but it wasn't any use. It "squshed" under our feet, and almost squirted between our toes inside our shoes. All three of us "lay to," and as Gene would give the whoop-up the car would move a foot or two. About an eighth of a mile of this kind of life brought us within 20 feet of the top of the hill.

Gene would say between each strain and panting for breath, "W. T., I want you to observe that if there were anything the matter with me, as some folks have been claiming, I would be dead by this time; for no one but a sound man could stand what I am going through."

* * *

AT THE TOP of the hill there was a farm house, where more boards and slabs were stored underneath than any place I ever saw. Nobody was at home, and we wondered how the inhabitants could have gotten away on such a day and such a road. We or I dragged out boards and toted them down the road to afford the car wheels a better footing, but the wheel were rather indifferent to our coaxing.

Lige Maynard didn't have much to say. He felt guilty about getting us on this muddy road and our having gone four miles further than necessary to reach the bird supper and accompaniments. He just pushed when told.

Gene as director-general became afraid at the top of the hill that the car would slip into the ditch toward which it was clandestinely working. He and Lige agreed we should go for mules and help. And they called to me to come along. I told them that I ought to stay with Mallory Mann to keep anybody from slipping up on him and taking the car away from him and running off with it, and besides I had recently suffered a broken leg, and didn't believe I could walk four miles to Montpelier Springs in that mud.

GENE AND LIGE readily agreed and in the fading sunset and in the course of much time they disappeared over the series of hills that stretched away in the distance and forbade our progress as much as did the one we had almost conquered.

I TOLD MALLORY the car had just as well be in the ditch as where it was, and with that we got rocks and boards and finally did between the two of us what the four had failed to accomplish. We quickly overtook Gene and Lige trudging up the road, with their feet gummed and enlarged and muddied as big as bushel measures. We agreed to thumb our noses at them as though they were hitch-hikers as we put on the gas to rush past. But it didn't work. We stalled just before reaching them. They got Farmer Tharpe to help them push us. A little further on we were joined by Farmer Robinson as Push-up Man No. 1, he being fresh in the task.

Gene and Lige wouldn't hear to my getting out of the car to do more pushing, after they had been reminded that I had a broken leg. It is a wonder I didn't think of that leg trouble at first.

And although the ride was slow and the car needed pushing even going down hill, I never enjoyed any ride as much in my life —what with the Governor of Georgia and the city attorney of Macon and two Monroe county farmers pushing me around. Imagine that!

I REMARKED to Gene while he was getting his breath at one resting spot that Freeman Hart had planned that thing with Lige Maynard to get him to pave those roads in Monroe county. Gene replied, "Well, I think he has oversold me; I am mad." But he wasn't. He was as calm and patient, in good humor, and persevering as any man I ever saw, thoughtful of the comfort of everybody, and especially of me.

We completed the four miles of mud to Montpelier Spring in about four hours, to find that Freeman Hart and his companion entertainers had returned to Macon. We did the same, and got supper and other refreshments in Macon at the very place we had left about five hours earlier.

They Comprise 40 Per Cent of Our Population, Bombs Kill Them, Too

FEB 14 1942

We Must Do for Them What They Can't Do For Themselves, So—

By W. T. Anderson

THE Meeting Sunday afternoon, Feb. 15, at the city auditorium at 2 o'clock, war time [and there is no other time], is for the purpose of informing the colored population especially, and the white people also, of what should be done by every citizen in time of war and during air raids.

People who have servants and are accustomed to keeping them beyond 2 o'clock on Sunday should see to it that they get off in time and get to this meeting.

There is no gainsaying that fact that if a bombing raid were to come to Macon, our Negro population would suffer just as much as the whites. Forty per cent of our people are Negroes. They are in poorly defended sections in all probability, and their houses are not able to resist bombs.

✣ ✣ ✣

A NEGRO blown out into the street and wounded and dying—his cries will be just as effective in creating pandemonium, he will occupy just as much space in the hospital, and will require and get just as much care as a white person.

It is important that our Negroes be made to understand what is expected of them. They have always shown a willingness and desire to do what their "white folks" ask of them [that is why so many of them get on the chaingang], and this is the time of all times that they have a right to look to us for leadership and information as to what they should do in air raids.

To illustrate the misunderstanding which Negroes frequently have as to what is intended for them to do, one is quoted as having said if he heard a siren or air raid warning calling for a blackout, that he was going to turn off his electric lights and go back to what he was raised on, his old kerosene lamp.

GOVERNOR TALMADGE is slated to come to Macon for this meeting to make a talk to the Negroes about defense. The general chairman for this particular meeting is Dr. Sol C. Clemmons, who has done much hard work to get his people in line with defense needs. He will introduce Vice-Chairman Johnnie A. Jones, who will participate in conducting the meeting and furnish information as to what the white people have been instructed to do.

Brother Daniel, Father Divine Follower, Gets Two Years for Failing to Register for Draft

On his plea of no contest to the charge of failing to register under the draft, Brother Daniel, local follower of Father Divine, received a two-year sentence in the federal penitentiary in Judge Davis' court Wednesday.

Brother Daniel contended that he had no recollection of his existence before 1936 when he was "reborn in the spirit." He stated that he is already registered in the army of the spirit world and that he is doing his bit "just like the rest of you all." When asked in the city jail by a reporter for the St. Louis Argus about his age, Brother Daniel answered: "There is no age in the spirit world. I am not worried about the future."

He resides at 2926 Pine boulevard.

47c

"We can't use them," was the abrupt declaration of C. Arthur Sanford, national employment expediter, representing the Richmond Shipbuilding yards of Richmond, California, when asked Monday at the NYA center whether he could use the fifty acetylene welders trained at Douglass high school.

Sanford, who arrived in the city Monday from Langston where he secured four arc welder told the big class at the NYA center that he could use every arc welder they could rake and scrape, and start immediately to paying them union wages, "but I can't use acetylene welders," he said.

It will be recalled that the Black Dispatch published an article some time ago in which it was pointed out that arc welding should be given Negroes at Douglass school, just as it is given to white trainees at the training school on North Broadway.

Already, according to Sanford, the Kaiser shipbuilders of California have taken more than sixty Negro youths from Oklahoma, who are now drawing more than $50 per week for their work.

"We've even taken them out of school and are finishing up their course in our plant. And you can say for us that we are interested in breaking down race discrimination in the United States," Sanford said. The Californian said he took 48 youths from Oklahoma City and Tulsa on his last trip here and could use several hundred more arc welders.

With the big West Coast plant anxiously awaiting another shipment of Oklahoma youths, the local NYA center at Second and Stiles had only five who are ready for employment and have completed the course, authough Douglass high school has more than fifty who have completed the course in acetylene welding, but who are unfitted and untrained for the positions offered in the Kaiser plants.

Sanford said that after a youth reached the shipyards it took somewhere around sixty days to complete his training for a production line. He said the boys were first started off tacking steel, that was followed up by the finishing up welders and through this process gradually integrated into regular welding tasks.

Mr. Sanford was presented to the students by Allen Bethel, and the visitors told of visiting St. Louis, where he hired 40 boilermakers. "But I cannot hire any here in Oklahoma because of the shortage of boilermakers in this state," said the speaker.

The speaker said his company operated three large shipyards, "and we have lots of Negro help, and I want to say here and now that we consider our Negro employees as 'A-1' laborers," Sanford said.

In poining out how skilfully the boys from the NYA center had been trained, Sanford said that ten were now on the "outfitting dock" which was one of the most important posts in the industry.

"My superior said to me sometime ago, 'Where did you get those boys?'

"I told him from Oklahoma, and he said 'Well, rush out there and get some more of them.'"

"No matter how tough your instructors seem to be, you take it, for remember, they are not nearly so tough as the job you are going to tackle. Here you can depend on your instructor. Out there on the job you have no one to depend upon but your own skill and native ability," said Sanford.

The speaker went on to paint a realistic picture of the task, without embellishment. "You're going to be under a nervous strain, and you'll suffer black-outs, but you must remember in addition to securing very profitable employment you will be rendering a patriotic service to your country. Do your best, do your job," declared the speaker.

Some of the feminine welders seemed depressed when the employment agent said that he could not give work to any females at the present time, but he pointed out that aircraft industry would need an abundance of welders and that right here in Oklahoma City there would soon blossom opportunity for every one of them.

To what evil depths must a Congressman sink before the consciences of his fellows are caught sufficiently to force them from their seats in protest against unspeakable malevolence?

Is there truly a parliamentary rule that requires half a thousand representatives of the people to sit by politely while one of their number defames our [illegible]cy, perverts the truth, fires the lynch spirit, and utters dark threats of a second civil war. The toleration of such evil utterances as the Congress left unanswered last Saturday is disgraceful at all times and dangerous to our national integrity in this hour of crisis.

I refer to a speech by Rep. John E. Rankin during the debate on the 'teen-age draft bill, as reported in the Congressional Record. It was uttered at a moment when a mob of the hate-monger's fellow Mississippians was skulking home from its third lynching within a week.

Thus spoke Rankin:

"The gentleman from New York (Rep. Wadsworth) said that there was little or no venereal disease in the Army. The reason is that they are exempting men who claim to have venereal disease, and as a result rejecting the Negroes in the South, and taking the white boys off the farms.

"Nine men out of 10 who go to the Army in one county I know are white men, and yet the contractors are required to employ 47 per cent Negro laborers on a munition plant in the same county.

"Those Negro laborers could do just as much in labor battalions as could these boys of 18, or even more. Let us put a stop to exempting men merely because they want to be exempted before we take boys 18 years of age."

Most of the Congressmen present must have known, as Rankin must have known, that truth was being lynched on the burning fagots of hate. They must have known that:

¶ The Army, at the insistence of Rankin's spiritual kinsmen, strictly limits Negro induction to 10 per cent of the total personnel, either by enlistment or draft. Negroes, eager to serve their country, have been turned away in droves from recruiting stations because of the humiliating Jim Crow quota. What monstrous irony for the hate-monger to blame Negroes for the Jim Crow barrier!

¶ The Army does not exempt men who "claim" to have venereal disease. It used to reject those [illegible] its own tests to be venereally infected. It now accepts them and renders them noninfectious.

¶ Mississippi, white and colored, has the third highest syphilis rate among the 48 states, according to Selective Service figures. If more Negroes are infected than whites, it's mainly because the Rankins have never given them equal treatment in medical care, health education and decent living conditions.

"I realize as well as anybody the danger we are in. . . . If you people keep stirring up trouble for us in the South, we are going to need our young men trained when this war is over in order to take care of the domestic situation."

The Nazi Reichstag, not the American Congress, would have been the proper forum for that kind of talk.

OCT 16 1942

C. W. HAYES, supervisor of Negro schools in Birmingham, said the institutions had gone "all out" in the scrap drive.

"The fact is," he said, "during the past week we have concentrated most of our attention on gathering scrap. We have even correlated this task with our class work, emphasizing the relation of this local and national effort to the curricula in our schools.

"The enthusiasm of our pupils has been fine, and the public cooperation has been of the highest type. The result is a huge scrap collection which has poured into the city pile through our schools."

SALLIE ANDERSON, president of the Birmingham Council of Colored Parents and Teachers, said the teachers and parents of children in the Negro schools have given unlimited support and help to the endeavor of the youngsters to help their country.

* * *

P. D. JACKSON, principal of Council School, 1400 Avenue M, Ensley, reported the collection by his school of 350 pounds of copper, 115 of brass, 50 of bronze, 62 of zinc, 143 of rags, 4,967 of iron, 430 of rubber and 1,000 coat hangers. About 500 pounds of mixed scrap was on hand Thursday, Jackson said.

The principal accredited one little Negro girl with obtaining about 100 pounds of rubber from an alley behind the house of an old Negro woman, who wasn't aware the material was there.

GRAYMONT SCHOOL, 500 Graymont Avenue, North, has collected more than four truck loads of scrap, Brunetta C. Hill, principal, reported. Among the items gathered was more than 20 pounds of keys.

* * *

FOUR LOADS OF SCRAP have been hauled away from Carrie A. Tuggle School, 824 12th Court, North, and Principal Bert A. Hudson said almost a load was left on the grounds Thursday. Some of the pupils were so enthusiastic that they brought in such articles as parts from the stoves at their homes, necessitating immediate recovery of the items by the children's parents, Hudson said.

* * *

MUFFIN RINGS, water hose and other items still usable were dumped into the scrap pile at Hudson School, 3300 Huntsville Road, T. J. Settles, principal, said, lauding the fine spirit his pupils have shown in the campaign. Some of the pupils took wheelbarrows and went from house to house to get scrap. Settles is also an air raid warden.

JO ELLA PORTER, of 404 Fifth Place, Pratt City, has already contributed one pile of scrap since the newspaper drive began and now has another ready to be collected. She gave some aluminum pots and pans from her kitchen, some tin cans and an old flat iron. Altogether, she figures she has donated 15 pounds or more to the current campaign.

* * *

THE REV. J. H. WILLIAMS, 820 55th Street, Vinesville, pastor of the Trinity C. M. E. Church in North Birmingham, gathered up quite a few pieces of scrap around his home. His contribution included some iron, tin cans and various kitchen utensils.

* * *

MISSOURI DANIELS, 2024 Avenue P, Ensley, has two children who were pupils at Council School, and she said they ransacked her home for scrap so that their school would make a fine showing in the drive.

OCT 16 1942

OGARITA ADAMS, housing manager at Smithfield Court, reports that practically every family living at the project took a great interest in the scrap campaign and formed one central pile where everyone deposited articles. The first large pile has already been hauled away by city trucks and the residents have started another one, she said.

* * *

SUSIE GARNER, 1008 Eighth Alley, North, said her neighborhood looks like a new place since the scrap drive. Yards, alleys, streets and basements have been searched for every piece of metal that might help the steel mills turn out material for guns and tanks. From her house she gave various kitchen utensils, including a large aluminum double boiler, an iron poker, iron grates and "just loads and loads of tin cans."

OCT 16 1942

A. B. WHITE, 1052 North Second Street, a sector warden in his neighborhood said he was "surprised at the interest shown in my sector and the amount of scrap collected." His personal contribution amounted to about 300 pounds, consisting of fireplace grates, part of a metal fence, a handle from a dirt roller weighing almost 75 pounds and several bushels of tin cans. White said about three truck loads have been collected in his sector.

FRANK POOLE, 209 11th Avenue, North, is another sector warden who has been a leader in the scrap drive in his community. His sector contributed several truck loads of scrap and more is being collected. He personally contributed an iron bedstead, several pounds of window weights, two bedsprings, a lot of piping, and a number of tin cans. Poole said that his neighbors cleaned up their basements and backyards and found lots of scrap that they didn't know they had.

J. W. McCALL, 1108 North Second Street, contributed an iron bedstead that had been in the family for more than 25 years. An iron pot, for boiling clothes, which weighed about 75 pounds, an old heater, bedsprings, a wire fence, and a lot of iron pipes were also added to the collection.

Low-Down on Army Life From Captain Walter C. Figg

Chaplain D. C. Rice Also Address Prospective Soldiers

Leigh Street 'Y' Holds Forums To Help Future Negro Selectees

Befuddled, worried and sometimes just naturally "scared to death," Negro men of Richmond who have been ordered to report for army induction are finding help through the monthly Leigh Street YMCA's selectees' forum in making the adjustments necessary in going from civilian life into the nation's armed forces.

As far as is known, the local forum series is the first of its kind in the country and has drawn prominent mention in the monthly publication of the national Selective Service headquarters in Washington.

Each month, the Leigh Street "Y" receives from the local draft boards here the names of Negroes who are to be inducted. Letters then go out to these men inviting them to a meeting at the "Y," Third and Leigh Streets. Each meeting is addressed by one or two army officers, who tell the men something of what to expect and how to conduct themselves during their life in the army. Then, the officers answer questions from the selectees during an open forum period, and later the formal part of the meeting ends and the men are invited to see the army representatives personally to talk over personal problems.

The September forum was held Friday night, with two speakers, Captain Walter S. Figg, of the State Selective Service headquarters, and Chaplain D. C. Rice, a Negro first lieutenant, from Fort Devens, Mass.

Matthew G. Carter

Making the introductory remarks, Matthew G. Carter, executive secretary of the "Y," a Community Fund agency, told the selectees that "no doubt you are tense and frustrated now, confused in your thinking and seeing visions of what'll happen to you in the army." Between the time they receive their orders to report and the actual induction date, some men go on a drinking spree, while others flounder around trying to adjust their personal affairs, he said. The forums are to provide a place where selectees can get help in making the transition from civilian to army life.

Captain Figg told the men that they would get along well in the army if they obey orders, keep themselves and property clean and "leave booze and women alone."

"But the most important thing is that you are going to learn how to kill.

How to Kill

"You may be strong as a beast now but not know how to use that strength. The army is not a plaything. It will teach you how to kill. The enemy doesn't have any mercy on us so we don't have any on them." When you go into battle, he told the men, "it's a question of your life or his."

"Don't throw your pay away rolling bones or playing blackjack," he told the prospective soldiers. "There's always one or two who end up with all the money and you're left without any. Send some of your pay back to a bank to keep for you."

Captain Figg told the Negroes they would feel better if they attended chapel service on Sunday, too.

Building his talk around the subject, "Is This Our War," Chaplain Rice told the men:

"You have been told that this is a white man's war and is promoted by men protecting their private business interests. Why should we sacrifice and struggle to win a white man's war.

"As a Negro speaking to Negroes, I ask you, is it our war when we are forced to walk because the Japs have deprived us of our rubber supply? Is it our war when we can't get many canned foods because of the lack of tin for cans? Is it our war when we might be cold this Winter because of lack of fuel? America might come to the point of starvation. When we begin to starve and be cold, white people will starve and be cold, too. If America goes down, you go down with her. And what other nation on the face of God's earth would you rather live in?

"America was built with the blood, sweat and toil of my forbears, and I'll work out my salvation here," he declared.

Warning that "we are still losing this war," Chaplain Rice, who was pastor of a church in Norfolk before entering the army, told the Negroes to "pack up your spats, cane, patent leather shoes and biswing suits" and prepare not to see them again for a long time. It's hard, but millions of other white and black boys have done the same thing. Are you any better than they are? . . . The war is a great leveler. When we get on the battlefield both blacks and whites fight and die together. This war has done more for us than anything since Lincoln signed the Emancipation Proclamation."

"You belong to a race which never had a traitor and never produced a saboteur."

ARMY NURSES MAY WED, NEW RULE PROVIDES

OCT 3 - 1942

Expect Move To Greatly Increase Enlistment For War Service

OCT 3 - 1942

WASHINGTON—(ANP) — The announcement by the War department last week that members of the Army nurse's corps may marry without losing their positions, is expected to be hailed with delight by the Negro nurses of the country.

In the past whenever an army nurse married she was forced to resign from the service.

Miss Mary Board, chief of the American Red Cross nursing service, which has charge of recruiting nurses for the army, remarked at a gathering of colored leaders and Red Cross officials in Washington recently that some difficulty had been experienced in securing enough colored nurses.

Mrs. Ruth Roberts, past chairman of the advisory committee of the National Association of Colored Graduate Nurses, and Mrs. Estelle Riddle, past president of the same organization, expressed the idea that economic circumstances caused earlier marriage and made marriage more of a certainty on the part of the colored nurse than on that of the white.

With the ban lifted so that after October 1 any nurse in the service who marries may retain her rank, a leap in enlistments by colored nurses is expected to follow.

OCT 10 1942

WASHINGTON, D.C., Oct. 8—(ANP) — When Negro selective service men appear before certain local boards, they are being disqualified by psychiatrists who label them mentally deficient, depending on answers to certain questions put to them.

The story, which comes from unimpeachable sources, declares that Negro selectees are asked, "What is your opinion on segregation?" If the answer denounces segregation, the man is classified as mentally deficient and placed in Class 4-F.

Such a large number of these classifications are coming into the selective service headquarters, officials are asking what the answer can be. Some men thus classified are holding positions in important posts and because of this classification, they are in constant danger of losing their jobs.

What prompts these questions remains problematical with interested officials at a loss to explain what the result will be. Too many Negroes are getting this classification to permit it to go unchallenged. An official investigation is believed underway.

LOUISIANA CONGRESSMAN FEARS "BEST BLOOD OF AMERICA" TO BE SACRIFICED FOR UNDRAFTED NEGROES

SEP 26 1942

Demands Immediate Induction of Blacks Fearing Whites To Be Exterminated

EQUALITY DEMANDED AT LAST DOWN IN DIXIE

SEP 26 1942

By ALVIN E. WHITE
Washington ANP Reporter

WASHINGTON.—(ANP)—"It is not proper in case of war to take the white man, the best blood of America, into the army, unless the colored man is drafted."

Hurling this defiance at congress, Newt. V. Mills, congressman from Louisiana, aided and abetted by Joseph R. Bryson of South Carolina, last Monday urged before congress the building of more camps and hospitals to accommodate larger numbers of Negroes into the army.

Mr. Bryson said: "I desire to highly compliment the gentleman from Louisiana for his continued fight in that the selective service must demand the draft boards to draft the colored man into service. Further the gentleman has continued to take the position that in case a colored man is rejected for any reason, the various draft boards should immediately draft into service an equal number of colored men to take the places of those colored men that are rejected."

He then quoted a statement made by Mills in 1940 which says:

"We have in the country approximately 15,000,000 colored people, and I understand certain colored boys down home have been undertaking to join the army. Do you know what they have been telling those colored boys? 'We do not have any camps.' So I say to the house I believe it is unfair for the army to enlist the white boys, the best blood of America, and put them in these army camps and train them, and then in case of a war take the white boys of America and send them out on the battlefields and let those boys be killed while the colored boys remain at home and then come along here about six months, or eight months or a year or a year and a half later and undertake to train the boys. Why not now construct some army camps for the colored boys and permit them to come into the army if you propose to force the white man into service?' "

Mills then followed Bryson and introduced into the Congressional Record a letter he had written Brig. Gen. Hershey of the selective service organization in which he stated:

"I respectfully request that you make an immediate investigation and demand that each local board draft into service an equal number of acceptable colored men to take the place of those rejected. Further, I request that those who are rejected from service due to disability be immediately sent to hospitals for treatment whereby they may be drafted into the army."

The induction of many whites into the army as against a small proportion of Negroes has been annoying to the southern bloc of congressmen who see in this a menace to the South when viewed from their own distorted outlook.

In this they are insistent, but in rendering service to these Negroes before they are inducted and mistreating them after they are inducted, the Southerners are strange silent. Mr. Mills' attention is called to the cases of injustices perpetrated upon Negro troops in his own state where Camp Claiborne was a national disgrace. He fails to understand it is not the fault of the Negro that he is not inducted faster. There are many other things, say commentators on the subject, that Mr. Mills could turn his attention to more usefully and not waste congress' time with perorations on inducting Negroes into the army.

3 OTHERS FACE FEDERAL COURT FOR SEDITION

Men Spurn Legal Aid Offered By Judge; Put Trust In Allah

OCT 10 1942

Federal Judge John P. Barnes cracked down Monday and sentenced 31 members of the Temple of Islam cult to three-year penitentiary terms after they had pleaded guilty to charges of failure to register under the Selective Service Act. Another cultist in court on the same charge drew a sentence of five years on a similar plea.

Six other followers of the mystic organization entered not guilty please and were arraigned Tuesday, Oct. 7.

Those sentenced to three years are:

John Tillman, alias John 5 X
Nolan Cobbins, alias Nolan X
Russell Hughes, alias Russell X
Zack Walker, alias Zack Hassan
Alphonso Hatchett, alias Alphonso Pasha

OCT 10 1942

Sentenced to five years was Emmanuel Karrien, alias Emmanuel Mohammed, alias Robert Bridgeman, son of Muck Muhd a leader of the religious order.

When sentence was passed, Karrien, head teacher of the temple, declared: "I hope the Japs win the war. Then all the Negroes will be free!"

Assistant United States District Attorney Kiely asked each of the defendants why they failed to register for the draft and each gave identically the same answer: "I registered with Allah."

Allah is the God of the Mohammedan religion and the power Muck Muhd is said to wield among the Islams stems from the belief that he is Allah's earthly representative. His followers are alleged to call him "prophet."

All of the convicted cultists flatly refused legal counsel offered by the court explaining that they were being represented by Allah. The only exceptions to the disdain for legal advise came when six of the cultists pleaded not guilty. They accepted the services of Atty. Bentley Pike appointed by Judge Barnes.

They are:

Sam Davis, alias Sam X
Leamon Thorton, alias Leamon X
Raymont Tharrieff
Farroz Jordan, alias Frazefe
Frank Eskeridge, alias Frank Esker-
Frank Eskeridge, alias Frank Eskrige, alias Frank 2 X
George Hawkins, alias George X

During the trial members and followers of the Temple of Islam sat in the courtroom garbed in ceremonial robes with stoical expressions on their faces. There were no demonstrations by the cultists many of whom are educated and cultured folk.

Observers of the proceedings felt that the convictions on charges of draft evasion cleared the defendants arrested last week in wholesale arrests by FBI agents of any connections with Japanese espionage. The government's attempt to build a case of sedition against them evidentally collapsed.

Efforts were made to convict some of the cultists on sedition charges when they were arraigned in federal court Tuesday. They are Gulam Bogans, alias Elijah Mohammed, alias Muck Muhd; Lenzie Karrien, and Pauline Bahar. These three are regarded as the top leaders of the cult.

They are said to have engaged in seditious acts by telling Islams: "Don't register for the draft." "You should not serve under the American flag;" "You should not take up arms against the Japs;" "The Japs are not our enemies."

ALBANY'S NEGRO CITIZENS.

With the close yesterday of the Newspaper Scrap Drive, to which there has been extremely generous response, The Herald wishes to acknowledge particularly the excellent cooperation which Albany's Negro citizens have given.

The same appeal was made to children in the colored schools that was made to those in the white schools, and the response was as prompt and enthusiastic. Negro fathers and mothers took out of their homes many cherished articles to go into community scrap piles, rivaling their white neighbors in sacrificial giving. The pastors of Negro churches appealed to their congregations to support the scrap drive, holding high the patriotic duty of American citizens irrespective of race or creed.

Albany's Negro citizens are buying stamps and bonds to support the war. Negro farmers have pledged dawn-to-dark labor in 1943 to help reach the production goals set by the Department of Agriculture. They are meeting their draft quotas cheerfully, and many thousands of them are working in critical war industries.

Our nation faces a long, hard struggle, and all citizens must toil and sacrifice together till victory is won.

The Educated Soldier

BY ROSCOE DRUMMOND
In The Christian Science Monitor

The 1942 edition of the American soldier is the most educated fighting man in the world today.

With 4,000,000 citizens now being brought to the peak of their training, the eductional level of the United States Army of World War II is higher than that of any army ever put into the field, and notably higher than its own counterpart of World War I.

This one fact, above all others, tells the story: Forty-one per cent of all white selectees are either high school graduates or have had some college training. Twenty-five years ago the soldier of comparable educational attainment constituted only 9 per cent of the American Army.

These and other related data have just been brought out and made available to the War Department by a joint study undertaken by Brig. Gen. Frederick H. Osborn, chief of the special service division of the army, and J. C. Capt, director of the Bureau of Census of the Department of Commerce.

The most significant conclusion drawn from this survey is that the American soldier of 1942 is particularly qualified to meet the specialized needs of modern warfare, requiring, as they do, a higher standard of educational equipment than ever before.

Today 11 per cent of the white selectees have had a college education. In World War I only 5 per cent had a college education.

Today 30 per cent of the citizen army are high school graduates. In World War I only 4 per cent were high school graduates.

Today 28 per cent have one or more years of high school training. In the last war only 12 per cent were high school non-graduates.

The phenomenal improvement in the educational level of selectees in World War II as compared with the army of 1917 is by no means the result of simply higher educational standards. It is due largely to a spectacular increase in educational opportunities throughout the United States in less than a generation.

According to statistics of the United States Office of Education in 1940, on the eve of America's entry into the war, almost as many men were attending college as were in high school less than a quarter century ago. The high school enrollment in 1940 was seven times greater than in 1916.

Another illustration of this trend is the fact that of the 18-44 age group the men from 21-24 had the highest median number of years of school and those from 35-44 the lowest. The 18-20-year group had not, of course, completed its education. Those facts point markedly to the rapid improvement in educational opportunities in recent years.

A geographic breakdown of these statistics shows that the white men of military age in the West—the Mountain and Pacific states—are better educated than those in the North—the New England, Middle Atlantic, East and West North Central states. The selectees from the South—South Atlantic and East and West South Central states—were found to be less well educated than either of those groups.

Although, according to the special service-Bureau of Census study, the educational attainment was lowest among Negroes, large gains in education have taken place in the Negro group during the past two decades. This is disclosed in the fact that 13 per cent of Negro men in the 35-44 age bracket received one year or more of high school education, while 26 per cent of the 21-24 age group attended high school.

Data on the educational level of Negro selectees in the present war, when compared with similar data from the last war, also shows great progress. Sixty-three per cent of the Northern Negro selectees have attended high school and 33 per cent of the Southern Negro selectees have attended high school, as compared with 14 per cent of the Northern Negro draftees and 3 per cent of the Southern Negro draftees in the last war.

The latest census statistics on years of completed schooling represent the first full inventory of the educational status of the entire population ever undertaken. The question on the highest grade of school completed was included in the census in place of the less comprehensive questions on illiteracy asked in previous censuses.

The number of illiterates cannot be estimated from these figures since the completion of no particular grade of school corresponds to the attainment of literacy. Ability to read and write is a less clear-cut concept, it is pointed out, than the completion of a given number of years of school, and even if literacy could be precisely defined, the grade in which it was acquired would depend on the individual and the school system. Some literate individuals never had any formal schooling.

The percentage of illiterates in the population 10 years old and over in 1930 was less than half as great as in 1900, 4.3 as against 10.7 per cent. It is considered highly probable that the illiteracy rate is now even lower, particularly since more than 30 per cent of the illiterates in 1930 were foreign-born whites whose numbers have been dwindling rapidly since the restriction of immigration.

Ired By Action Of Teacher

MARSHALL. — According to reports rife here this week, six men from the Wiley faculty have been summoned as a matter of reprisal because Prof. Cox, who is cripple, left the office of the draft board when he could find no seat, and subsequently refused to return unless guaranteed a seat and told one of the women in the draft office, "If you want me, you can send for me."

It is also reported that Dr. McLeod and Dr. Dogan spent a good portion of Saturday conferring with the board, but were told that the only thing the board could do for them would be to grant the professors a 60-day extension so that the college could replace the teachers.

Among the six called are Professors O. W. Crump, Nolan Anderson, Walter Ford and Prof. Smith. (The names of the two others we were not able to get before press time.)

Board Angry

It is also reported that the board was incensed over the attitude of Prof. Cox. The report is that one of the women in the office called Prof. Cox after he had returned to Wiley to find out why he was not at the board; that Prof. Cox told her that he had reported and had left because there were no seats for colored, the whites occupying all of the seats, and that he could not stand up because of his physical condition.

She is reported to have asked why he did not sit on the floor, if he had to sit down. He is reported to have told her that he did not care to sit on the floor. She is reported to have said, "Well, you'd better come back up here" and he is said to have replied, "If you want me, you can send for me."

When Prof. Cox reported again at the center, the whites told him he was going to the army if he did not stay there but one day. (Prof. Cox is so crippled he has to use sticks to walk on.)

The incident began about as follows, according to information given out here: Prof. Cox of Wiley reported at the Industrial Center at Tyler, Texas, in accordance with summons. When he arrived he found no place for colored, all of the seats being occupied by whites. Prof. Cox, who is crippled and walks with the aid of two sticks, left the center and returned to Marshall. Then is when the white attendants at the center called him about returning.

The draft board has considerable discretion in the selection of the draftees, but it will be singular if all of a sudden six professors from Wiley become subject to draft immediately under whatever system they are using.

If the above story turns out to be true in all particulars, Negroes will be surprised if the draft board can make such use of its authority as this. It would have been thought that if Prof. Cox had violated the laws in any way that the board would have taken steps to have adjusted it with him instead of punishing the whole faculty.

The Informer OCT 24 1942 Houston, Tex.

Editor's note: Last week this paper printed a letter from the editor of PM, New York City white daily newspaper to "Lewis Jones, American, who had apparently decided to go to prison rather than the Army, under the caption, "Why Colored Men Should Serve in the U. S. Army."

Below we publish an answer to this letter which was signed by 40 students at Howard University Washington, D. C., the original signatures of whom are in the possession of P. M. Newspaper. Most of the forty signers were men of draft age from the various schools of the University. Several stated they were volunteering to enter the Armed Forces soon, yet they felt that Lewis Jones' stand ought to be suported as a protest against the undemocratic Jim Crowism which is enforced against Negroes entering the military service. The letter was written in answer to an editorial in P. M. commenting on Lewis Jones' position.

"Dear Mr. Lewis:

"We have read the statement of Lewis Jones, a young Negro who has refused to fight as a segregated citizen and who was the subject of a recent editorial on your part. We have also read your answer. It is important to reemphasize that he does not stand alone in his conviction. We stand behind him, and many others who will read of his statement support him.

"You say you believe this to be a two-front war. Do you deny Mr. Jones the right to select the front where he believes his life and energy will make the more lasting contribution? As a soldier in a Jim Crow army he will have to accept the indignities that even you cannot imagine.

"Have you read the War Department's recent memorandum to soldiers at Camp Lee, Va., calling attention to the laws of segregation and separation in Virginia and commanding all soldiers to abide by them under penalty of Military Discipline?

If not, please read it and place yourself in Mr. Jones' position. Is it not more logical to take a stand against that sort of thing right here at home where Jones' refusal to fight must be officially (and editorially) recognized than to go off to fight the same idea on some vague battlefront leaving the condition at home unchanged and unchallenged?

Need More Jones

"Do you doubt for one moment, Mr. Lewis, that every young Negro with an ounce of manhood in his veins, having read Lewis Jones' statement, quickens with a new hope at his courage to do something which so few have had the courage to do but many have wished to do? Do you actually believe that it is the valor among us that has led so many of our young men to accept Jim-crow restrictions in the Armed Forces?

"If you do, then you should read their letters from the Army camps as we have, you should take time off and talk to them, those who have gone in and those who are using every possible means to stay out. Jones has pointed the way to the only effective protest our government will understand. The tragedy is that there are not more like him.

"Your argument that if we lose this fight the Negro will lose even the right to fight for equality leaves many of us strangely cold. Forgive us, if we see in such an argument the suggestion that we pull someone else's chestnuts out of the fire.

"The skepticism with which the Indian people regard Englands present promise of freedom after the war, remembering her broken promises after World War I, holds good for the Negro in America. We too remember the riots, the lynchings, the firings from jobs, the thrust back to the ghettoes of the Nation. It is common parlance among Negroes everywhere that 'the white man is in a tight spot right now—it's the only time we can make him listen to reason.' Do you really blame us, Mr. Lewis?

'Surely, even as a civilian, you know something of what it means to face death. Every time you hear an air raid alert, whether in practice or not, you cannot help but wonder, "Is it the real thing? Is it my turn now?" And if our lives are to be given sooner or later, is it so strange that a man prefers to give his life for something he really believes in than to give it meaninglessly and ignobly—in a Jim-crow Army, the arch symbol of all the injustice and inequality he hates?

"When Jones has reached the point, in common with thousands of others of us, that this issue must be fought out now, and that the sooner we can make Americans see that racial supremacy with all its practices must go, both as a military and civilian necessity, the sooner we will all be united to fight against the enemy from without.

Sharecropper Problem Attacked

"We know something about sharecroppers and the problems of Jews and other minorities. Without minimizing these weaknesses of democracy, you must realize, Mr. Lewis, that in addition to all the disabilities suffered by other underprivileged and minority groups, the Negro suffers from this onus of color from which there is no respite.

"When a white sharecropper in his rags may walk into a Virginia bus and sit down on the front seat, while a Negro soldier is driven to the back, you cannot convince the soldier at that moment that their problems are similar, and you know it.

"Nor could you convince those who saw Odell Waller go to the electric chair while a white man went scot free on a similar charge that the problems of the Negro sharecropper and the white sharecropper in Virginia are identical. Go down to Virginia sometimes, Mr. Lewis, and see how we feel about such things.

"You suggest alternatives to a "stinking prison." Yet you know that the case for Gandhi, Nehru and the Indian masses grows every minute they are in prison. You know their imprisonment is an indictment of British policy before the peoples of the world, and if you are informed on Negro opinion, you will note the current issue of Pittsburgh Courier's Bureau of Public Sentiment reports 87.8 percent of the poll taken among over 10,000 Negroes to be in favor of India's continuing to contend for her rights and liberty now. Does that give you an indication of the attitude of the Negro mind upon its own problem here in America today?

Think Jones Among Greats

"What good will Lewis Jones' imprisonment do? Plenty. It will give courage to thousands of Negro men and women who will count him as much a hero as Dorie Miller or Joe Louis. They will rank him with Frederick Douglass and A. Philip Randolph, the great intellectual leaders of liberation, and he will be in good company. It will strengthen the determination of others to take a similar stand when their time comes.

"It will say to the United States Government, "I cannot cooperate with your policy of discrimination and segregation," and the indictment will stand on its own merits before the public forum of the world.

"You asked why Mr. Jones had not gone throwing bricks into windows before this, since he had never known anything but discrimination.

This one was unworthy of you, Mr. Lewis. You know that Lewis Jones has reached a considered opinion in which his intellect has tempered his emotion. And you know also that at the present time there are plenty of folks down in the ranks of us who are throwing bricks at the present time, because they know of no other way. Are you concerned about the white man's skin, Mr. Lewis, or the Negro's right to equality? If the former, then permit Mr. Jones to have an equally selfish motive. If the latter, then there is no argument. You both agree.

"One final question, Mr. Lewis. Your government, and ours, has exercised the power over our personal lives that would be inconceivable were we not living in such revolutionary times as we are. It has removed from us the luxury of tires and automobiles to a large degree.

"For the Negro who has attempted to avoid the practices of segregation on common carriers by motoring as much as possible, a practical necessity has been removed.

"The government rations our sugar, it will soon ration our most prized American dish, meat; it has created an economic "dictator" to ration wages, prices, and whatever other things seem necessary to win the war. It has an equal power and responsibility to "ration" and abolish prejudice and all its practices.

"It can give the Negro equality in the Armed Forces without delay or internal chaos. The creation of mixed units would be a beginning step. In view of these circumstances, does the responsibility for Mr. Jones' act rest upon him or upon his government?"

Hershey's Report Reveals That Very Few Seek Deferment

Afro-American

Dec. 18, 1942

Official Figures Verify Alarming Number of Illiterates, but Draft Directors Disclose the Real Reason

If anybody cares to discuss the patriotism of colored Americans, the fact is that 10 per cent of the nation's population is furnishing from 16 to 25 per cent of the volunteers for the U.S. armed forces.

Figures released recently by Lewis B. Hershey, director of the Selective Service System, revealed that between November, 1940 (fourteen days after the first registration) and September, 1941, 38,000 colored volunteers had been inducted into the army, representing 16 per cent of the total number of volunteers for that period.

In addition, it was also disclosed that 25 per cent of the volunteers awaiting induction at that time were colored men.

Only 33 colored men have been classified as conscientious objectors to combatant or noncombatant service in the armed forces (Class 4E), and that number represents slightly more than 2 per cent of the total number so classified.

Induction Percentage

The total registration under Selective Service as of September 30, 1941, was 17,370,355 men. Of this number, 1,842,364, or 10.6 per cent were colored. Through November 30, 1941, 91,694 colored men had been inducted into the army, or 10.6 per cent of the total number, which is exactly the national population proportion.

The number of colored men deferred because they are engaged in occupations necessary to the national health, safety and interest (Class 2A) has been relatively small. Those deferred because they are engaged in work necessary to national defense (Class 2B) is smaller.

In Class 2A, colored constitute 1.6 per cent of the total number of men so classified. In Class 2B, they constitute only 0.65 per cent of the total.

Classes 3A and 4F

The proportion of colored men deferred as heads of families has been in line with the general rate of deferment in Class 3A. There has been, however, a significant variation from the average in States that do not recognize common-law marriages.

Of equal significance is the fact that there is little difference between colored and white registrants rejected and placed in Class 4F as morally unfit for military service.

In some States with large colored registrations, the percentage of rejections for this reason appears to be lower for colored than for whites.

Officials Explain Illiteracy

A study of rejections for educational deficiency (Class 4F) under the fourth-grade educational requirement provision, over a period of four months, May 15, 1941, to September 15, 1941, showed 140,923 rejections.

Of this number, 82,961, or 58.8 per cent, were colored.

The reason for the high percentage of colored in this division of Class 4F, officials said, was not because colored people resist education but for no other reason than that "education opportunities just are not available to them."

Good Health Record

The colored registrant has a good health record and, except for syphilis and gonorrhea, his rate of susceptibility does not exceed the average. Officials say this high average in social diseases is influenced very directly by the lack of education and job opportunities, bad housing, low income and inadequate health and welfare services.

Figures showed that as of September 30, 1941, 1,842,364 colored men were registered in the continental United States. Five Southern States—Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi, North Carolina and Texas—had registered 682,324 men, each State accounting for more than 125,000.

Maryland, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Virginia and New York had registered 320,260, each State accounting for more than 50,000 men.

Classification Groups

Classifications of registrants, prior to Pearl Harbor, some of which have since been deleted, are:

CLASS 1A—Available for full military service.
CLASS 1B—Those fit for limited military service.
CLASS 1C—Registrants inducted into the army.
CLASS 2A—Men necessary to civilian activities of community or nation.
CLASS 2B—Men necessary to national defense (by occupation).
CLASS 3A—Men upon whom persons are dependent for support.
CLASS 4B—Officials deferred by law.
CLASS 4C—Aliens.
CLASS 4D—Ministers of religion and divinity students.
CLASS 4E—Conscientious objectors.

Serving in the administration of the Selective Service System are 1,717 colored persons who function in the following capacities:

Local board members, 250; government appeal agents, 29; registrants' advisory board members, 624; associate members of registrants' advisory boards, 251; appeal board members, 11; examining physicians, 486;

Medical advisory board members, 63; National Medical Advisory Council, 1; President's Advisory Council on Selective Service, 1; executive assistant to the director, 1.

Facts and figures of the report are based on the peacetime setup of the Selective Service System, Mr. Hershey explains, pointing out that the entry of the United States into the war has changed the picture in many significant ways.

Soldiers' Wives Amuse War Dep't

Nov. 29, 1942

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (ANP) —Despite the serious situation in which the war department workers frequently find themselves, many of them are thankful for a sense of humor which saves much wear and tear on the nerves.

For instance, the girls get a big kick out of the thousands of letters sent the department by frantic and someimes furious women. There, apparently, are more of the latter than the former.

They send letters in demanding that their husbands be called to the service; they refer to their husbands as being "worthless, trifling and generally no good." Sometimes there are two or three letters from as many "wives" concerning the same man.

But they never forget to ask who is entitled to the benefits Uncle Sam has made possible. They ask about insurance, who it is made to and who is the beneficiary. But the smart soldier, feling that there is a move afoot to obtain benefits from his demise, should he be unfortunate, usually makes over his insurance to his mother, no matter how many children his legal wife may have. This peculiarity is general, say some of the workers.

Here, there are records on all men — even those who fought in World War I. Constant moving about from place to place, however, does not make for the complete safety of the records. This is costly in more than one sense. The constant shuttling of offices from one spot to another cost the taxpayers a pretty penny — if the economy minded congressman cares to look into it.

But the laugh of the week came when it was related that through an error a lieutenant had been buried in the private's section of a national cemetery. When the chap enlisted, he was a private. and his record never had been changed. So when he died, there was nothing to do but inter his remains as those of a private When the error was discovered. hell broke loose and the department was anguished because changing the grave cost all of $50.

Court Refuses Writ to Draft Objector

DEC 19 1942

NEW YORK — The fight of two brothers, one who refuses to serve in a jim crow army and the other his lawyer, neared a turning point here this week as Judge Mortimer Byers denied a plea for a writ of habeas corpus in Brooklyn Federal Court, Friday.

Winfred Lynn, Jamaica gardener, is under indictment for failure to obey an induction order and was being held under $2,500 bail until Judge Byers reduced it to $1000 and he was released.

His brother, Conrad Lynn, contends that induction into a jim crow army is violation of the Constitutional guarantees to American citizens and the non-discrimination clause contained in the Selective Service Act.

Hays in on Case

Joined by Arthur Garfield Hays, attorney for the American Civil Liberties Union, Attorney Lynn asked the court to listen to the story of his client who he contends is no draft dodger but an objector to the method of quota selection of colored by his draft board.

DEC 19 1942

Judge Byers refused to hear the argument or to accept the lawyers' brief, stating: "This is wartime. I'm not going to grant any writs prior to induction. The proper time to seek relief in the courts is after induction."

Lynn's attorneys indicated that an effort would be made to have him inducted immediately and that action for a discharge on grounds that he was illegally inducted would be instituted.

Over Million Negroes In U. S. Armed Service

DEC 19 1942

(Special to the N. Y. Amsterdam Star-News)

WASHINGTON, D.C.—The integration of the Negro in all branches of the United States armed forces in keeping with President Roosevelt's proclamation that "It is the policy of the United States to encourage full participation in the national defense program by all citizens of the United States, regardless of race, creed, color or national origin" is being realized in large measure, according to Selective Service Director General Louis B. Hershey, and Lieutenant Fitzgerald, staff member of the Public Relations Division of the War Department.

DEC 19 1942

A Negro infantry division, the 93rd with about 13,000 men, is now training at Fort Huachuca, Ariz., and a second division, the 92nd, has been reactivated. In addition, there are several infantry regiments, two cavalry regiments, pursuit squadrons in the Army Air force, and important tank battalions in the armed forces. Other include field and coast artillery and anti-aircraft units, quartermaster, inspector general's department, signal corps, military police, engineers, medical, chemical warfare.

Colored Soldier Looks at the Army

Editor's Note—Bert Cumby, 29-year-old Negro soldier stationed at Myrtle Beach, S. C., writes about the young Negro and the United States Army in th following article. He is a graduate of Fish University, Nashville, Tenn., and his home is in Washington. He enlisted in the Army July 25, 1942.

By Bert Cumby

Myrtle Beach, S. C., Oct. 17. It was on a warm summer morning, July 25, 1942, that I walked into the United States Army Recruiting Station in Washington and enlisted in the Army of the United States. As I was sworn in as a soldier of the United States Army that day, it seemed to me that I had just begun to show my citizenship, my patriotism and my respect for the principles upon which my country was born and built into greatness. As a young American Negro who has enjoyed many of the opportunities available to the people of a free country, I felt an appreciation of the American Way of Life and a clear relization of the causes for which my country fights in this bloody conflict.

From Washington I was sent to Fort Meade, Md., for induction, and from there I was sent along with other young Negroes to Myrtle Beach, S. C., for a period of basic military training in the United States Air Corps. The trip from Fort Meade to Myrtle Beach was the most enjoyable it has been my privilege to make.

In Pullman cars en route to Myrtle Beach from Fort Meade were young Negroes from New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland, the District of Columbia and Virginia. We had been engaged in various occupations in civilan life, ranging from a statistician in the Government at Washington to a steel mill worker in Pittsburgh.

But on this particular trip, we all had the same job, and we all will have the same job until that job is finished. That job is the complete liquidation and total destruction of a group of international gangsters.

At Myrtle Beach, S. C., we found a place that you would think was carved from a perfect pattern by nature. Situated on the Atlantic Coast, Myrtle Beach has been virtually "taken over" by the United States Army, with the consent and coopertaion of the civilian population.

After several months here in Army life with one of the most important branches of the service—the Air Corps—I have observed a cordial relationship between the white and colored soldiers of this station. Everyone here realizes that this is war—that this is the Army, not a classroom for a variety of ologies, hatreds and race problems. Everyone here realizes he has a job to do, and he is doing that job, with credit to his country, to his commander, to his company and to himself.

As a young American Negro in the uniform of my country, I am happy, as many others are, to be among that marching crowd of the armed forces who are doing their part to win the war—for the restoration of human decency—for the security of a lasting and just peace.

To the American Negro I say he has as much to fight for as any other American. He has as much to be proud of as any other American. He has as much at stake in this conflict as any other American. If a foreign type of slavery is inflicted upon my country as a result of going down in defeat in this war, my own race, the American Negro, will not be an exception to the general pattern of inhuman treatment of the peoples conquered and dominated by Hitler and his association of mass murderers.

America is my home. America is the place of my birth. America is where I worship a God of my own choice. America is a place where a man can raise a family and educate his children without Government interference. America is still a place where a man can enter business, prosper, succeed, and take his rightful place in life. America is still a place where a Joe Louis, a Marian Anderson, a George W. Carver, a Mordecai W. Johnson, a C. C. Spalding and numerous other American Negroes have won the respect of their fellow Americans—Americans of all races and colors.

NEGROES IN PROPORTION TO WHITES

Recent selective service changes, covering education and health, have increased the number of Negro inductees to such an extent that the disproportionate number of drafted whites is fast being overcome and within three or four months should no longer exist.

The rule now is that of each day's draftees 10 per cent shall be from those with insufficient education to meet the standard army requirements—that is fourth grade.

Registration by races in this state is 56 per cent white, 44 per cent Negro, the figures not tallying exactly with the population proportions which are nearer 57 and 43. To date, the white inductees are much greater in relation to registration, or population, than the Negroes. Health and educational tests caused the differentiation but the liberalized acceptance rules gradually are correcting this.

In World War No. 1 there was no trouble finding suitable places for persons with little or no learning. In fact, there were jobs into which they fitted better than did those of some education. They made excellent stevedores, they worked well in labor battalions and on certain engineering projects. For instance, in France large quantities of wood were needed for cooking and for heating billets. These laborers did good jobs in that; they kept the roads to the front in repair; they worked about the great warehouses, and many of them did excellent fighting.

We do not see why a man without education should be barred from combat. Nobody raised that question in our other wars. And the excellent service rendered by the uneducated—often by the illiterate—in battle after battle stifles any argument to the contrary. Sergeant Jasper could neither read nor write but he had sense enough to turn down a commission on that ground and his name has come down in history as one of the comparatively few enlisted men remembered from the American Revolution.

It is only fair to the unlettered, it is only fair to the lettered, that both groups be taken. And the fact that they both are being taken now is a tribute to the South Carolina selective service chief, Gen. Holmes B. Springs, who has made a hard, long fight for this equality of opportunity to serve.

Notes On The Draft

Houston, like other Alabama counties with large Negro populations, is encouraged by the recent announcement of Brig. Gen. Hershey regarding the future induction into military service of persons infected with venereal diseases. The present draft policy, which Gen. Hershey indicates will be modified, calls for deferment until treatment has been completed of all registrants so infected.

This policy has resulted in the wholesale rejection of Houston county Negro registrants, and the same situation no doubt prevails in other sections of the State. In some instances, it has been reported that as many as 50 per cent of Negro registrants sent off for physical examination have been turned down because of venereal diseases.

Another situation which has vexed local draft boards even more than the high incidence of venereal diseases among Negro registrants is that some Negroes, knowing that if they were infected they would be turned down or deferred, have deliberately contracted the diseases. (Of course, the "great white mother" would be shocked no end to learn that this situation prevails in certain areas of the South but it has been publicly discussed by health authorities and cannot be easily dismissed as a rumor.)

But this method of avoiding military service will be short-lived, judging from Gen. Hershey's statement. He discloses that the Army, in its quest for more manpower, has agreed to begin taking two per cent of its draft quotas in men with venereal diseases and 10 per cent in illiterates. He also said that both figures might conceivably be increased in line with the new policy of relaxing Army physical standards.

It is therefore gratifying to the patriotic citizens of this section to know that otherwise able-bodied Negroes will no longer be left at home to spread disease merely because they have contracted syphilis, which they do not fear, as an easy way of keeping out of the Army. After only a short period of treatment, syphilitics are capable of doing heavy manual work, such as is required in many Army activities, and it is well that a place is to be found for them where they will get both hard work and treatment.

To Increase Number Of Negro Selectees

Columbia, June 11.—Immediate increases in the number of Negroes called from South Carolina for military training and service under the Selective Service system can be expected, United States Senator Burnet R. Maybank told Brig. Gen. Holmes B. Springs, state Selective Service director, over the telephone recently.

Culminating a program instituted by Senator Maybank and General Springs more than a year ago, Senator Maybank's message to the state Selective Service director came as the result of a series of conferences between the senator, Brig. Gen. Hershey, national Selective Service director, and General George C. Marshall chief of staff.

Direct affirmation of the new policy of calling more South Carolina Negroes into the armed forces came with a supplemental call for Negroes to be supplied during July. The total call is about three times the number called in any one individual month durin gthe past. Actual figures cannot be released, General Springs said, since all figures concerning quotas and calls on a statewide basis are considered military secrets.

According to figures released at state Selective Service headquarters several days ago, approximately 32 per cent of all men inducted into the armed forces from South Carolina since the Selective Service system was placed in operation on October 16, 1940, have been Negroes. The proportion of white and colored registrants in the state is 58 per cent white and 4 2per cent Negro.

General Springs hailed Senator Maybank's announcement as a further step toward equalizing the burden of service and sacrifice among the white and Negro populations of the state.

"Both Senator Maybank and myself have always thought that the Negroes should furnish their proportionate number of men in the armed forces," General Springs said. "To drain the state of its white population of young men and leave the Negroes is obviously unfair to both races. The Negroes, as patriotic citizens, wish to take a part in the national war effort and our efforts to secure an increase in th enumber of Negroes to be called for service have been met with approval by many Negro leaders.

The Selective Service system has had nothing to do with the number of men to be called by the armed forces or the number to be supplied from each race, General Springs pointed out. All requisitions for men for the armed forces emanate in the war department and are relayed to the various states by national Selective Service headquarters.

USArmy Objector Gets 3 Year Term

OCT 31 1942

Three years imprisonment—with a grace period of three months to change his mind—was the sentence passed on Lewis Jones, conscientious objector against jimcrowism in the USArmy, by Judge Julian Bright on Monday in Federal Court. The case grew out of Lewis' refusal to answer his draft induction.

Clifton Foster, American Civil Liberties representative, pleaded in Jones' behalf and pointed out the objection by his client was not a refusal to defend his country but something based on the foundation of our national law. He put it this way:

"The objection is not on conscientious grounds but on constitutional grounds." As such the action of Lewis did not violate any act of the selective service, but was merely a protest against the procedure of their induction and operation.

In passing out the decision Judge Bright said:

Will Gladly Fight In Mixed Army OCT 31 1942

At the trial Assistant US Attorney Friedman learned from Lewis he would gladly fight in a mixed army. (Ed.—PV favors a mixed army and recently pushed a campaign for such.) But, the problem turned out that there are no such units—SWG.

14,791 Draft Evasion Cases Uncovered In 3 Months

OCT 31 1942

WASHINGTON, (ANP) — Federal agents have been busy unearthing cases of draft evasion during the last three months. During that time, some 14,971 cases have been unearthed, many of which were settled before court action, and 389 convictions returned.

OCT 31 1942

Justice department officials said that there is no apparent increase in cases recently, but no definite satistics on this are available. In July, 4,056 cases were handled, in August, 5,816, and in September, 5,09?. Cases against conscientious objectors are not included in this group.

Since the first registration in October, 1940, 2,200 convictions have been recorded. The largest number of Negroes convicted under the draft regulations include the famous Negro Moslem sect in Chicago, which justice department officials erroniously believe mushroomed with the passage of the Selective Service act.

This sect had been operating not only in Chicago but in many large eastern cities for a number of years and the Selective Service act had little or nothing to do with the membership.

Cases involving evasion of the Selective Service act are handled by U. S. Attorney's offices throughout the country.

What Happens To Conscientious Objectors? Negroes And White Live Together In Ohio Camp

Nov. 15, 1942

By JACK ENLOW

What hapens to people who have conscientious scruples against the war was explained to your correspondent last week when he interviewed a former Chicagoan who was given a 4-E registration classification and sent to Civilian Public Service camp number 23 in Cohoston, Ohio, to work in a government program of soil conservation along with 157 Gentiles, one Negro and 6 Jews.

Wallace Nelson, a thirty year old, stocky, energetic conscientious objector, said he was one of the two Negroes who live, work and play with the other people who work in the camp.

Nelson said that men from all walks of life are in the camp and they come from all parts of the country. About 60 percent of the men are college trained, he said. Some have Ph. D. degrees; some are members of the honorary scholastic fraternity—Phi Beta Kappa. From New Sork City comes one of the nation's outstanding Botanists—Dr. Harold Modenki, former curator of the New Lork Botanical Gardens and instructor at NYU—Nelson explained.

Nelson, who studied at Ohio Wesleyan university and at Chicago's Wilson Jr. college, said that the relationship among the men of different races and varied religious beliefs is excellent.

How they live? The food is good, he explained. The camps is supported by the Quakers. The men received $2.50 a month allowance. Clothes and other necessities must be secured through gifts, in excess of the allowance, he pointed out. He said that $35 a month is paid for each man to be in the camp for his expenses. This is paid by the Quakers in the Coshocton camp.

What about furloughs? Each man is allowed two and one half days a month and two week ends each month. The furlough days are accumulative, he said.

How do the fellows think who are in camp? I inquired. All are opposed to war, he replied. Some on the strict ground of religious beliefs, others on their own conscience. Yes, some of them leave the camp to go into the army, was his reply to a question as to whether any change their minds. Some change thier minds because they think their fight for pacifism is a losing battle and is comparable to a drop of water in the ocean to turn a swift moving tide. Others leave because of financial reasons —to get the monthly pay that the army offers which is about $47.50 a month more than the men get in camp.

Nelson is a Methodist. He left his job as director of the Liberty Community Center at Delaware, Ohio, to go to the camp. He is well known for his work with various youth groups.

The other colored member in the camp is Joseph Quinn, well-known youth leader from Chicago who went in a month ago.

It's A Small World

The world is a small place after all, even if it did take a war to prove it to some folks.

For instance, there's the case of the Dale County Negro who was drafted. Like hundreds of others who have been inducted into the Army, he traveled by bus to the induction station and then by train to the reception center. Dejected, home-sick and blue—maybe a little frightened—he lost all sense of direction and didn't bother to make inquiries as to where he was.

After a few weeks in the reception center, he boarded a troop train and headed for another camp, where training was to commence. He did generate enough curiosity to ask another rookie where they were going.

"Cal-i-fawnyuh," was the reply, and in a fashion typical of his race, he curled up on the seat and went to sleep.

There followed hours of riding, shunting on sidings, moving again. He dozed often and had not the slightest idea how long he had slept nor when he would arrive.

Finally the train reached its destination and he marched with the others into a shiny new camp.

Thousands of new faces and weeks of drilling and training occupied his time and thoughts. Others were granted leave but he, being far from home and friends, was content to loll around the camp and take things easy.

Long weeks went by and training progressed, and one day he found himself hiking with the rest of his outfit along a little-used country road. A log truck pulled over to the side to make room for the marching soldiers.

Then it happened.

The ring of familiarity attracted his glance. Waving and shouting, he broke ranks and ran to the truck to exchange greetings with three of his old Dale County cronies—the first familiar faces he had seen since his induction.

"Lieutenant, suh, please-suh let me talk with 'em just a minute—they's boys from home," he pleaded as he was reprimanded for breaking ranks. Impressed by his charge's eagerness and this sudden change from the morose to the care-free, happy soldier, he agreed, with the admonishment to "make it snappy."

"Whut you boys doin' heah?"

"Jus' haulin' logs, like always."

"M-m-m-m. Come a long way, didn't-cha?"

"Not so fur."

"M-m-m-m."

Bewilderment gave way to confusion when one of the loggers spoke up:

"Seen yo' sister las' night."

"Reckon not. She ain't out heah."

"M-m-m-m," incredulously, "When she goin' home?"

"Went back las' night."

"Uhhuh. Wan't my sister. Couldn't git back dat quick frum way out heah!"

"Whut you talkin' 'bout, boy, course she could. Didn't take fifteen minutes."

"Nigger, where is I?"

"You mus' be crazy. You'se is fo' miles o' home right now. Crank up dis truck, boy, us go!"

The indignant friends sped away on their truck and the dazed soldier collapsed to the unfamiliar Dale County roadside, happy beyond speech at the thought that he had been at Camp Rucker all those lonesome weeks.

Quota Raised for 3-A Men Who Want to Be Officers

But High School Education Needed For Commission

South Carolina's quota of volunteer officer candidates (selective service registrants who have been classified as 3-A and who therefore may apply for officers' training) has had a "large increase" Brig. Gen. Holmes B. Springs, state selective service director, said yesterday.

General Springs revealed that so far 95 white South Carolina registrants had been accepted and were now serving their basic training periods as officer candidates, and that thirteen others had been found qualified and would be inducted into the service this month. Three Negroes have been accepted as officer candidates and will also be inducted this month. In all, there have been more than 160 applications made by selective service registrants in the state.

While South Carolina has been restricted to a comparatively small quota in the past, the present quotas have been greatly enlarged and qualified registrants were urged by General Springs to take advantage of the opportunity to become officer candidates as soon as possible.

To qualify, registrants must now be in Class 3-A, deferred because of dependency, must secure dependency waivers from these dependent upon them, must have at least a high school education, must pass a final type physical examination, and must appear at his own expense before a board examining officers at Fort Jackson who will determine the applicant's suitability as officer material.

If accepted, the applicant will return to his home and will then report for induction at Fort Jackson along with the next regularly scheduled group of selectees from his local board area.

Following induction, the registrant will undergo an intensive course of basic training, after which he must again appear before an officers' examining board at the replacement center to which he has been assigned. If disqualified, he will be returned to his home after transfer to the enlisted reserve and will be called back to the service when other registrants with the same degree of dependency are called for training and service.

Those who successfully complete the period of basic training and the officers' training school will be commissioned as second lieutenants.

General Springs pointed out that while the minimum educational requirement is for a high school education, the fact that the educational requirement is met does not necessarily mean that the applicant will be found qualified. Qualification is based on the report on physical appearance, bearing, personality and other factors and is decided on by officers of the Fourth Service Command.

Many Negro Draftees Returned to Hancock

Special to THE CONSTITUTION.

SPARTA, Ga., Dec. 1.—Hancock county Negro draftees are said to be coming back from induction centers in increasing numbers because of diseases, principally tuberculosis and venereal. The November quota of 37 men went to Fort Benning last Wednesday, and 18 were returned immediately and others may follow in a few days.

The number of white draftees returned has been small, considering the number who have been sent. No plan has been set forth to remedy the situation, so the local draft board will keep sending them to fill the calls.

Pittsburgh Courier
Pittsburgh, PA.

COMMON SENSE IN THE DRAFT

Army authorities have proposed to Congress that all men over forty-five years of age who are in the Army be discharged upon their request, and it is probable that such a law will be passed within the near future.

It certainly should be passed, and the age limit should be lowered to thirty-five or, at most, forty years of age.

Most men of thirty-five are married and have dependents. Moreover, a large percentage of them have skills and experience more valuable in vital civilian production than in the armed services.

As a rule young men are more physically fit to withstand the hardships and excessive strain of modern war, they are less set in their ways and thus more amenable to military discipline, and they usually have less dependents.

In another connection, too, it is better that the older men be deferred from military service. These men frequently have families in which there are sons and daughters in their 'teens who, because of disruption of family life caused by drafting of fathers, are all too often apt to become delinquents.

There has been a marked rise in juvenile delinquency in the past two years, and it is well known that most delinquents come from broken homes.

We have a war to fight but we must also look to the years after the war and the generation which must take over after this one is gone. The discipline and training of stable home life are needed to give that generation moral character for the heavy tasks of post-war reconstruction.

It is for this reason that thoughtful people are urging the withdrawal of older men from the army and warning against the drafting indiscriminately of women, many of whom would be or are mothers.

On the other hand, drafting of the eighteen- and nineteen-year-olds is a sound policy which has obtained in all armies recruited by selective service. While it interferes with the education of a small minority, it gives the majority of them valuable training, discipline and experience which most of them could not obtain at home, and which will be valuable to society after the war.

All in all, the new draft policy seems to be eminently sensible.

Negro Gets Writ In Draft Law Test

The P. M. Daily

DEC 24 1942

Judge Marcus B. Campbell of Brooklyn Federal Court yesterday cleared the way for an early test of the legality of inducting Negroes under a quota system and into a segregated army.

Campbell issued a writ of habeas corpus for Winfred Lynn, Jamaica Negro gardener, requiring the commanding officer at Camp Upton to produce him in court next Monday for a hearing.

Lynn submitted to induction Saturday. He previously failed to report for induction, and, after arrest, sought the writ.

That application was dismissed, on the ground the proper time to argue the case was after induction.

The case is the first test of that section of the Selective Service law forbidding discrimination on account of race or color in "selection and training."

REFUSES TO REPORT FOR ARMY SERVICE

12/5/42

NEW YORK. — (CNS) — Winfred Lynn, a 1-A man and ordered to report for induction since September 18, has refused to answer the call in a Jim-Crow army.

"Unless I am assured that I can serve in a mixed regiment, and that I will not be compelled to serve in a unit undemocratically selected as a Negro group. I will refuse to report for induction."

This, Lynn wrote way back in June. The draft board asked him to appear August 16 to state his case. Lynn assured the board that he would never appear for induction so long as there was a Jim Crow army.

12/5/42

Lynn, who is 36 and a gardener by profession, then served notice of his decision at the U. S. Attorney's office in Brooklyn. For a while nothing happened. Then Assistant U. S. Attorney Hirsch called him down to his office together with his brother, Atty. Conrad Lynn, and proceeded to show Winfred the error of his ways.

When this failed the matter was turned over to the prosecuting attorney.

Draftee Challenges Army 'Quota' For Negro 1-A's

12/5/42

NEW YORK—Charges that the Selective Service System is using Jim Crow methods in its separate quotas for Negroes and whites were leveled this week in a habeas corpus petition filed in the Brooklyn Federal Court by a Negro under indictment for failure to report for induction.

Winifred Lynn, 36, a gardener of Jamaica, Queens, brought the action principally to test the anti-discrimination clause in the draft law, but it is expected that the whole pattern of segregation and discrimination as practiced by the United States Army will be challenged.

This will mark the first time that a court hearing has been obtained on charges of racial discrimination since the beginning of World War II and the court's opinion will undoubtedly have far reaching effects on draft regulations.

The case is set for hearing Friday, Dec. 4, before Judge Matthew T. Abruzzo. It was originally scheduled for Nov. 27, but was adjourned to allow both sides more time for preparation.

Lynn's petition charges that he is unjustly imprisoned in violation of the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution and in violation of the Selective Service Act.

The petition sets forth that "the induction order which your petitioner is alleged to have violated was invalid, having been issued to your petitioner as part of a 'Negro quota' and your petitioner was not bound to obey said order."

12/5/42

A copy of the "quota order" issued to local boards by the New York City Headquarters of the U. S. Selective Service is attached to the petition. It states in part that: "Your (the board's) quota for this call is the first . . . white men and the first . . . Negroes, who are in Class 1-A . . ."

Lynn contends through his brother Conrad, his attorney, that this is a violation of the section of the draft law which states:

"In the selection and training of men for service, and in interpretation and execution of this act, there shall be no discrimination on account of race or color."

THE ANNISTON TIMES

In this critical war period the problem of race relations in America requires the best thinking and the utmost restraint by leaders of all groups.

Here in Alabama, where at Anniston and Tuskegee large numbers of Northern Negro soldiers have been brought for training, the need for care is especially great.

Already there have been minor disturbances, nearly all of which could have been avoided easily but for the hot-headed action of one individual. It is a pity that innocent white people and innocent black people should be drawn into difficulties by the emotion of a situation created by individuals who, often as not, are unworthy. Each of us should resolve to count up to 100 before making any contribution to a disturbance which may create unrest and bitterness. Any man who helps to bring about race difficulties at a time like this, when every good right arm, every brain and every loyal American heart is needed to win the war, is betraying his country.

Both the white race and the Negro race are on trial in this critical time. The white people, the majority group, are obligated to go as far as it is humanly possible in showing that America believes in democracy for all—the weak and the strong alike. The Negroes, our minority group, must put country ahead of minority advance, making such good use of the privileges gained automatically in wartime that their capacity for still further advantages will be made obvious.

The winning of this war will depend in large measure upon our ability to stand shoulder to shoulder—white and black, Jew and Gentile, Catholic and Protestant—in the defense of an ideal. If we cannot do this, then the war, and the American dream along with it, is lost.

Mrs. Roosevelt Gives Negro Talk on Loyalty

NASHVILLE, April 20 (AP).—Mrs. Roosevelt had a quick answer today for a Negro college student who asked where the American Negro's loyalty should lie in the present war.

"I'm sure any Korean could tell you what being under the Japanese would be like," the First Lady said, "but nevertheless, you do present a very real problem."

The girl had said to Mrs. Roosevelt, "I am an American, but to whom do I owe my loyalty? There's a bond between my race and the darker-skinned races. Should I fight for the race with which I have kinship, or for a more dominant race which does not consider me an American or grant me the privileges of democracy?"

"I understand your conflicting loyalties," Mrs. Roosevelt continued, "but you must consider that you at least have a better chance under democracy than under a totalitarian regime, no matter what race administers it."

ATTY. MCCOY TO ENLIST IN MARINE CORPS

Wants To Do His Bit For U. S. In Fight Against Axis

MAY 16 1942

Atty. Walter L. McCoy, 5256 Michigan avenue, an assistant state's attorney and leader in Democratic circles, has applied to Secretary of Navy Frank Knox for enlistment in the new branch of the Marine corps. If accepted he will resign his post and begin training at the Naval Training station at Great Lakes, Ill.

In discussing his reason for desiring to enlist, Attorney McCoy said:

"I am a patriotic citizen and I want to do my bit to help my country in its fight against Japan and the Axis powers. While I don't favor segregation in any branch of the armed services, I do feel that the record Negroes will make under the Navy's new policy, will pave the way for the breaking down of the now existing color barrier."

Plans Not Complete

In a letter from Major F. R. Worthington of the U. S. Marine corps, Attorney McCoy was told that full details for the acceptance of colored applicants have not been completed, but it was expected that within the next few weeks, volunteer enlistments would be accepted.

Attorney McCoy has been connected with the state's attorney's office for more than nine years as an expert in the extradition department. Prior to his appointment, he served as an assistant corporation counsel.

A native of Houston, Texas, Attorney McCoy has been a resident of the city for more than 22 years. He has passed the bar both in Mississippi and Texas where he practiced and received his post graduate work in law at Wiley university.

Has Brilliant Record

While in the state's attorney's office, Attorney McCoy has made a brilliant record. One of his coworkers pointed out that it was McCoy's idea and recommendation that caused all fugitive warrants to be made returnable to the Felony court in the Criminal courts building where the services of the extradition department of the state's attorney's office were available. This put an end to the confusion then existing in the handling of fugitive cases by the various districts.

It was McCoy who stopped the fifty-year-old practice of fugitives being turned over to officers from other states by the police on so-called waivers. Now all fugitives must be produced in open court and there apprised of their constitutional rights and given an opportunity to resist extradition if they so desire.

He also prepared a brief on the subject of fees for filing suits in Cook county, which revealed that the clerks of the Criminal court had violated the law for thirty years by permitting petitions for Writs of Habeas Corpus to be filed free intead of paying $15 filing cost for each petition required by law. This act enabled the county to collect more than $31,000 in revenue.

McCoy' treatise on habeas corpus and extradition was acclaimed by the State' Attorney's association of Illinois as well as numerous district attorneys and attorney general throughout the United States as authority on the two subjects.

DEFENSE TRAINING FOR NEGROES IS PROJECTED

MONTGOMERY, (AP) — Efforts were under way today to have defense training courses made available to negroes by securing recognition of Tuskegee Institute as a qualified school for the instruction.

President George H. Denny of the University of Alabama, President L. N. Duncan of Auburn and other prominent educators met with Governor Frank Dixon yesterday and declared in a statement that in the event Tuskegee is not approved, Auburn and Alabama "stand ready to give further consideration to the problem with a view to solving it in such fashion as would be satisfactory to all concerned."

Courses in engineering, science and management defense training were advocated.

Educators attending the conference said Tuskegee was not qualified because the training under a U. S. office of education regulation is limited to institutions that awarded degrees in engineering, chemistry, physics or production supervision in 1940-41.

In addition to Denny and Duncan, others meeting with the group were: J. E. Hannuk, assistant dean of engineering at Auburn; E. R. Plowden, in charge of defense training for the state department of education; J. E. McDaniel, regional adviser of defense training at Georgia Tech, and R. L. Puerifoy, defense training official from Washington.

State Educators Request Use Of Tuskegee As Training Center

MAY 9 - 1942

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 8—(AP)—Action to make defense training courses available to Negroes by securing recognition of Tuskegee Institute as a qualified school for such instruction was taken at a meeting of widely-known educators with Gov. Frank Dixon Friday.

The conference, attended by the presidents of Auburn and the University of Alabama, declared in a joint statement that in case Tuskegee is not approved, Alabama and Auburn "stand ready to give further consideration to the problem with a view to solving it in such fashion as would be satisfactory to all concerned."

The conference advocated, in the interest of national defense, the making available to Negroes of "ESMDT" instruction—engineering, science and management defense training.

Tuskegee Institute is not qualified, it was stated, because of a regulation of the U. S. Office of Education, limiting it to institutions which in 1940-41 awarded degrees in engineering, chemistry, physics or production supervision. A change in favor of Tuskegee will be sought.

Attending the conference, in addition to Gov. Dixon, were President George H. Denny, of the University of Alabama; President L. N. Duncan, of Auburn; J. E. Hannum, assistant dean of engineering, Auburn; E. R. Plowden, in charge of defense training for the State Department of Education; J. E. McDaniel, regional adviser of defense training, Georgia Tech; and R. L. Puerifoy, field representative, ESMDT, Washington, D. C.

NEGRO SOLDIER HONORED

(From the Newberry Observer)

Leaving tonight (Monday) Clyde Martin, a young colored man of Newberry, will report for duty in the Armed Forces of the United States at Fort Benning, Ga., on tomorrow. For nine years Clyde has been the assistant janitor in the Exchange Bank building, and has performed his duties as such in a cheerful and efficient manner. Friday morning a group of men and women representing the occupants of the building gathered in Blease & Griffith's office where Judge Blease presented Clyde with a gold Elgin wrist watch and some money, a gift from all of the men and women who through these years have appreciated the efforts and smiles of Clyde. Judge Blease, in his few remarks, told him that each wished him well and knew that he would make one of the best of Uncle Sam's colored soldiers. Clyde, surprised and almost speechless, expresesd his thanks in well-chosen words, and said that he thought he could serve each one better as a soldier than as assistant janitor in the building.

ARMY FINDS THIRD OF WHITES UNABLE TO MEET STANDARD

Pittsburgh Courier

HOPKINSVILLE, Ky., May 21.—A method of selecting men for induction into the Army will be revised, it was announced here after one-third of 85 white selectees were rejected because of illiteracy and bad physical condition, while colored selectees were accepted almost 100 per cent.

In the last delegation of 82 colored draftees sent from this area, the army accepted all but four. These were returned to their homes after a thorough check by physicians at the army induction center, for physical defects that were not immediately apparent under the present system of screening examinations.

Only 54 of the last 85 white men sent to induction centers were accepted by the army. Some 14 of the rejected men were found to be unable to read and write, the army notified the Christian County draft board.

The balance had physical ailments "that were immediately apparent," the army reported.

Hopkinsville draft board officials said that the white men had been given only the scantiest of physical examinations in line with the new army policy. At the same time, they expressed amazement that the army doctors were able to find rejections for so many of the delegation.

The good record made by the colored citizens was explained because of the better physical condition of the men from outside work in this area and because of the improved school system for Negroes in this section of Kentucky.

Texas Director Reveals Negro Women To Serve

MAY 21 1942

Two of First Eight Divisions To Be Colored

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(SNS)—Immediately after being sworn in as director of the newly formed Woman's Auxiliary Army Corps, Mrs. Oveta Culp Hobby announced that forty Negro women would be admitted to the training camp to be established at Fort Des Moines, Iowa, where the officers for the first 25,000 women in the corps will be trained.

This step indicates an integration of the entire population in this aid to the army.

Appearing on a coast to coast broadcast Wednesday afternoon, Mrs. Hobby, who has been the target of attack by some Negro leaders, who opposed her appointment because she is a Texan, further disclosed that of the eight initial divisions to be formed, two of them would be composed of Negro women.

MRS. HOBBY

LEADERS DELIGHTED

Negro leaders are expressing delight at this unexpected turn of affairs for they were beginning to believe that the WAAC was to be a "lily-white" organization.

It is hoped that a racially proportionate number of the women in this new adjunct to the army will be Negroes, with opportunities given them similar to those given other women. Many posts are to be filled by these women, to relieve men for actual combat duty. Clerical post; jobs with air raid listening posts and similar duties for which women are qualified are all a part of the extensive program.

From the war department comes the announcement that the enlistments for the training period at Des Moines are open to "citizens of the United States, between the ages of 21 and 45. They may be married or single. They must have had at least a high school education, be in good health and of excellent character."

WILL BE NOTIFIED

All applications must be sent to the recruiting office of the army in the area nearest your home. The women whose applications are satisfactory will be notified as to the time and place of examinations. The applications of those who pass these preliminary tests will be sent on the proper corps area, where they will be examined and sifted by a recruiting officer and two women assistants.

The pay is as follows: director, $3,000 a year plus subsistence allowance of 60 cents a day and $100 a month quarters allowance. The assistant directors will receive $2,400 a year, plus the same subsistence allowance and a quarters allowance of $80. First officer, $166.67 per month, plus allowance of $40 per month for quarters and 60 cents a day for subsistence; second officer, $131.25 per month plus the same food and quarters' allowances; and third officer, $125 per month plus the allowances.

In the non-commissioned grades, auxiliaries may hold the rank of first leader at $72 per month; leader at $60 per month and junior leader at $54 per month. An auxiliary will receive $21 per month for the first four months and $30 per month thereafter. They may also be graded as first class specialist, with $15 per month in addition to base pay; second class specialist $10 per month in addition to base pay or third class specialist, $5 per month in addition to base pay.

TO WEAR UNIFORMS

Every member of the WAAC will wear the appropriate uniform, insignia and accessories supplied by the government. The term of service is for one year and may be extended by the secretary of war for the duration of the war and for not more than six months thereafter.

The signal corps of the U. S. army has already started enrolling women and training them in certain phases of its work which can be handled by women, taking time by the forelock and getting the jump on the WAAC.

Negro Fears Being Eaten on Duty in Africa

JUN 9 1942

A new Army officer recently was sent from Atlanta to Jacksonville to enlist 100 Negroes for a special mission to Africa.

On reaching Jacksonville he called on a Negro well acquainted with the population and explained his predicament.

JUN 9 1942

"Don't worry," the man reassured him. "We'll have 'em ready to go at tomorrow's meeting. You just be there at 2:30."

Sure enough, 300 with the draft on their necks were present.

The officer picked out a short fellow and asked him if he wanted to enlist. "Yessuh, boss, I wants to be in the recreation depa'tmunt of amusements."

He was signed up.

Later, the officer asked him how he thought he would like Africa.

"Africa?" yelped the startled Shorty, his eyes bulging like the eight ball you get behind on the pool table. "Boss, ah cain't go to Africa. Dem folks eats us folks over theah."

He was released on his own cognizance pending final disposition of the case Oct. 16.

Jones, 28, is a native of Texas and a graduate of Moorehouse College in Atlanta, Ga., where he received a bachelor's degree in sociology.

Illiterates Will Be In Early Draft

SEP 19 1942

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Maj. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, testifying before a house committee, this week said that on Oct. 1 the army will begin inducting men suffering with venereal diseases at the rate of two percent of the national total of induction.

Hershey, national director of selective service, said he thought the army had facilities for treating the two percent effectively. He revealed at the same time that the army is now taking 10 percent of illiterates at each induction station and that it "is going to take more per day pretty soon."

The new order for inductions means that more Negroes will be inducted into the army. Recent figures for Negroes showed that in some cases, 50 percent of draftees examined showed traces of venereal diseases. Th rate of illiteracy was a bit higher.

Work or Fight Order

The rcent work or fight order issued from Austin, wherein certain workers, including lumber workers, are "frozen" to their jobs, affects a large number of Negroes. In the lumber camps of East Texas, and in the mills of that region, Negro labor constitutes nearly 75 percent. Some of the labor was migratory but under the recent order it will become stationary, it was said.

Under the order, a worker is permitted to change his job as long as it does not adversely affect the war effort and that by changing he would increase production.

Draft Laws Are Attacked In La.

AUG 31 1942

NEW ORLEANS, La.—(ANP)—Delivering his 117th speech since the beginning of his campaign for office, Monday night over a statewide radio hookup E. A. Stephens candidate for the United States senate, again attacked the selective service laws as being impractical for the south and maintained his Negro-baiting tactics as he told his audience, "We of the south shall continue to handle the race problem in our own way."

Reiterating his charges of two weeks ago when he declared, "We are fast taking our white men and leaving the Negroes on the street to present an increasing menacing social, economic problem," Stephens told the white voters, "if you folk send me to congress I shall modify the draft laws to suit the south."

He warned the white section of the population that the south would have to fight hard to maintain the laws of segregation as there were northerners and socialist agents in the south who wanted to do away with discrimination.

Referring to exposures of his race-baiting tactics carried in The Louisiana Weekly, he declared, "Already I have been attacked by Negro papers. Why, just a few days ago I received a marked copy from one of them." He expressed a belief that "this attack" would become more intense as the election day drew nearer.

Stephens is seeking nomination by the Democratic party which in Louisiana is equal to election, because of the one-party system.

According to statements and letters from throughout the state, Negroes highly resent Stephens' race-baiting technique. He is accused of stirring up disunity among the people of the state purely for political reasons, which is said to be dangerous during the present war crisis. Last week, in an effort to prevent further dissention, the New Orleans president appealed to the local FBI. He asked that Stephen either be forced to stop his race hate program or be arrested.

Reveal Negro To Be 10.6 Per Cent Of Armed Forces

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(A N P)—Despite published reports in a New York column that Negroes were to be inducted at a higher percentage rate than the past, Lt. Col. Campbell C. Johnson states that the present "sensational" line was the subject of a war department release last Spring. At that time, the percentage of Negroes being inducted into the army was below the accepted standard of 10 percent. This was due to the lack of training facilities for Negroes and no other reason.

The department promised when the facilities were available, more Negroes would be inducted. That time has come, according to Lt. Col. Johnson, who is aide to Brig. Gen. Hershey of the selective service system, and so more Negroes are being inducted into the army. But the overall percentage shows that the higher rate of the present date will bring the total Negro percentage in the army to about 10.6 percent of the total number of soldiers in camp.

Asked about the number of Negroes in the army, Lt. Col. Johnson smiled and said, "I know of course, but we are not at liberty to give that figure. It is a military secret."

No Harm Done in Inviting Colored Soldier to Dinner

AUG 22 1942

Mrs. Roosevelt Answers White Family Criticized by Neighbors for Courtesy

From "If You Ask Me" by Eleanor Roosevelt in July issue of Ladies' Home Journal.

AUG 22 1942

Colored soldiers guard the railroad bridge in our Maine town. Recently I invited one of the soldiers to dine with us and our whole family (white) is being criticized. Should I have done this?

ANSWER

I see no reason why you should not have invited a colored soldier to dine with you if you wished to do so. I imagine there are some white people whom you would not like to have in your home and there might be colored people whom you would not like to have their either. Just because a person is black, there is no reason why you should not be kind to him if he is a nice person.

Our Allies Colored

After all, we have got to face the fact that we have allies today in India and in China and that our attitude toward the other races of the world must become one of co-operation rather than one of domination, if we are going to lay a basis for a better world in the future.

AUG 22 1942

I believe, of course, that the emphasis in our relationship with the colored persons should be to see that they get their full rights as citizens, but the personal equation is one which each person has to decide for himself. We are free to act as our own conscience and our own inclination dictate.

AUG 22 1942

We live in a free country where we are not forced to do anything about our personal relationships which we do not feel like doing.

ARMY TO TAKE MEN WITH VENEREAL DISEASE

SEP 25 1942

WASHINGTON, Sept. 25, ANP—Particularly important was the recent announcement that the selective service would include in the October quotas, selectees suffering from venereal diseases, discontinuing for the major part the practice of rejecting men on these grounds.

Under the present plans, a small percentage of disease men, both white and colored, will be accepted by the army and given treatment.

One of the best conceived programs yet devised will be put into effect, according to Col. Campbell Johnson, aide to Gen. Hershey of selective service.

SEP 25 1942

There will be no distinction as to race, the colored men receiving the same treatment as the whites.

At present, the army will not take everybody and it is not going back to take the men rejected previously. This, possibly, will be taken care of at a later date.

Following the approved plans for treatment of the disease the army cure will be along conservative lines and not the experimental one-day cure, so widely discussed through current newspapers.

Some sort of segregation of diseased men will be in operation in camps. While the men receive first time in the history of the treatment they also will receive military instruction.

For sometime the army has been working quietly to this end and the recent announcement comes as a follow-up on the general campaign to suppress or eliminate the disease which is responsible for more casualties and men lost to the army than regular combat.

Negro Organization Perfected To Speed Collection Of Scrap

OCT 4 - 194

With enthusiasm running high, negro community chairmen and co-chairmen in Montgomery County's drive for scrap metal to be made into war material, met Saturday in the courthouse to further plans for a real all-out clean-up campaign in their respective communities in the county.

OCT 4 - 194

The negro organization, headed by O. C. Crowe, has 30 community chairmen, each with a co-chairman. Under each community there are 71 neighborhood groups, each headed by a chairman. The neighborhoods include from 10 to 20 families each. All the county negro salvage activities operate under Lem Edmonson, Montgomery County's farm agent.

PROBLEMS OF THE DRAFT.

Illiterates and venereals are the big problems of the draft in so far as South Carolina is concerned.

That is the conclusion of Brig. Gen. Holmes B. Springs, state director of the selective service, who Wednesday brought these conditions to the attention of the attendance teachers of the state at a meeting in Columbia.

Forty-five per cent of the South Carolina's selectees called in August were turned down at the induction centers because of lack of education—that is, not being able to pass a fourth grade test. Since the rules now allow as much as 10 per cent of each call to be from this group, the total number of this class, sent up from the local boards was even greater of course than the 45 per cent of rejections.

But why, some one asks, are not these men turned down at home and the government saved the expense of transporting them to and from the induction centers, feeding them, and so forth? And the answer is that there is no provision for the matter to be settled by the local board but if the government insists on not taking these men, then at least the time and expense of taking them to the induction centers could be saved by arranging to pass on their educational qualifications at home.

There are registered in South Carolina 540,866 men of both races between the ages of 18 and 65. Only those between 20 and 44 (inclusive) are subject to combat duty. The proportion of whites and Negroes is in round numbers 42 and 58. At one time there was great disparity between the numbers of whites and Negroes drafted. Since the 10 per cent illiterate rule has been in effect, and increased calls have been made for Negroes, there has been a considerable leveling, and now the Negroes inducted are only eight per cent behind their registration proportion.

There is no sound reason why a man should be rejected because of lack of education. Take him, find the niche that he can fill, and if need be, teach him. But in fairness to himself and to the man who must take his place if he is not taken, he should be called and accepted.

And so with venereals. Some have been taken; many others rejected. Take them and cure them, and give them jobs that they can perform, the health of others, of course, always being considered.

The Government's Answer to Lewis Jones Is Jail

But a Jail Doesn't Answer Logic, and the Question Jones Raises Ought to Have a Logical Answer.

NOV 14 1942

Not much is being said about it.

Not much can be said about it during war times, but a great deal will be said about it in the future.

Lewis Jones, a six-foot gangling American, who hails from TEXAS, but more recently from New York, is in Federal prison.

Jones was born in the backward South, got his education the hard way by earning the money for it himself, and, like many another ambitious American youth, went to New York to seek his fortune.

The best he could do was get an elevator job—a college graduate doing the humble work that didn't require the thinking for which he had been trained.

Time to Think

An elevator job gives a man plenty of time to think between trips, and Jones thought about himself, his color, his handicaps, his second-rate citizenship, the world-wide emphasis on freedom and social reforms. Wisely or unwisely, he came to the conclusion that there was too much talk about democracy and individual rights and too little translation of talk into action.

Then came the draft call to enter the U.S. Army and serve in a segregated unit. NOV 14 1942

Nothing in the Constitution of the United States authorizes the government to set up separate units based on color. In fact, the privileges and immunities clause expressly forbids it.

What the Constitution Says

He got the Constitution out and read it carefully. He found this under the Fourteenth Amendment:

> No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States . . . nor deny to any person . . . the equal protection of the laws.

Jones said to himself that means that none of the individual States may jim crow me (although they do), and I have left the South because it violates the Constitution.

He re-read the Tenth Amendment to the Constitution, which says:

> The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution nor prohibited by it to the States are reserved to the States respectively or to the people.

NOV 14 1942

To Jones these provisions may have meant that the power to segregate citizens on the basis of color not having been delegated to the government by the Constitution, and being expressly prohibited to the States by the Fourteenth Amendment, such power could not, therefore, be legally assumed by the government.

Up and down in that New York elevator as he carried his passengers the thought was turned over in his mind—the government has neither the legal nor the moral right to jim crow citizens any more than the States.

And, said he, the reason the Southern States continue to jim crow colored people in violation of the Constitution is that they point to the Federal Government and say, "Get right yourself before you criticize us."

"Railroad companies which jim crow me, companies which decline to hire me all point to the U.S. Army pattern as an excuse," Jones declared.

"The greatest good the government could do the States would be to set the example in democracy."

He made it plain that he was no draft dodger. He's for the draft. He's no conscientious objector. He believes in war. He hates the Nazis and the Japs. He'll fight them with everything he has, but only in a mixed army.

He didn't run away to Canada because desertion is cowardly. He didn't recommend his example to others because his convictions were his own and he's not looking for publicity.

He doesn't want to lose the war, but he feels that losing the peace will be far worse if we use undemocratic methods of segregating citizens because of their race, color or religion.

Is He Crazy

Is Lewis Jones crazy? A psychologist who listened to an AFRO reporter interrogate him for four hours said "No."

Has he the martyr complex? The psychologist said "Maybe; the war does that to some people. It makes them either cowed or militant."

Jones, himself, says he is simply logical and that everyone who has discussed the subject with him has admitted his logic but urged him to join the colors.

He didn't join. Instead, he is serving a three-year term in a Federal penitentiary with the proviso that he will be released after three months if he consents to be drafted into the military service and serve with a colored unit. NOV 14 1942

The registration will be held next Thursday, Friday and Saturday in preparation for start of gasoline rationing on Nov. 22.

Registration places will be at the courthouse in Tuskegee, the gymnasium at Tuskegee Institute, city hall at Notasulga, high school at Shorter, Davis Store at Fort Davis, B. B. Spratling's at Roba, Mrs. H. A. Torbert's at Society Hill and Mrs. Dudley Brook's at Creek Stand.

The registration places will be open from 9 a. m. to 5 p. m. on Thursday and Friday and will remain open two hours longer on Saturday.

NOV 5 - 1942

In preparation for registering, motorists should secure from any filling station a prepared form and have this filled out when they go to register. They must also have the number of their federal auto windshield stamp and their 1943 state license receipt.

Operators of trucks and commercial vehicles will not register the same as owners of private cars but will be registered through the Office of Defense Transportation in Montgomery.

The Government's Answer to Lewis Jones Is Jail

But a Jail Doesn't Answer Logic, and the Question Jones Raises Ought to Have a Logical Answer.

NOV 14 1942

Not much is being said about it.

Not much can be said about it during war times, but a great deal will be said about it in the future.

Lewis Jones, a six-foot gangling American, who hails from TEXAS, but more recently from New York, is in Federal prison.

Jones was born in the backward South, got his education the hard way by earning the money for it himself, and, like many another ambitious American youth, went to New York to seek his fortune.

The best he could do was get an elevator job—a college graduate doing the humble work that didn't require the thinking for which he had been trained.

Time to Think

An elevator job gives a man plenty of time to think between trips, and Jones thought about himself, his color, his handicaps, his second-rate citizenship, the world-wide emphasis on freedom and social reforms. Wisely or unwisely, he came to the conclusion that there was too much talk about democracy and individual rights and too little translation of talk into action.

Then came the draft call to enter the U.S. Army and serve in a segregated unit.

NOV 14 1942

Nothing in the Constitution of the United States authorizes the government to set up separate units based on color. In fact, the privileges and immunities clause expressly forbids it.

What the Constitution Says

He got the Constitution out and read it carefully. He found this under the Fourteenth Amendment:

No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States . . . nor deny to any person . . . the equal protection of the laws.

Jones said to himself that means that none of the individual States may jim crow me (although they do), and I have left the South because it violates the Constitution.

He re-read the Tenth Amendment to the Constitution, which says:

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution nor prohibited by it to the States are reserved to the States respectively or to the people.

NOV 14 1942

To Jones these provisions may have meant that the power to segregate citizens on the basis of color not having been delegated to the government by the Constitution, and being expressly prohibited to the States by the Fourteenth Amendment, such power could not, therefore, be legally assumed by the government.

Up and down in that New York elevator as he carried his passengers the thought was turned over in his mind—the government has neither the legal nor the moral right to jim crow citizens any more than the States.

And, said he, the reason the Southern States continue to jim crow colored people in violation of the Constitution is that they point to the Federal Government and say, "Get right yourself before you criticize us."

"Railroad companies which jim crow me, companies which decline to hire me all point to the U.S. Army pattern as an excuse," Jones declared.

New Rochelleans Open Canteen For Servicemen of All Races

NEW ROCHELLE—Negro servicemen visiting here will find a rousing welcome awaiting them. Setting an example in democracy for whites who in many instances exclude Negro soldiers and sailors from their canteens, local Negro citizens last week opened a new canteen and announced that all nationalities are welcome. The project, housed in a store at 6½ Rochelle Place, is under the supervision of Mrs. William A. Burton.

With the cooperation of the churches of the community and the Girl Scouts, the canteen will be open daily from 1 to 11 pm and will offer refreshments. Books and the opportunity to enjoy radio programs are also available.

MANY HOSTESSES

The help of many charming young hostesses has been enlisted and special kits will be prepared for the servicemen. On weekends there will be special events, such as coffee hours with entertainers and lecturers. Catherine Graves and Gussie Johnson are in charge of these projects.

Co-director of the canteen is Boshop Thomas Gibson of Gospel Tabernacle. Assistants include Mildred Banks, Mrs. Charles Bullock, Virginia Shields and Dr. William A. Burton.

Say Perverts Draft Problem

ST. LOUIS, Mo.—Unconfirmed reports say men with perverted inclinations are proving a headache to draft boards in the Southwest. Several cases are said to be on record where well and hearty men have confessed that they would be more of menace than good to the army and succeeded in evading service.

In one city, elements of the population have resented the leaving behind of a pervert, expressing fear for the safety of males not yet old enough to answer the draft.

NEGROES IN MINORITY

Disease and Illiteracy Curb Their Induction

Columbia, Dec. 29.—(AP): Negroes have made up 34 per cent of all South Carolinians inducted into the armed forces since the selective service act became operative, the state Office of War Information said today.

The OWI said recent census reports showed negroes constituted 42 per cent of the state's population, but that a high incidence of disease and illiteracy among the race had prevented proportionate induction.

Objector Jailed; Brother Aids Him

Winfred Lynn, 36, of Jamaica, L. I., is in federal prison on West st., Manhattan, quietly confident that the cause of democracy for the Negro in the army will ultimately triumph. Lynn does not believe he can be guilty of draft evasion when he wants to go into the army without discrimination as, he thinks, the law provides.

Last June he wrote his draft board:

"Please be informed that I am ready to serve in any unit of the armed forces of my country which is not segregated by race."

Sept. 18 was his scheduled induction day. He did not appear. His brother, Conrad Lynn, a local lawyer, called the federal attorney's office and offered to surrender him. A number of fruitless conferences were held with the authorities. Lynn could not bring himself to serve in a "Jim Crow" army. The authorities could not agree to change the method of selecting and treating Negro soldiers.

On Nov. 16 Draftee Lynn arraigned in federal court and held in $2500 bail. Lawyer Lynn immediately secured a writ of habeas corpus. The hearing on the writ has been adjourned to Nov. 27. The brothers pin their faith on a proviso in the draft law which forbids discrimination in the selection and training of men for service on account of race or color.

COLLEGE MEN GET DRAFT DEFERMENT

DEC 26 1942 WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 24—Temporary deferment for college and university students and instructors in certain medical, engineering and other technical fields is authorized in a new bulletin to local Selective Service Boards, enlarging previous deferment provisions, Chairman Paul V. McNutt of the War Manpower Commission announced.

Students who will be deferred until the end of the academic term which is in progress on March 1, 1943, include:

1. All medical students (including hospital internes and residents), dental students, veterinary students and all pre-medical, predental, and pre-veterinary students who have completed one year of study in approved engineering curricula.

3. All undergraduate and graduate students in approved colleges and universities who are specializing in chemistry, physics, or bacteriology and are within two years of the completion of the specialized curricula.

All full-time instructors and all part-time instructors also devoting the balance of their time to study in any of the curricula above shall be deferred until July 1, 1943, or until otherwise directed by the War Manpower Commission, Mr. McNutt said.

Simultaneously, Mr. McNutt urged all male university and college students to remain in school until called for military service. Students in the 18-19-year-old group should not hesitate to enroll to begin their college training at this time, he added.

More Negroes To Be Drafted Springs Says

Immediate increases in the number of Negroes called from South Carolina for military training and service under the selective service system can be expected, United States Senator Burnet R. Maybank told Brig. Gen. Holmes B. Springs, state selective service director, over the telephone yesterday afternoon.

Culminating a program instituted by Senator Maybank and General Springs more than a year ago, Senator Maybank's message to the state selective service director came as the result of a series of conferences between the senator, Brig. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, national selective service director, and Gen. George C. Marshall, chief of staff.

Direct affirmation of the new policy of calling more South Carolina Negroes into the armed forces came with a supplemental call for Negroes to be supplied during July. The total call is almost three times the number called in any one individual month during the past. Actual figures cannot be released, General Springs said, since all figures concerning quotas and calls on a statewide basis are considered military secrets.

According to figures released at state selective service headquarters several days ago, approximately 32 per cent of all men inducted into the armed forces from South Carolina since the selective service system was placed in operation on October 16, 1940, have been Negroes. The proportion of white and colored registrants in the state is 58 per cent white and 42 per cent Negro.

General Springs hailed Senator Maybank's announcement as a further step toward equalizing the burder of service and sacrifice among the white and Negro populations of the state.

"Both Senator Maybank and myself have always thought that the Negroes should furnish their proportionate number of men in the armed forces," General Springs said. 'To drain the state of its white population of young men and leave the Negroes is obviously unfair to both races.

"The Negroes, as patriotic citizens, wish to take a part in the national war effort and our efforts to secure an increase in the number of Negroes to be called for service have been met with approval by many Negro leaders."

The selective service system has had nothing to do with the number of men to be called by the armed forces or the number to be supplied from each race, General Springs pointed out. All requisitions for men for the armed forces emanate in the war department and are relayed to the various states by national selective service headquarters.

Send-Off Party Set For Negro Selectees Friday

Plans for a "send-off party" for a large group of negro selectees who will leave Tuscaloosa Friday morning for examination and possible induction into the U. S. Army were announced today by the Tuscaloosa Negro Elks Lodge.

This celebration will be held Friday at 8:30 a. m., at the local bus terminal. Fruit, cigars and cigarets will be given to the men. Special music will be furnished by the Bama Cotton Pickers and Dukes of Rhythm. Dr. A. B. McKenzie will speak briefly. One other speaker is to be chosen.

Similar parties will be held for groups of negro selectees who are to leave June 15 and June 16. All friends and relatives of men leaving are invited to attend.

Send-off-parties were held this week for white selectees leaving for examination. Men now designated for examination are required to apply to their local boards if they wish brief furloughs in which to adjust business matters. Legislation providing for automatic furloughs has not yet received final passage. Approximately 375 men from this county are to be examined this month.

Increase Seen In Negro Call

Induction Into Army Expected To Triple During July

During July, almost three times as many South Carolina Negroes will be called into the army under the selective service act as have been called in any previous month, it was announced this morning from the ofice of Brig. Gen. Holmes B. Springs, state selective service director.

This statement followed a telephone conversation between General Springs and Senator Burnet R. Maybank in which the senator said that he had conferred with Major Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, and Gen. George Marshall, chief of staff, concerning the proportionate numbers of Negro and white men called into service from this state.

Actual figures as to the number of Negroes to be called in July cannot be released, General Springs said, since all statistics on quotas and calls on a state-wide basis are considered military secrets.

Previous Figures

According to figures released at state selective service headquarters several days ago, approximatcly 32 per cent of all men inducted into the armed forces from South Carolina since the selective service system was placed in operation on October 16, 1940, have been Negroes. The proportion of white and colored registrants in the state is 68 per cent white and 42 per cent Negro.

General Springs hailed Senator Maybank's announcement as a further step toward equalizing the burden of service and sacrifice among the white and Negro populations of the state.

"Both Senator Maybank and myself have always thought that the Negroes should furnish their proportionate number of men in the armed forces," General Springs said. "To drain the state of its white population of young men and leave the Negroes is obviously unfair to both races.

All requisitions for men for the armed forces emanate in the war department and are relayed to the various states by national selective service headquarters.

SCOTLANDVILLE, La.—(ANP) President Felton G. Clark announced this week that the War Department had designated Southern university as one of the pre-induction training centers for the duration.

By this appointment, male students of Southern no longer need fear the call to arms unless a dire emergency arises as they will receive the preliminary training while going to college that they ordinarily would get the first few months in camp.

Presdent Clark pointed out that the young men previously reluctant about entering college this fall because of the prospects of being inducted into the armed forces will be permitted to continue their collegiate education under the new set-up.

WHITE AND NEGRO SOLDIERS

At hand is a copy of the two volume report of the hearings before the Subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives of the Seventy-Seventh Congress and in volume two there are on pages 1063-64-65-66-67, an interesting bit of testimony on the regulations of the Selective Service System Regarding Deferment of Colored Persons.

The testimony was tied in with investigations of enrollees in CCC camps.

Major Keesling, of the Army, appearing before the committee, was asked what was the ratio of colored selectees to white. His answer was that the Negro population of the country amounted to 10.63 per cent of the total and that the ratio was therefore about ten to one. This would mean that for every nine white soldiers called, one colored man was to be called.

His attention was directed to the fact that this figure of a little over ten per cent was for the whole country whereas in the Southern States the white and colored populations were just about fifty-fifty. So if the ten per cent rule were followed in the South, fewer colored persons would be called and this would not be fair. The chairman said that in his home town of Saluda he had heard considerable complaint about the great number of whites who have been called into service and the very small number of colored.

Major Keesling asked for time to investigate the situation more closely and in a letter, also made a part of the record, he said in States where the white and colored populations were about the same or in any other ratio than that of ten to one for the whole country that the War Department had taken notice of that fact and called for white and colored selectees on whatever that ratio was.

And this is the fair and proper thing to do.

However, up to a short time ago, the ratio in South Carolina was reported in newspaper stories as being about three whites to one colored although the population is very nearly the same. The whites are slightly in the majority. It has been alleged in other Southern States that the actual ratio in these States was not being observed in the calls for men. A greater percentage of colored selectees than white have been rejected for various reasons.

Tells Court His Allegiance Pledged To 'Islam'; Not U.S.

WASHINGTON — Benjamin Mitchell, known as Benjamin Elijah X among local Moslems, appeared before United States Commissioner Needham C. Turnage Saturday and answered questions concerning his failure to register for Selective Service, with staunch declarations that he had "registered with Islam" and therefore was not amenable to the laws of the land in which he was born 40 years ago, at Winchester, Ark.

Mitchell was one of two Negroes who were booked last Saturday by the Federal Bureau of Investigation for violating the Selective Service Act.

Clad in a neat brown jacket and tan trousers, the small, bespectacled prophet was not nearly so impressive as Prophet Elijah Mohammed Rassoull who wore a flowing white robe and fancy headdress when arraigned on a similar charge last month.

He was every bit as steadfast as the Prophet, however, and though he had a few shaky moments when Turnage sought to pin him down on some pointed question as to his readings in Mohammedan theology, he finally came with an answer.

Came from Chicago

"We don't get our teachings from literature," he said "We get it from Allah's apostle — the word of Islam, which means 'Peace'."

"Allah's apostle in these parts, Benjamin continued, is the aforesaid Prophet Elijah Mohammed Rassoull, whose more earthly name is Gulam Gogan, and who came here from Chicago.

The prophet languished in the District jail for seven weeks before his wife, Mrs. Clara Mohammed bailed him out with $5,000 — most of which was in $1 bills — which she told reporters was obtained by passing the hat among the faithful.

Benjamin Elijah denied with some fervor, however, that he belonged to a religious "cult," insisting upon the unadorned term, "religion." He also said, in reply to Turnage's question, that he still would refuse to register if the opportunity were offered.

Bail Set at $2,000

"I registered with Islam back in 1938," he maintained, "and I am required by the Nation of Islam not to register with anyother nation."

Turnage set bail of $2,000 both for Benjamin Elijah and William Maurice Fagin, 22, a native of Washington and dubbed "William X" by fellow followers of Islam (each Moslem of the order, it seems, appends "X" to the name given him.), and ordered them held for action of the grand jury. Benjamin Elijah said he was a carpenter employed by the Public Buildings Administration, while William X said he was a sign painter.

FBI men said the latter is brother-in-law of John Mills, who already is serving a term of from one to three years for failing to register under the Selective Service Act.

Only 7 Negroes Out Of 36 Sent Accepted By Army

Only seven negroes out of 36 sent for army induction in the last ten days were accepted for military service, records to the draft office today indicated.

Of the eight sent on July 21, only a single registrants was inducted and the seven others rejected while in the group leaving last Sunday, six were accepted and 29 were rejected.

Illiteracy was the main reason slated on the rejection although quite a few were returned for flat feet which eliminated them for military service.

SAME OLD STORY:

Okay To Be An Enlisted Man But Don't Try To Be An Officer

JAN 17 1942

WASHINGTON, (ANP)—"I received a disappointing rebuff today. About four weeks ago, applications were taken for the next session of the officers candidate school, which starts in January. I applied with about 15 other Negroes. Ten of our applications were accepted—the minimum qualifications was a grade of 110 on the army intelligence test. I was safe with 126.

"Two of us, another fellow and I, survived the first interview and took the physical examination. A rating scale was filled out for us by the company commander. High blood pressure disqualified the other follow. I went to the final board interview last week. Only simple routine questions and questions of opinion were asked.

"Today my application, physical report and rating sheets were returned with a form showing reason for rejection. The form indicated three possible means of disqualification: (1) not sufficiently recommended by commanding officer; (2) response to interrogation applicable to leadership and practicability unsatisfactory; (3) military bearing and appearance unsatisfactory.

"They check number 2 against me. My company commander gave me the highest recommendation a man can get, and my military bearing, etc., was good. It is abviously because of not wanting a Negro in the officers' candidate school. They have not had any in the past. My company commander practically said so himself today when he gave me the report."

This is an extract from a letter from a disappointed Negro who thought he had a good chance of becoming an officer through the present methods of infiltrating officers into the army from the ranks.

I UNUSUAL POST

The outfit to which he was assigned was not an ordinary type of military unit, but one of the higher branches to which he had been assigned because of his high rating in intelligence tests.

The utter despair of thousands of Negro youths is summed up in this letter, which would probably never reach the public had it not been for a sympathetic person interested in the welfare of such young men. JAN 17 1942

Hundreds of young men are receiving the same treatment, it is said, and in one camp, where they are admitting Negro youths to the officer candidate schools, the proportion is ridiculous. In the camp tself, there are about 4,000 Negro troops to 18,00 whites, or about 4 whites to 1 Negro. In the officers candidate school, the ratio is 150 to 1, since there are 300 whites and two Negroes in the school.

Two Negroes In Wrong Camps— And They'll Stay

Birmingham Post
Birmingham, Ala.

By United Press.

ELGIN FIELD, Cal., Jan. 20.—Two Negro soldiers who served at wrong camps for six months are going to remain at those posts with official approval, Army authorities said here today.

JAN 20 1942

When one of the soldiers applied for Government insurance, he discovered he should be at Fort Bragg, N. C., and his cousin there should be at Eglin Field. Due to a similarity of names, the two recruits had been given the other's service record.

JAN 20 1942

Willie Lee Stallsworth of Monroe, Ala., will remain here while Willie Frank Stallsworth, of Atmore, Ala., will stay at Bragg. Army authorities have decided it is easier to exchange their service records.

7,507 Alabama Draftees Failed Physical Tests

JAN 9 1942

Re-Check Shows More Favorable Percentage Fit To Serve

Physical defects caused the rejection for general military service of approximately 37 per cent of the 20,333 Alabamians examined between Oct. 1, 1940 and Sept. 30, 1941, by physicians on the staffs of local Selective Service boards, according to a tabulation prepared by the State Selective Service headquarters for the State Department of Health and made public Thursday by the State Health Department.

Of the 7,507 persons prevented by their physical condition from qualifying for general military service, 3,548, or 17.45 per cent of all those examined, were found to be suffering from physical defects which did not prevent them from being available for what the military authorities called "limited military service." Thus those barred by their physical condition from any form of military service numbered only 3,959, or 19.47 per cent of the 20,333 examined.

In making public these totals and percentages, the State Department of Health pointed out that this latest tabulation indicated a better physical condition among selectees than that indicated by a tabulation prepared in February of last year, which showed that approximately 40 per cent of the 3,520 selectees examined up to that time had been disqualified because of physical defects from general military service and approximately 24 per cent had been found unavailable because of their physical condition for any form of military service.

Colored Mobilians To Purchase Bonds

Mobile's colored population, which consists of about 30,000 persons, will be called on to buy defense stamps and bonds when Dean William H. Pickens, appointed by President Roosevelt to promote sales of stamps and bonds among the nation's colored population, appears her Sunday, January 25.

Pickens will deliver an address at the State Street Methodist Church, State and Lawrence Streets, at 3 o'clock. The appearance will be sponsored by B. F. Baker, principal of the Mobile Training School.

Colored schools, churches and other organizations already have pledged efforts to buy stamps and bonds during Picken's presence in the city and throughout the drive. Several organizations are reported to have pledged to buy as much as $1,000 worth of bonds.

A parade featuring the bands of the Mobile Training School, Dunbar High School, Heart of Mary, Owens and the NYA will move through the city and to the State Street Church when Pickens appears here. The procession will be reviewed by Pickens and officials of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The Mobile public, both white and colored, is invited to hear Pickens' address.

Our Negroes Are Responding

FOR years we have been reading about Hitler and Goebbels propaganda to the effect that the Nazis figured upon overthrowing democracy in the United States through an "inside job." It was broadly hinted that the Nazis would be able to incite the negroes of America to help in this maneuver.

That Nazi theory has been given the lie in many ways. It has been proved wholly false right here in Tuscaloosa.

Many negro volunteers have gone from this community under the Selective Service Act. Many have volunteered for service in the Navy.

But this patriotism on the part of our negro population is not confined to the men of military age. It applies to all ages and both sexes.

Proof enough of this fact is shown in our negro city schools.

Central School on Ninth Street was the very first in all our county to complete a Yard of Dimes, totalling $5.10, for the National Infantile Paralysis Foundation. Central School has also given $49 to the Red Cross War Relief Fund, in addition to $29.50 subscribed in the Red Cross Roll Call of last November. Central School children have collected and sold waste paper to the tune of $20.20 to purchase a Defense Bond.

In many cases negro school teachers gave a full day's pay to the Red Cross War Relief Fund. In one specific case a negro teacher made her contribution when she had no coal at her home, and no other cash to pay for coal.

Other negro schools in our community have completed their Red Cross Relief Fund canvasses. Industrial High totaled $26.48, 20th Street contributed $19.39, Castle Hill gave $10.64, Southside (a one-room school) sent in $4.58 and Kaulton (another one-room school) totaled $7.85.

These gifts of money represented both patriotism and sacrifice.

Children in our white schools are doing the same thing. They are all fired with patriotic zeal, with the willingness to serve in every possible way that they can.

We adults, some of whom are sitting back with the "let George win this war" attitude, could learn a lot from our children.

VOTERS SWARM TO PRECINCTS FOR REGISTRY

Heaviest Totals Are Reported From 'Boss-Controlled' Districts of City

Unofficial reports last night indicated that thousands of voters had visited their voting precincts yesterday, the opening day of the three-day supplemental registration, to qualify for the March 5 county democratic primary and that the registration was heaviest in the so-called "boss controlled" precincts where Negroes accounted for a large share of the registration totals.

The registration will end Friday night at 9 o'clock. The books will be open in all sixty precincts of the county from 8 a.m. to 9 p.m. today and tomorrow.

Both organizations supporting the two candidates for county judge were in full swing yesterday bringing voters to be qualified. That their work was accounting for much of the heaving registration is not disputed in any quarter.

Many Negroes Register

There are indications that the Negro voters expect the "bars" to be let down in the democratic primary as they swarmed to their voting places, particularly in the controlled wards, to register. Prominent among the "colored" workers at the registration yesterday was Walter Robinson, republican committeeman from the Fourth ward. Robinson presided at a Negro rally several days ago held in the interest of the candidacy of Wiley O. Couch, candidate for county judge, and his interest in the registration yesterday presumably was in favor of Couch. The other candidate for county judge, the incumbent, Judge Will Cummings, also had colored workers busy yesterday bringing their followers to register.

The unusually heavy registration in the so-called "boss controled" precincts was stimulated to some extent, at least, by the attacks which E. B. Baker, candidate for district attorney general, has made upon what he termed "racketeers and gamblers." Several of the men identified with gambling activities in Chattanooga were seen yesterday around places of registration. Bill Grossman, who operates on the west side, was busy in both the Third and Fourth wards yesterday where registering was heavy. In the Fourth ward when the books closed last night a total of 1,050 certificates were outstanding. Practically all of these certificates were issued yesterday as the registration was light last August.

Robinson was busy throughout the day and when a photographer visited the precinct yesterday afternoon he kept a post between himself and the cameraman.

In the Fifth ward, where voting is usually "one-sided," a total of 482 had registered during the day. Couch is strong in that precinct also as he is being supported by Ace Baker and W. A. ("Piggy") Nolan, veteran democratic leaders in the Fifth. Likewise, the registration was reported to be heavy in the Eighth ward and in the Second, usually considered controled wards.

In other precincts the interest was not found to be lagging. Literally, a fleet of automobiles rolled out into service yesterday morning to gather up voters and get them qualified. They were manned by ward workers of the respective candidates. In campaign headquarters telephones were kept busy throughout the day and even in the various precincts, workers were busy at their telephones contacting their friends.

The effort being put behind the current supplemental registration is tremendous. The number engaged in this work without a doubt approaches the 1,000 mark, or may even exceed it. Rarely has such organization activity been seen.

No poll tax receipts are required and Negroes may be permitted to participate in the March 5 primary. This increases the interest and, therefore, adds to the total. By Friday night, when the books are closed, as many as 20,000 may have been registered.

39,752 FIGURE S[illegible] FOR REGISTRATION

Certificates Issued in 3-Day Supplemental Bring Total to 49,291 in County

A total of 39,752 registration certificates were issued in the three-day supplemental registration held last week in Hamilton county's sixty precincts, bringing the grand total of outstanding certificates to 49,291, Secretary James A. Sherrill, of the Hamilton county election commission, announced yesterday.

All of the registration books had been received at the election commission's office yesterday, and from these Secretary Sherrill took the total. In the regular biennial registration held last August only 9,539 certificates were issued.

Until the current investigation of reports that persons were registered in several precincts under different names is completed, it will not be possible to estimate the number qualified to vote in the March 5 primary. However, all signs point to record-breaking voting then, and to a total which may even exceed the 30,000 mark.

Colored Activity High

Official figures on the registration show that activity was greater in colored precincts than in white precincts. In fact, the Fourth ward, usually a republican stronghold and predominantly colored, led all other precincts in the county. In this precinct there are a total of 1,956 registration certificates outstanding. The Thirteenth ward, Second precinct (East Lake) ran a close second with a total of 1,944. All but 388 of the 1,956 certificates were issued in the Fourth ward during the three-day supplemental registration last week, while in East Lake 484 of the 1,944 certificates were outstanding when the supplemental registration started.

The effort made to register colored voters last week is sharply reflected also in the Third ward, where the total of certificates outstanding is 1,229, with all but seventy-five issued last week. In both precincts of the Seventh ward, where Negro population is heavy, registering was unusually strong last week. In the first precinct of this ward there were only eighty-two certificates outstanding when the supplemental registration began, but when it ended the total was 1,033. In the Second precinct the total at the beginning was ninety-one and at the end 1,544.

The Fourth precinct of the Twelfth ward, which showed a total of 1,300, had only 168 certificates at the start. This precinct is more than 90 per cent colored.

In the Fifteenth ward (Brainerd), considered independent as compared to the Third, Fourth and other voting precincts that have heavy Negro populations, a total of 1,663 certificates were outstanding when the registration closed Friday night and all but 233 of these were issued last week.

Rural Precincts

In the rural precincts registering was unusually heavy at Eastdale, East Ridge, Red Bank and Soddy. In all of these precincts the totals passed the 1,000 mark, with Soddy having 1,227 and East Ridge only two less.

Induction Of 175,000 Is Army's Goal

FEB 14 1942

WASHINGTON, D. C.—During the current year the War Department and Selective Service plans contemplate the induction of approximately 175,000 Negroes.

This is based upon the overall increase in the Army and the percentage of Negro to white registrants.

Due to the present existing shortage in housing facilities it is probable that this increase will be distributed rather lightly in the early months of the year, but will increase materially during the late spring, when construction projects will have been completed.

The War Department plans to distribute Negroes to the various units of the arms and services.

One additional Negro Division is to be organized.

Tobias And Jones Draw Out Capsules In Army Lottery

MAR 27 1942

WASHINGTON, D. C. (ANP) —The third lottery drawing, the only one ever held during war times in the United States, saw Dr. Channing H. Tobias, national officer of the YMCA and member of the President's advisory committee on Selective Service, draw capsule 3340 from the huge goldfish bowl which has served on so many similar occasions, while Dr. T. Edward Jones, holder of the Distinguished Service Cross and director of Freedmen's Hospital, representing the colored veterans of the World War, drew number 1817, from the same bowl in the exercises held last Tuesday afternoon.

Gen. Hershey and the Secretary were present while the two colored leaders were blindfolded and honored by the department.

'He' Is A She, So The Draft Board Blushes

By United Press.

BELZONI, Miss., March 30.—The Humphreys County Local Draft Board was embarrassed today after it had called Willie Collins for military service, for Willie is a woman.

The Negro registered in the first draft in Oct. 1940, and twice had been called for examination by the local board.

MAR 30 1942

Willie failed to show up, but later reported to the local board at Madisonville, Ky., where a medical officer discovered "he" was a woman.

Willie is 28, weighs 125 pounds, and was employed on the plantation of Dr. J. D. Westmoreland about 10 miles from Belzoni. Willie's employer and neighbors always thought "she" was a man.

To Train 40 Negroes In Women's Army

MAY 31 1942

WASHINGTON, May 28 — (ANP)—Shortly after being sworn in as director of the newly formed women's auxiliary army corps, Mrs. Oveta Culp Hobby announced that 40 Negro women would be admitted to the training camp to established at Fort Des Moines, Ia., where the officers for the first 25,000 women in the corps will be trained. This step indicates an integration of the entire population in this aid to the army.

Negro leaders are expressing delight at this unexpected turn of affairs for they were beginning to believe that the WAAC was to be a "lily-white" organization.

It is hoped that a racially proportionate number of the women in this new adjunct to the army will be Negroes, with opportunities given them similar to those given other women. Many posts are to be filled by these women, to relieve men for actual combat duty. Clerical post; jobs with air raid listening posts and similar duties for which women are qualified are all a part of the extensive program.

From the war department comes the announcement that the enlistments or the training period at Des Moines are open to "citizens of the United States, between the ages of 21 and 45. They may be married or single. They must have had at least a high school education, be in good health and of excellent character."

All applications must be sent to the recruiting office of the army in the area nearest your home. The women whose applications are satisfactory will be notified as to the time and place of examinations. The applications of those who pass these preliminary tests will be sent on to the proper corps area, where they will be examined and sifted by a recruit officer and two women as assistants.

The pay is as follows: director, $3,000 a year plus subsistence allowance of 60 cents a day and $100 a month quarters allowance. The assistant directors will receive $2400 a year, plus the same subsistence allowance and a quarters allowance of $80. First officer: $166.67 per month, plus allowance of $40 per month for quarters and 60 cents a day for subsistence; second officer, $131.25 per month plus the same food and quarters' allowance; and third officer, $125 per month plus the allowances.

In the non-commissioned grades, auxiliaries may hold the rank of first leader at $75 per month and junior leader at $54 per month. An auxiliary will receive $21 per month for the first four months and $30 per month thereafter. They may also be graded as first class specialist with $15 per month in addition to base pay; second class specialist $10 per month in addition to base pay or third class specialist, $5 per month in addition to base pay.

Every member of the WAAC will wear the appropriate uniform, insignia and accessories supplied by the government. The term of service is for one year and may be extended by the secretary of war for the duration of the war and for not more than six months thereafter.

The signal corps of the U. S. Army has already started enrolling women and training them in certain phases of its work which can be handled by women, taking time by the foreclock and getting the jump on the WAAC.

Opportunities for Specialists In Army to Men Over Draft Age

JUN 12 1942

BY ALVIN E. WHITE

WASHINGTON. — (ANP) — "Colored applicants will receive the same consideration in the army specialist corps as any other applicants," said Sam Boyd, assistant to Dwight Davis, director of the army specialist corps.

Designed to supplement and furnish the army with skilled workers, technicians and professional men who are not eligible for active military service, the corps offers opportunities in many fields for qualified men over the draft age.

All too few Negroes have taken advantages of this opportunity to serve the country and at the same time better their own conditions, officials identified with various departments believe.

Established by Executive Order 9078 as of February 26, the corps is a branch of the war department, under the supervision and direction of the secretary of war.

It will supply all branches of the army and other agencies of the war department with professional, scientific, technical and administrative personnel.

The corps is open to all citizens of the United States whose education, training, experience and general fitness to fill the positions will be the basis for selection. Physical qualifications are secondary to the ability to perform the designated tasks.

Members of the corps are subject to assignment for duty with the army in this country and in the theaters of operation. Their post of duty to be determined by the commanding officer of the organization to which they are assigned.

Appointments to the corps will be made for the duration and six months thereafter, with appointments for a lesser period made at the discretion of the director general.

There will be two classes of personnel who will have relative rank with officers and enlisted men in the army. They are to be known as officers and specialists. In other words, their titles will be the same as those for corresponding rank in the army up to that of colonel.

The members of the corps will wear a uniform practically the same as that of officers and enlisted men of the army. Both uniforms and insignia will be distinctive so that members of the corps will be readily recognized as such. The rate of pay is based upon the Civil Service Classification act and will, in general, be comparable to that in use for similar grades in the army.

This civilian corps will fill a gap in the military service fast growing in size. But these men will be commissioned on enlisted only as the army calls for them or indicates a need for trained men of a certain type. Applications now being received are being filed away carefully awaiting further developments in the plans. When the corps is completely organized, it will have at its finger tips complete information and records on men of every conceivable type of work, from cobblers and shoemakers to technicians and administrators of the highest type.

Thus far, few Negroes have made application, and these have been directed to Judge Hastie's office. All applications for consideration should be directed to the army specialist corps, where they will receive proper attention.

However, on the application blank, in direct opposition to Presidential instructions and the new Civil Service regulations, there is a distinct breach in that it specifically asks: "Race: White—Negro—Indian—Other (Specify.)

WHITE INDUCTEES DOUBLE NEGROES

Race Patriotic, But Illiteracy Cuts Rate, Skelton Says

Lieut. Colonel J. H. Skelton Jr., man power chief of Georgian Selective Service, declared Saturday that Army inductions in the state had averaged two whites to one Negro since the start of the draft.

"The War Department is calling upon Georgia for selectees in the same proportion of whites to Negroes that was revealed by the draft registration," Colonel Skelton added.

The state official explaind, however, that the ratio of actual inductions was not in the same exact proportion as the assigned quotas because rejections of Negroes have been about 50 per cent higher.

This, he added, was principally because of greater illiteracy among Negroes with physical rejections also cutting down the total.

"There is no problem regarding Negro service in Georgia," Colonel Skelton asserted, "the average of inductions has been two to one. The Negroes are very patriotic and many are volunteering. I don't think a local board in the state has any real problem in this connection."

He said the proportion of calls between Negroes and whites varied greatly from one board to another, however, because some boards have no Negroes registered.

Previously, congressional complaints had been reported in Washington that the proportion of Negroes and whites inducted was averaging 10 to one.

Springs Says 32% of SC's Draftees Negro

A total of approximately 32 per cent of South Carolinians inducted into the army under the Selective Service system since its inauguration on October 16, 1940, have been Negroes, according to official figures as of April 30 released yesterday at state Selective Service headquarters.

Brig. Gen. Holmes B. Springs, state Selective Service director, in releasing the figures, said that the population ratio of Negroes to whites in the state was approximately 42 per cent Negro and 58 per cent white, according to draft registrations so far.

tional standards, approximately 32 per cent were Negroes, while approximately 22 per cent were white.

Concerning the number of members of both races called by the armed forces for training and service, General Springs said that approximately 36 per cent were Negroes and approximately 64 per cent white.

Actual figures concerning the total number of Negroes or whites, or the total number of men inducted into the armed forces through the Selective Service system so far cannot be revealed, General Springs said, since such information is considered a military secret.

While the Selective Service system has nothing to do with the number of men to be called or the ration of Negroes to whites called, it has been the policy of the administration of the system in South Carolina and over the nation to be fair and impartial in the selection of the men for the armed forces. All requisitions for men are issued by the war department and are relayed to the various states.

"The requisition of Negroes for service in the armed forces has been almost in proportion to the number of Negro registrants," General Springs said. "There is a slight discrepancy due to the fact that there are not now, and have not been in the past, sufficient facilities to take care of a larger number of Negro troops.

"Selective Service headquarters in South Carolina has been advised, unofficially, that there could be expected an increase in the induction of Negro troops in the fall and that our calls for Negroes would be materially increased.

"It is unfortunate that due to the state's neglect in the past there is a great difference in the educational and physial standards of the Negroes as compared to the whites. For this reason, many more Negroes who have been sent to the induction station have been rejected for these two reasons than for the proportionate number of whites.

"We have been working for some time in an effort to have many of our illiterates, both white and Negro, accepted by the armed forces for training and it is my personal belief that some plan will be worked out in the near future whereby such illiterates might be accepted for special services and be given such education as is necessary to qualify them for combat service.

"It is our experience that the Negroes of South Carolina, like the white registrants, are more than anxious to do their part in the war effort. While we have had very few appeals from classifications of whites by local boards, we do not know of a single case wherein a Negro registrant appealed his classification on his own initiative. South Carolina stands out in the spirit of patriotism of both its white and Negro citizens."

INCREASE IN NEGRO TROOPS EXPECTED

More Will Be Called in This State by Fall, General Springs Says

Columbia, June 4.—(AP): Predicting an increase this fall in the induction of South Carolina negroes, Selective Service Director Holmes B. Springs said today the state was now calling negroes for the army at the rate of nine to every sixteen whites, compared with a national ratio of one negro to ten whites.

"Selective service headquarters in South Carolina has been advised, unofficially, that there could be expected an increase in the induction of negro troops in the fall," Springs said. "Approximately 36 per cent of all men called from this state have been negroes."

A higher percentage of negroes than whites has been dropped by the wayside, however. Springs said 32 per cent of negroes called had not been inducted due to physical or educational disqualifications. The army rejected approximately 22 per cent of the white men.

The result has been that 32 per cent of the inductees from South Carolina have been negroes and 68 per cent whites.

"The requisition by the war department of negroes for service in the armed forces has been almost in proportion to the number of negro registrants," Springs asserted. The registration ratio is approximately 42 per cent negro to 58 per cent white.

"It is unfortunate," Springs commented, "that due to the state's neglect in the past there is a great difference in the educational and physical standards of the negroes as compared with the whites. For this reason, many more negroes . . . have been rejected (proportionately).

"We have been working for . . . some plan . . . whereby such illiterates might be accepted for special services and be given such education as is necessary to qualify them for combat service.

"It is our experience that the negroes of South Carolina, like the white registrants, are more than anxious to do their part . . ."

MORE NEGROES GO INTO DRAFT

Being Called At Rate Of Nine to 16 Whites In This State

Columbia, June 5.—Predicting an increase this fall in the induction of South Carolina negroes, Selective Service Director Holmes B. Springs said today the state was now calling negroes for the Army at the rate of nine to every 16 whites, compared with a national ratio of one negro to 10 whites.

"Selective Service headquarters in South Carolina has been advised, unofficially, that there could be expected an increase in the induction of negro troops in the fall," Springs said. "Approximately 36 per cent of all men called from this state have been negroes."

A higher percentage of negroes than whites has been dropped by the wayside, however, Springs said 32 per cent of negroes called had not been inducted due to physical or educational disqualifications. The Army rejected approximately 22 per cent of the white men.

The result has been that 32 per cent of the inductees from South Carolina have been negroes and 68 per cent whites.

"The requisition by the War department of negroes for service in the armed forces has been almost in proportion to the number of negro residents," Springs asserted. The registration ratio is approximately 42 per cent negro to 58 per cent white.

"It is unfortunate," Springs commented, "that due to the state's neglect in the past there is a great difference in the educational and physical standards of the negroes as compared with the whites. For this reason, many more negroes have been rejected (proportionately).

"We have been working for some plan whereby such illiterates might be accepted for special services and be given such education as is necessary to qualify them for combat service.

"It is our experience that the negroes of South Carolina, like the white registrants, are more than anxious to do their part."

Negro Girl, 10, Passes Exams for Air Raid Warden

TALLAHASSEE, June 13.—(A.P.)—Forty Florida Negroes—preachers, teachers, agricultural agents and artisans and a 10-year-old girl—received certificates as qualified instructors in air raid protection at the state defense council's course here at Florida A. and M. college for Negroes.

Dr. Harold Richards, state defense council official and director of the course, paused in his presentation of candidates to Maj.-Gen. Albert H. Blanding, chief of the state air raid protection services, when he reached the name of Joyce Marshall, 10, of Tallahassee.

"When little Joyce came to the opening class of the course," Dr. Richards commented, "we thought she had just wandered in.

"But she kept coming, attended every lecture and read the literature. When a trial test of true false questions was given she missed only three of 20 and in the comprehensive examination on war gasses, demolition, decontamination, incendiary bomb handling and other technical defense problems, she passed with a grade well up in the list.

"She is entitled to an instructor's certificate but it will be marked with an explanation that, because of her extreme youthfulness, she should teach classes of appropriate youthful levels."

White, Negro Soldier Ratio Called Unfair

WASHINGTON, June 4.—(AP)—Complaints of two southern congressmen have been lodged with a house subcommittee regarding the drafting of 10 white men to one Negro under the selective service law.

In testimony given in connection with the 1943 labor and federal security appropriation bill, both Representative Hare, Democrat South Carolina, chairman of the committee, and Representative Tarver, Democrat, Georgia, said the ratio is unfair to states that have a heavy Negro population.

Tarver said states which have almost a 50-50 ratio should not have to send 10 whites to every Negro, but he thought the ratio ought to be apportioned more equally.

Major Francis V. Keesling Jr., legislative officer of the selective service system, said that while the national ratio is 10 to one, adjustments were being made to conform as far as practicable with individual state populations.

CRASH OF TRAIN, TRUCK KILLS 3 NEGRO SOLDIERS

APR 2 - 1942

Three Negro soldiers were killed and three others were injured when a truck containing 12 Negro soldiers headed for guard duty at the Kellogg airport, near Camp Custer, Mich., was struck by the Maple Leaf train of the Grand Trunk railroad yesterday.

Those killed were Private William Cromwell, 24 years old, Louisa, Va., Private Eleck Mack Jr., 23, James Island, S. C., and Private Sidney Isadore, 28, Battle Creek, Mich.

Those injured and taken to the post hospital were Sergt. Hilliard Jones, Chicago; Private Amos Buell, 28, 5000 Calumet avenue, and Private Charles Roberson, 23, 431 East 50th street. Army authorities reported the railroad tracks are at the top of a hill and the driver did not see the train approaching. He was uninjured.

Bicycle Strikes Truck.

Walter Idt, 26, was killed when the racer bicycle he was riding smashed against the rear of a parked truck at Cicero avenue near Albion avenue, Lincolnwood. He was identified in the county morgue after a relative had seen a newspaper story concerning the accident.

Albert J. Behrendt, 48, 1639 North Kedvale avenue, a call clerk for the Chicago Relief administration office, 2614 West 25th place, died yesterday in the County hospital of injuries suffered Monday in a collision of two automobiles and a street car at Harrison street and Campbell avenue. Also injured were Willard Welch, 34, 724 North Central Park avenue, driver of the car in which Behrendt was riding, and Mrs. Anna Hodgins, 42, of 2453 Lexington street, a passenger on the street car. Both were taken to the County hospital.

APR 2 - 1942

Driver of Other Car.

William H. Rabe, 32, of 331 South Washtenaw avenue was the driver of the other car.

George Kondos, 80, of 4813 West Cermak road, died in the Loretto hospital yesterday of injuries suffered when he was struck by a car at Cicero avenue and Cermak road. Lido Pricucini, 16, of 1623 South 51st court, Cicero, was the driver.

Up to 4 p. m. yesterday 202 persons had been killed by automobiles in Cook county since Jan. 1. Of these, 161 were killed in Chicago where 5,015 were injured.

Black Eagle, Barred as Flier By Age, Enlists in Ground Army

APR 2 - 1942

New York

The Black Eagle came home today.

For 18 years Col. Hubert Fauntleroy Julian, the Black Eagle of Harlem, has been flying planes—after his own fashion—in all corners of the world. He has fought wars for a number of nations. He sailed for Finland and became a captain in the Finnish Air Force 13 days after the Russian-Finnish war ended, and he once crashed Haile Selassie's private airplane right at the feet of the Lion of Judah.

APR 2 - 1942

It has been a full life, but something has been missing. Col. Julian never has had the opportunity to fight for the United States. Now he has—as a buck private.

"Your humble servant," Col. Julian said today in his quarters at Harlem's elegant Hotel Theresa, "is going into the army as a buck private. Now—is that news?"

It was the first news of the Black Eagle's doing since last December, when he had been reported organizing a group of young Negroes to be known as the Suicide Squadron. He did not comment on the fate of the Suicide Squadron today, but he did reveal that he couldn't get into the U. S. Air Corps because of the age limit of 28.

APR 2 - 1942

Now, he reported, he has been put in Class 1-A in the draft—he gives his age as 35—but has enlisted, instead of waiting.

"My blood tests came back perfect, negative and excellent," he said.

NEGROES 40 PERCENT

Columbia, S. C., March 23rd.—South Carolina Negroes ordered to report for induction into the armed forces under the Selective Service act since the system was inaugurated in October, 1940, have numbered in almost exact proportion to the population differential, Brig. General Holmes B. Springs, state Selective Service director, said yesterday.

While the actual number of either white or Negro selectees is necessarily a military secret. General Springs revealed that approximately 60 per cent of the total number of selectees were white and 40 per cent were Negroes. This is in contrast to a population in the state made up of approximately 58 per cent white and 42 per cent Negro, according to the 1940 census.

Memphis Negro Selectees Given Gala Sendoff Parade

APR 17 1942

Several hundred negro selectees from Memphis marched along South Main and Beale yesterday afternoon in a gala sendoff parade arranged in their honor on the eve of their departure to Army camps.

Led by seven Second Army scout cars, the 20-minute parade formed at Booker T. Washington School, marched north on Lauderdale to Vance, west on Vance to Main, north to Beale, and wound up at Handy Park, where the selectees were given a farewell address by Mayor Chandler.

Old Glory floated near the head of the column, borne by a color guard composed of four members of American Legion Post No. 27, a negro organization.

Bands Follow Flag

Martial music from the drum and bugle corps of Booker T. Washington High School, led by a dozen majorettes clad in the gold and green school colors, preceded the ranks of the marching selectees. Next in line of march was the drum and bugle corps of Manassas High School, followed by more than 100 negro Boy Scouts. Booker T. Washington High School band brought up the rear.

Several thousand negroes assembled in Handy Park for the special ceremonies marking Memphis' farewell to the selectees. As chief speaker, Mayor Chandler told the prospective soldiers that they were about to contribute their share toward defending America.

"This great crowd," said the Mayor, "attests to the loyalty of the colored people of Memphis."

He assured them of the full spiritual support of all those around them, adding that their contribution to the cause of democracy would bring honor to their race.

APR 17 1942

All except seven of the prospective soldiers will depart for Army induction centers Saturday, the remainder being scheduled to leave next week. Induction will follow successful completion of regulation physical examinations.

Negro Doctors Told To Enroll For Service

APR 17 1942

Will Treat Big Number of Men Now Deferred

NORFOLK, Va.—(S N S)—An organized effort to get colored physicians in this county registered with the Selective Service System so that they might be available for designation by the service to the job of rehabilitating the nation's deferred Army selectees got underway recently with the office of Dr. John T. Givens, executive secretary of the National Medical Association cooperating.

Dr. Givens issued a statement here last week calling for all physicians who could serve in the physical rehabilitation plan to get in touch with their local and state medical associations.

At the same time, the Norfolk physician sent out letters to the secretaries of the societies asking them to cooperate in the campaign to improve the health standards of rejected selectees.

Lt. Col C. G. Parker, Jr., deputy director of the Selective Service System, has asked the NMA to assist in developing a nucleus of qualified physicians, dentists and facilities for this work.

All of the doctors who are connected with the established medical societies were urged to list themselves as available for service through their local secretaries or through Major Campbell C. Johnson, Selective Service office, Washington, D. C.

Nation's First Negro Soldier Served In Virginia Militia

The first Negro soldier in this country appeared in the Virginia militia of 1652, according to "A Brief Consideration of the American Negro Soldier," published recently by the Virginia Works Projects Administration.

From 1652 on, the Negro has played a large part in the military affairs of the nation, says the bulletin, written by Samuel A. Madden, WPA supervisor of Negro adult education in Virginia and issued by the education and recreation department of the Virginia WPA

In the War of 1812, Negro sailors comprised one-sixth of the naval forces of the United States. John Johnson, struck in the hip by a 24-pounder that tore away the lower part of his body, exclaimed, "Fire away! no haul the colors down!"

During the War Between the States the WPA publication tells how Negro pilots and stewards of south Southern boats brought their ships and cargo north. The best known was Robert Smalls, Negro pilot of the Confederate steamship, "Planter," who took advantage of the temporary shore leave of the chief officers to steer the boat to the Union lines and present it to the Federal Government.

Mr. Madden tells of Crispus Attucks, who died in the Boston Massacre; of Lemuel Hayes, one of the Massachusetts Minute men, and of the feats of Salem Poore and Austin Dabney, two of the 4,000 Negro soldiers who served in the Continental Army during the American Revolution

Nearly 400,000 Negroes served in the Army during the first World War, half of them reaching France. One hundred and ninety-four officers and men received various decorations.

"My blood tests," he reported to the press, "came back perfect, negative, and excellent."

President Roosevelt's bodyguard of the past five years, Thomas J. Qualters, 37, volunteered for the Army Air Corps, got the rank of captain and was assigned to Intelligence. He leaves his post as bodyguard to go on active duty May 1. "I was too young for the last war," he explained to his boss, "and I wouldn't like to pass this one up."

Apparently recovered from a long illness that had forced him out of action with the British, 52-year-old Colonel Kermit Roosevelt, son of the late "Teddy," left Los Angeles for San Francisco to see about getting into the U.S. Army.

Tyrone Power applied for enlistment in the Naval Reserve, passed his physical exam. The Navy said he would probably be made a chief petty officer assigned to morale and recreation. He gets a few months' grace to finish his picture-making.

SUGGESTS CONFERENCES ON RACE RELATIONS

To the Editor of The Record:

The white citizens of South Carolina are alarmed because of the great discrimination between the number of Negroes and whites who have been inducted into the army. It is reported that although the Negro population of South Carolina is almost 50 per cent of the total, to date only 6,000 Negroes have been inducted into service as compared with forty-one thousand whites. A recent release from Brig. Gen. Holmes Springs, states that 40 per cent of those selected from the state were Negroes. However, 31 per cent of the Negro selectees were rejected as compared with 19 per cent of the whites. Illiteracy was listed as the greatest factor in causing rejection of both whites and Negroes. We suspect that health was a close second. Thus South Carolina is hindered in contributing its full share to national defense. The blame for this state of affairs stands out in bold relief. Those who have shaped the educational and economic policies of the State must shoulder the responsibility. This is no discredit to the Negro. From Bunker Hill to Pearl Harbor he has stood ready to give the last measure of devotion. If there is some question now as to his loyalty (and there is), this too can be easily explained. The Columbia State on January 30 in an editorial, reports that "at least two thousand South Carolina Negroes are trying eagerly to get into the army, but there is no place for them." The Negro even at this eleventh hour is fighting for the right to fight.

Many Negroes were rejected because they were not fourth grade students. This suggests a starting point for South Carolina. "A Guide to the Palmetto State," prepared by the Writers of the Work Project Administration, states that "South Carolina has the greatest proportion of illiterate Negroes in America." This flagrant fact causes the proud South Carolinian to hang his head in shame. South Carolina's neglect of its more than 800,000 Negroes constitutes a millstone about its neck. There is irony in the fact that sons of those who have neglected the Negro must now give their lives in this titantic conflict. Will South Carolina right this wrong? Will South Carolina provide adequate schools and well-prepared and well paid teachers for the Negroes? To go all out for this and for other much needed reforms will be a great boon to morale building. In the interest of national morale it is hoped that South Carolina will make a forward step in this direction. Bishop A. T. Shaw of the Methodist church, at a conference called by Archibald McLeish, director of the Office of Facts and Figures said, "we cannot flim-flam our people into loyalty any more." In short, morale among this underprivileged minority cannot be artificially stimulated. Band playing and flag waving will not do it. It is too much to ask the Negro to forego his struggle for democracy at home for the "duration," while he fights to establish it abroad. In fact, the most convincing argument that we are sincere in our attempts to establish democracy abroad is to begin such an experiment at home. Just as I am about to conclude this article the postman brought the March issue of "Southern Frontier" published by the Commission on Inter-racial Cooperation. I noted carefully the title of the leading editorial, "We Need Clean Hands to Win this War." The editorial begins by saying, "Unless enough white leaders of all organized groups get together with responsible Negro leaders and plan a joint strategy to attain harmoniously the four freedoms for Negro Americans and do this speedily, "professional agitators" are going to have a field day stirring up violence in the United States and giving aid and comfort to the enemy." We therefore suggest that each county call a fact finding conference to be attended by leaders from both groups. We suggest that representatives from these several county conferences be called to a statewide conference. The purpose of such a proposed conference would be two-fold: First, to modify the attitudes and policies of those in authority with respect to the Negro; second, to interpret the nature of the present emergency and the Negro's role in it.

Statewide Meetings Called Today To Study Defense

Fervent and patriotic Georgians, a million strong, will devote evening church services and special community mass-meetings today to learning how best to mold themselves into an effective statewide organization against the day of pressing war-time need.

About two-thirds of the meetings will be held in churches, State Defense Committee officials said yesterday, and the others in public auditoriums where ministerial scruples prevailed against yielding pulpits.

A strong religious atmosphere will be invoked, with accent upon the flag and the dire necessity to provide in advance for first-aid, rescue, fire-prevention and like emergency efforts. Tire rationing and the federal automobile ban will be dealt with.

Data Distributed.

In Atlanta final information was given ministers at a meeting at 2 o'clock yesterday. The state committee's complete outline for the services, with a model address containing all essential data, already had been distributed through the Christian Council.

Atlanta's Negro churches will participate fully in the program, it was announced by Ben Davis, county Negro defense leader, after conferring with their pastors. There will be some noon meetings, but the majority will be held at the usual evening hour.

In many instances throughout Georgia the speakers will be Army officers, veterans or members of bar associations.

Robert B. Troutman, chairman of the state defense committee, said every effort was being made to eliminate confusion which necessarily follows launching of a national war effort, and added, that progress had been noted.

Place for All.

"We realize that the defense of a democracy cannot be deputized," he said, "but we also realize that through voluntary service there is a definite and necessary place for all."

Troutman said the four major types of volunteer jobs scheduled under civilian defense—air raid wardens, fire-fighters, auxiliary police and nurses' aides—offered service opportunities for millions.

He warned, however, as did others in the state defense setup, against overlapping of duties and activities with other organizations already in the field, especially the Red Cross.

Training volunteers as nurses' aides and for administering first aid, for example, is being handled by the Red Cross, which has assumed full responsibility for them. The Red Cross home services schedule also includes canteen corps work, motor corps, surgical dressings, sewing and knitting.

Public Health Training.

Home defense officials said that a second type of work, less publicized than the tasks involving air raid protection, fire-fighting, policing and first aid, involved public health training, reduction in the threat of epidemics, and the proper use of wholesome foods.

Third, there is opportunity for additional thousands to aid in bolstering the morale of the men in uniform, and of those workers in industry who have been uprooted from their homes and local environment.

And fourth, there are defense training courses, where through talks, discussions, study groups and practical application, a more co-operative attitude can be assured.

Fulton county's tire rationing organization was perfected yesterday by creating an additional district, the sixth, which will be headed by John H. Merritt and embrace the territory bounded by Marietta road, Marietta street, Whitehall street, ePters street, Campbellton road and the river. Temporary headquarters will be located at 648 Lee street, S. W.

Huddleston on Board.

Merritt's place on the first district board was taken by former Alderman Press Huddleston.

While organization will be perfected by tomorrow in most of Georgia's 159 counties, it was estimated by T. M. Forbes, state rationing officer, that failure to receive blank certificates from Washington may delay actual start of operations until the middle of the week.

Forbes conferred yesterday with L. L. Gravely, Rocky Mount, N. C., southeastern rationing officer, who found organization proceeding satisfactorily. Grabely was on an inspection tour of his territory.

Negroes Plan Campaign For Bonds, Stamps

On Wednesday night a meeting of Negroes was held at the Baptist church on Summers Hill called by Dr. W. R. Moore, in the interest of the purchase of War Stamps and Bonds. Mr. Paul F. Akin, chairman of the Bartow County committee, Mr. Joe Nelson and Mr. M. L. Fleetwood attended the meeting.

Dr. Moore called on J. S. Morgan, principal of the Negro schools, to state the object of the meeting. He made a good speech and emphasized the necessity of every boy sticking together in the one aim of defending the United States.

Mr. Nelson made a short talk and then inttroduced Mr. Akin who spoke as chairman of the committee. He then called on Mr. Fleetwood who went into detail about the matter of buying the War Stamps and War Bonds and the advantages and necessities there for. When he concluded, several in the audience assured the committee they intended buying Stamps and Bonds at once.

After the speaking it was decided by the colored people to select a special committee to aid in the sale of the Bonds and Stamps. Mr. Akin, as Chairman of the County Committee, was asked to appoint the following, which he did: W. R. Moore, Chairman of the Colored Committee; J. S. Morgan, in charge of sales to school children; Walter Johnson for the fourth ward; J. F. Anderson from the third ward; Rosa Dyer from the second ward; and Bradley Wyatt from the first ward.

Close co-operation was promised by this committee of colored people, it is believed the result will be the purchase of many Stamps and Bonds by the colored people of the community.

MEETING OF COLORED CIVILIAN DEFENSE GROUP HELD SUNDAY

Enthusiastic Meeting Held At Douglas High School Auditorium

The large crowd which attended the county-wide meeting for Civilian Defense at Douglas High School auditoriub yesterday afternoon went away high in their praise, better informed, and more enthusiastic on the Civilian Defense than ever before.

The ministers of the town promised one of the best programs to the public, and they truly carried out the promise.

Mr. I. Russell Griner, Thomas county chairman for Civilian Defen described in an impressive manner the Civilian Defense program. His explanations left no doubt in the minds of his audience the need for complete cooperation on the part of all.

The principle speaker for the occasion, Dr. Isaac Fisher, brought a message of patriotism, and loyalty that will long be remembered. Dr. Fisher pleaded with his people to offer their all to this great country of ours. He said that the constitution of the United States and the Bill of Rights offered the greatest hope of any written documents in the world. Dr. Fisher desccribed in masterful eloquence the part that the negroes have always played in every war this country has been engaged in. He said the negro's loyalty was unquestionable, and that he, the negro, had set an example for the world to follow in his loyalty ot his country and flag.

Dr. J. W. Holly, president of the Ga. Normal College of Albany and chairman for the negro Civilian Defense division of Georgia, spoke concerning the state set up. He was high in his praise of the Thomas county organiztion, and said it was the best he had seen and he was going to use it in the negro division as a model.

Harry J. Martin, chairman of the colored division for Thomas county pledged his untiring efforts to make his assignment one of the best in the state. He stated that the people thoughout the county were offering their full support to the program.

The music for the occasion under the direction of Mrs. Cecil Edwards was well rendered and in keeping with the occasion.

Rev. G. H, Kennedy, reporter for the Interdenominational Ministers Union and master of ceremony, presided.

The services of the Boy Scout troop under the direction of their master, Edward Smith, was highly appreciated.

A Times-Enterprise's photographer, Mr. McLeod, was present and took shots of the speaker platform and the audience.

The meeting will long be remembered as one of the most instructive and enjoyable ever held in Thomasville.

NEGROES PART IN DEFENSE OUTLINED

Number of Speakers on Program at Georgia State College.

Hundreds of negroes gathered in Meldrim Auditorium at the Georgia State College last night to hear several speakers outline the part they can play in civilian defense.

Mrs. Shelby Myrick, state chairman of Civilian Defense for Women, appeared as the opening speaker. She described a constructive program to be followed by the women of Georgia.

She said there is no place for complaints, and that men and women, regardless of race, creed or color, should get behind the government and win the war for the freedom of the world.

Serving as chairman of the meeting was Annie Clarke of Cordele, who declared that the colored women of the state "will respond 100 per cent.

"We mean to tour every county and go into the rural sections and touch those who have no knowledge of what is going on," she declared.

Other speakers included Cornelius King, assistant in the Farm Credit Administration, Washington; Dr. J. W. Holley, president of Georgia Normal College; B. F. Hubert, president of the college, and Shelby Myrick.

The new Tampa federal community center at 214 North Boulevard for men in the nation's armed forces will be dedicated Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock under arrangements completed yesterday by Richard H. Lyle, Birmingham, regional director of the Federal Security Agency, and Lester M. Marx, Atlanta, regional director of the Federal Works Agency division of defense public works.

The building here is one of 260 similar projects in the country of which 51 are nearing completion in the southeast. It cost $43,000 and will be used for recreation and entertainment of enlisted men.

Wilson, presentation of keys by Federal Works Agency to Federal Security Agency and thence to the USO, addresses by Mayor Chancey, Maj. Harold B. Hinton, representing Maj. Gen. Walter H. Frank, commander of the Third Air Force, and Doyle E. Carlton.

Plans for the building were prepared by M. Leo Elliott, architect, and the contractor was George T. Taylor.

Similar Center For Negroes

A similar center for Negro enlisted men at 710 Harrison street, costing $9200 for renovation of an existing building, will be dedicated Monday night with a program at which Carl D. Brorein will preside and for which entertainment was arranged by Nash Higgins. Ivo DeMinicis was architect for the project and the USO has been designated to operate it through the National Catholic Community Service Unit.

Negroes Show Spirit In Civilian Defense Rally

Approximately 800 Hear Local Leaders Speak Last Night

The rally meeting held Sunday evening at the First Baptist Church, colored, with approximately 800 present, proved conclusively that the negroes of LaGrange are ready to give their whole-hearted support of the Civilian Defense program, their presence at the meeting and their enthusiastic endorsement of the addresses by local leaders indicating their interest and support.

Quillian Speaks

Hubert T. Quillian, president of LaGrange College, delivered an inspiring address to the large group of negro citizens assembled last night to hear their white friends discuss what the negroes can do in the present emergency.

Mr. Quillian spoke of the privileges of citizenship in a nation that guarantees freedom and justice to all, of the spirit that must guide us in the present conflict if the conflict is to be won on the far-flung battle front and at home.

Health Emphasized

Dr. S. C. Rutland, Troup County Health officer who is serving as chairman of the Emergency Medical Services committee of the Troup County Civilian Defense Council, discussed the importance of health among the civilian population both in ordinary times and in times of emergency and urged the colored people of LaGrange and Troup County to enroll in First Aid classes which will be formed at an early date.

"Our goal," Dr. Rutland said, "is one person, preferably an adult, in every family, both white and colored, trained in First Aid."

Civilian Services

C. W. Coleman, chairman of the speakers committee of the Troup County Civilian Defense council, outlined the various services the civilian can render and concluded with a forceful appeal to his hearers to do their part in taking care of themselves.

"Our boys are fighting the enemy on our battle fronts," Mr. Coleman said, "and it's up to us to look after ourselves here at home."

Mr. Coleman continued his impressive talk by urging the negroes of the city and county to register, beginning today, Monday January 5, at 8:30 o'clock at the City Hall, and indicate the service they can render in case of an emergency.

Negroes To Register

Registration will be continued every day this week, through Friday, at the City Hall, beginning at 8:30 o'clock in the morning and continuing all day and until 10 o'clock at night.

E. L. Warner, principal of East Depot school, and chairman of the Negro Civilian Defense Committee of the Fourth Congressional District opened the meeting with a clear-cut discussion of the Civilian Defense program proposed for the negroes of the city and county.

The Rev. J. K. Satterwhite, vicar of St. Elizabeth's Episcopal church, presided at the meeting which was arranged by E. L. Warner, district chairman, and the Rev. L. W. Strickland, pastor of Warren Temple Methodist church, and chairman of the Troup County Negro Civilian Defense committee.

The meeting was jointly sponsored by the pastors of St. Elizabeth's Episcopal church and Warren Methodist church, the Rev. P. D. Hale, pastor of the First Baptist church, colored, and the Rev J. H. Hunter, pastor of the Shiloh Baptist church, colored.

NEGROES ARE LOYAL

While they are amusing, the answers of two Georgia negroes to questions concerning war service reveal the loyalty and simple earnestness of their race.

Tribune readers will recall the reply an Elberton, Ga., negro made when he received his registration papers. Unable to understand the rather technical document, he turned it over and wrote across the back: "I is reddy when you is."

Last week's Bainbridge Search-Light Reporter tells of a negro who was discussing the war with another black. "Is you ready to go to the war?" he was asked. "No, I ain't reddy, but I is ready to go, unready."

No finer spirit could be exhibited than that shown by these unlettered Georgia negroes.

Three Hundred Colored Assistants To Mrs. Charles S. Johnson To Work At Booths In City And County

47c

Registration for Civilian Defense during the week beginning next Monday, January 26 will take place throughout Nashville, and details of the registration have been issued by Frank W. Zeigler, who heads the division of information of the Nashville and Davidson County Defense Council.

JAN 23 1942

It is announced that registration centers will be opened in the business section, suburban areas and communities throughout the county each day from 8 o'clock in the morning until 9 o'clock at night. A total of 1,082 registrants will be required, of which 782 will be white and 300 colored. There will be separate registration places for white and colored registrants. The list of centers will be given later.

The colored centers will be staffed by Mrs. Charles S. Johnson, who is chairman of colored registration and will be manned at night by representatives of the local posts of the American Legion.

JAN 23 1942

The local Defense Council is more interested in securing the registration of competent and qualified persons who can give the time necessary rather than secure a large number of registrations from those not particularly fitted and who do not take the matter seriously. In other words, in this registration, no effort is being made to build up a high record of registrants.

"Those registering for Volunteer Civilian Defense duty are to "volunteer" in every sense of the word. There is no remuneration of any type in connection with any of these activities. Registration for Civilian Defense duty is not to be confused with registration for employment in defense work.

Many inquire as to the type of emergency anticipated, and want to know what they would be expected to do. We must call upon our imagination to visualize the type of emergency that might happen. Nashville is producing great quantities of military needs. There must be no interruption in this production regardless of fire, flood, tornado, epidemic or any type of disaster. No matter what befalls we must be organized to carry on with a maximum efficiency.

"While it is not desired to frighten anyone, it may be considered logical for either sabotage or air attacks to come into the Tennessee Valley area and seek to destroy war industries and electric power development facilities."

The Nashville and Davidson County Defense Council is sponsored by Mayor Thomas L. Cummings, Judge Lytton Hickman, co-chairman and Paul R. Jarrett, coordinator.

When persons register they will be informed of the many types of service they may render in an emergency.

Army Does Not Have Sufficient Facilities to Care For Colored Draftees in Segregated Units

THEY WANT TO BE DRAFTED

MAR 21 1942

COLUMBIA, S. C.—(ANP)—South Carolinians, white, have been much disturbed because of the great disparity between the number of Negroes and whites who have been inductd into the army. Although Negroes constitute almost half of the population of South Carolina, up to date there have been 41,000 white South Carolinians sent to the army and only 6,000 Negroes. The sentiment among white people who see the flower of their youth being drafted with the Negroes left behind, reached such a point that an appeal was made to Sen. Maybank to look into the matter.

Reports from Washington from Sen. Maybank who called upon the adjutant general's office to inquire why there were so few Negroes being drafted, were to the effect that the department said 17,500 South Carolina Negroes would be inducted during April. Maybank said further that there were 147,219 white boys registered and only 107,610 Negroes.

Colored observers point to two reasons for the disparity in numbers between the races. First, although 2,708 Negroes were placed in class 1-A recently, white boys had to be substituted because the army did not have enough facilities to care for the colored troops in the segregated units already set up. Second, a large number of colored boys have been unable to pass the literacy tests. South Carolina spends only $8 a year to educate her colored youth while she spends $24 per year for whites. The result is that white boys pass the literacy test with ease.

Sen. Maybank, while governor, made an honest effort to improve Negro educational facilities by coming out for equalization of pay for Negro and white teachers. The Ku Klux Klan lambasted him for his efforts. There is many a wry smile as the Kluxers' sons are inducted into service leaving their grinning black cousins behind.

Dr. Lee Heads Florida Defense

JAN 4 - 1942

TALLAHASSEE—(SNS) — While the Allied Nations gird for what will most likely be the most decisive and fateful year of the Great War around the earth—1942—Dr. J. R. E. Lee, president of the Florida A. and M. College, will be holding the responsible position of key man in Florida's scheme for Negro participation in the Allied effort for "all out" defense and war.

Already in service, the official notice of Dr. Lee's appointment to the most responsible position in the State's defense efforts was as follows:

"Under the direction of the State Defense Council, a statewide Negro Defense Council has been organized under the chairmanship of Dr. J. R. E. Lee, President of Florida A. and M. College. This State Advisory Committee on Negro Participation in defense serves as an auxiliary agency of the State Defense Council and functions in the same manner as the State Advisory Commission, in that it offers advice and counsel on affairs of particular interest to those it represents."

Dr. Lee and his committee are particularly fortunate in being called to serve under a State National Defense Council which is so broad that it publicly declares that "It is the sense of the State Defense Council of Florida that Negro citizens should be organized to and should participate actively in every phase of state and national defense in which their services would be useful."

Serving with President Lee and under his chairmanship of the Florida State Coordinating Committee on National Defense are twenty-nine of the most outstanding and substantial colored citizens of this State.

The activities which the State Council recommends for Negro Participation are those of the agriculture; civil protection, finance and budget; food, health and housing; home and community services; information, education and morale; labor and personnel; transportation and communication; and water supply and fire protection divisions. These include practically every activity of civilian national defense efforts.

In pursuit of his duties, President Lee has been vigorously pressing various duties falling to him under the direction of the State Defense Council, traveling to various points in the State and carrying the message of urgency in giving support to the war task before the country.

What Registrants Must Know

NEXT Saturday and the following Monday more than 5,000 men of Tuscaloosa County will register for possible selective military service. Plans for registration, announced Saturday by Probate Judge Chester Walker, are simple indeed. Schools in most rural communities will be used for registration, as will be the case in Northport also. In Tuscaloosa proper, a central point will be in the former Kress building on Greensboro Avenue downtown. Other points will be at Jemison School for the Southside area, at Tuscaloosa Industrial High School for many of the negroes, and on the University campus for students.

It will greatly simplify the task of registration if all men affected fully inform themselves now on the questions which they will be asked.

In the very first place, it is important that a man on the age borderline determine whether or not he is required to register. That is a simple process. Registration is mandatory for any man who had reached his 20th birthday prior to 12:01 a. m., January 1, 1942, and had not reached his 46th birthday prior to 12 midnight, February 16, 1942. Central Standard Time applies on the hours used, as such time was in effect when the birth took place.

Registration will be held from 7 a. m., to 9 p. m., War Time.

Here are the nine simple questions which registrants must answer, according to General Ben M. Smith, state director of Selective Service for Alabama:

1—Full name; 2—place of residence; 3-mailing address; 4—telephone number (if available); 5—age in years, and date of birth; place of birth; 7—name and address of the person who will always know his address; 8—employer's name and address; 9—place of employment or business.

Green-colored cards containing these questions will be filled out by the volunteers who serve as registration clerks. The registrant himself merely answers questions, and signs his name.

No questionnaires will be given registrantts to be filled out by themselves. No registrants will be required to undergo any physical examinations at this time.

Later the various Selective Service boards will shuffle the registration cards, then assign serial numbers and order numbers. Physical examinations are given only after the boards have passed on the general qualifications of registrants and have determined that they should not be deferred for reasons of interest to the nation.

February 16 was designated as Third Registration Day by President Roosevelt. However, Governor Dixon authorized registration to be held also on February 14 in order to spread the time permitted and prevent interference with war production. It is necessary for a registrant to register only once, using either of the two days.

Each registrant will receive a registration certificate. Under the law, this certificate must be kept in the personal possession of the registrant at all times. Failure to possess the certificate, or to show it to authorized persons, constitutes a violation of Selective Service regulations and is considered prima facie evidence of failure to register.

Negro Boy Walks 100 Miles To Enlist But Is Rejected

MAR 3 - 1942

Otis Mannings, 22-year-old Negro youth from Monticello, figured that the Army's Fort Benning would be about the best place in the world to enlist—so this week he walked and hitch-hiked 100 miles from Macon to try his luck.

Saturday Mannings was on his way back to Monticello, still a civilian and with a dawning conviction that he was pretty important to the war-effort—as a farmer.

The Army admired Mannings' spirit, fed him and arranged for the chaplain to provide money for food and transportation back home—but it still would not take him in—either at Fort Benning or at Camp Wheeler, where he tried previously to enlist.

They explained to Mannings that although he was classified as 1-A by his draft board that he had been deferred because he worked on a farm. They could only suggest that he go back to his draft board and volunteer there for service, explaining to him that at the present time enlistments have been closed to colored men. White boys, they added, can still enlist but if they do it must be as unassigned soldiers, eligible for service in any branch of the Army.

Mannings said he saw the point and guessed he'd better go back to Monticello, but he assured Fort Benning officers that he would still "sure like to get in the Army."

On the way to the bus terminal, Mannings related his experiences at Camp Wheeler, where he was turned down by the recruiting officer and was standing near the entrance to the camp when the "commanding general" stopped and asked him what he wanted. After he had told the officer his desire to join the Army, Mannings said the "general" sent him back to the recruiting officer with a note.

"Recruiting officer got powerful mad at me. Said I made it look like he didn't know what he was talkin' about, even when I tried to tell him the 'general' spoke to me first."

Estimated 2,500 To Register In Newberry County

Men Requested To Register At Nearest Center

Plans for the third draft registration, which will be held in the county next Monday from 7 A. M. until 9 P. M., have been virtually completed, it was announced today by the local Draft Boards.

Approximately 2,500 eligible men are expected to register in the county, it was estimated by local draft board officials.

The registration is for men between the ages of 20 and 44 years old, inclusive. Thirty schools in the county have been designated by the two draft boards as the centers where the men will register.

The registration will apply to all male citizens in the county born on or after February 17, 1897, and on or before December 31, 1921. Those who have turned 20 years of age since midnight, December 31, will not be required to register, the local Draft Boards announced. Also those who pass their 45th birthday before next Monday.

It was also pointed out that men who have previously registered will not be required to register again. Those required to register Monday are requested to do so at the registration center nearest their homes.

Registration cards and other material have been distributed by the draft boards to the county school teachers who will handle the registering of the men. All schools in the county will be closed so that the teachers can be available to handle the registration.

No announcement has been made from Washington as to how the new registrants will be classified or numbered, nor whether a lottery will be held.

Five white centers will handle the registration for the city and surrounding area. They are: Newberry College, Newberry high school, Mollohon, Oakland, and West End schools. The registration center for the negroes in the city and surrounding area will be at Drayton Street high school.

Other registration centers in the county will be located at the following schools: Whitmire, Long Lane, Hartford, Johnstone, Mt. Bethel-Garmany (the latter four will have special rooms for the registration of negroes), Mt. Pleasant, Prosperity school for whites, Prosperity school for negroes, Little Mountain school for whites, Little Mountain school for negroes, Fairview, Bush River, Chappells, Jolly Street, O'Neal, New Hope-Zion, Stoney Hill, Pomaria, Silverstreet and St. Phillips and Peak schools. The Jalapa, Dan Watkins and Elisha schools will be for the registration of negroes.

Army Duty Calls Negroes

Columbia, March 21.—(AP): Brigadier General Holmes B. Springs, state selective service director, said today South Carolina negroes ordered to report for army induction since the selective service system was inaugurated in October, 1940, have numbered in almost exact proportion to the population differential.

Census figures for 1942 show 42 per cent. of the state's population is negro.

A larger percentage of negroes were unfit for military service, Springs said, with 31 per cent of the colored selectees being rejected, compared to 19 per cent for whites.

Illiteracy was listed as the greatest factor in causes for rejection of South Carolina selectees, both white and negro. This problem will be discussed at headquarters here Wednesday, at a meeting of social-civic leaders with Major Robert H. Owens, of national headquarters.

Springs said indications were that calls for negro selectees would increase soon.

Maybank said further that there were 147,219 white boys registered and only 107,610 Negroes.

Colored observers point to two reasons for the disparity in numbers between the races. First, although 2,708 Negroes were placed in class A-1 recently, white boys had to be substituted because the army did not have enough facilities to care for the colored troops in the segregated units already set up. Second, a large number of colored boys have been unable to pass the literary test. South Carolina spends only $8 a year to educate her colored youth while she spends $24 per year for whites. The result is that white boys pass the literary test with ease.

Wide Disparity Causes Senator To Investigate

Senator Maybank, while governor, made an honest effort to improve Negro education facilities by coming out for equalization of pay for Negro and white teachers. The Ku Klux Klan lambasted him for his efforts. There is many a wry smile as the Kluxers' sons are inducted into service leaving their grinning black cousins behind.

Number Negroes Drafted Are in Right Proportion

Brig. Gen. Holmes B. Springs, state selective service director, said yesterday South Carolina Negroes ordered to report for army induction since the selective service system was inaugurated in October, 1940, have numbered in almost exact proportion to the population differential.

While the exact number of men selected from this state is a military secret, Springs said approximately 40 per cent of them were Negroes. This compares with 1940 census figures showing 42 per cent of the state's population is Negro.

A large percentage of Negroes were unfit for military service, Springs said, with 31 per cent of the colored selectees being rejected, compared to 19 per cent for whites.

Illiteracy was listed as the greatest factor in causes for rejection of South Carolina selectees, both white and Negro. This problem will be discussed at headquarters in Columbia Wednesday, March 25, at a meeting of social-civic leaders with Maj. Robert H. Owens, of national headquarters.

Springs said indications were that calls for Negro selectees would increase soon.

Alexander Pledges Fairness To Negro In Defense Plans

JAN 25 1941

PETERSBURG, Va.— Speaking on the relation of the federal government to the individual, Dr. Will W. Alexander, administrative assistant to the advisory commission of the Council of National Defense, Washington, told an audience composed largely of students and faculty members at the annual Founder's Day program at Virginia State College on Thursday night " . . . that one of the things that is true of every federal administrator that I have come in contact with is a deep concern and desire in seeing that his department will function fairly in connection with the Negroes of this country."

Dr. John M. Gandy, president of the college, introduced the principal speaker and the other two speakers on the program which included an address by an alumnus, Miss Susie Shepperson, class of 1930 and supervisor of schools in Pittsylvania County, and a student at the college, Miss Daisy Belle Jones, '41. Music on the program was furnished by the a capella choir under the direction of J. Harold Montague.

FEDERAL SERVICES

Formerly the executive director of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation, Atlanta, Ga., Dr. Alexander pointed out the growing number of services to the individual by the federal government, as he cited the relative powers of the states and federal government under the Constitution.

Using the grant-in-aid to illustrate a device by which the federal body gets the cooperation of the states in matters of vital concern, the speaker said:

"Some of the abuses that have taken place in the administration of the expenditures of Federal funds by the States have been notorious. Among them is the lack of equitable distribution of funds between the schools for white and colored people. The discrimination in the distribution of these funds have been disgraceful. We have just had a piece of legislation in Congress that marks a milestone in this connection.

EDUCATIONAL FUND

"An act creating an educational fund (National Defense Act) in which it was written into the act that in those States in which there are separate schools, there should be an equitable distribution of funds for education between white and colored schools. A precedent has been set and I hope that never again will Federal schools funds be furnished without some such wording in the very act itself."

Dr. Alexander expressed his belief that "the best and most intelligent government in this country taken as a whole is the federal government as he pointed to the large number of persons under civic service. By way of comparison, he also said that there was less political pressure in the federal government than in the state and local governments.

"There is no graft in the federal government. Anyone who can steal anything from the federal government is good. It just doesn't happen. The efficiency of our government in handling its funds, in my opinion is something of which every American citizen should be proud."

LAUDS BLACK

The speaker lauded the recent decisions of Justice Black, "a southerner and former member of the Ku Klux Klan," who during the past two years has written at least three decisions involving the rights of Negroes.

"If any of you need assurance as to the progress of Democracy in America and are not familiar with the decisions of Justice Black, go get them and read them. They set a new high in the role of the Supreme Court as the final custodian of the rights and freedom of the individual," said Mr. Alexander as his audience broke forth in a thunder of applause.

In closing, the speaker gave his listeners some advice on securing jobs for Negroes in the national defense program.

"I have a feeling on this matter of jobs for Negroes in the national defense industries. What is needed more than anything else are groups of intelligent citizens, both white and Negro, working locally at the job of seeing that there is an equitable and fair amount of jobs being given to Negro workers."

Urban Leaguer Blames Advisory Group For Defeatist Attitude

NEW YORK.—A means by which the newly created office of production manager of the National Defense Advisory Commission might secure compliance of manufacturers with its "non-discrimination" order has been pointed out to Sidney Hillman, associate director of the agency, by Lester B. Granger, assistant executive secretary of the National Urban League.

Granger laid blame for the virtual exclusion of skilled Negro workers from defense projects almost wholly upon the Advisory Commission's attitude that it could not enforce its stated policy because it did not possess the necessary executive authority.

Granger wrote Hillman that "the Urban League, during the past two months, has carefully gathered data from all parts of the country showing that the restrictions placed against Negro workers by a large part of American industry will not soon be relaxed, even in the interest of national defense, unless the federal government takes definite steps to show the need for such relaxation, as well as its insistence upon it.

JAN 25 1941

War Department Order Important

Until the beginning of this year, Granger agreed, it was hardly possible for the Commission to enforce its ruling that firms receiving defense contracts give equal opportunity to workers of all races.

Since January 1, however, he indicated, conditions have changed considerably: first with the creation of the new office for production management, which has more power than the Defense Advisory Commission, and second, with the issuance of an order by the War Department on January 4 which permits defense contract holders to obtain special tax privileges only when certified by the Advisory Commission after investigation.

Certification may be made on one of three grounds—(1) a Certificate of Necessity; (2) a Certificate of Non-Reimbursement, and (3) a Certificate of Government Protection.

The certificate of government protection may be issued when the commission's investigation shows that the government's interests are adequately protected in its agreement with the contractor holding a national defense contract.

The War Department announcement further states that wherever the contractor is reimbursed directly or indirectly by the government for the cost of his new facilities this certificate of government protection is required in addition to the certificate of necessity before he can avail himself of the sixty-month amortization period.

Says Government Holds Interest

"The National Urban League holds that a contractor who arbitrarily refuses to abide by the National Defense Advisory Commission's policy of no racial discrimination in employment is not adequately protecting the interests of the government," Granger wrote.

"The interests of our government and the entire nation at this time demand that all groups in the population who are concerned with defending democracy shall feel themselves to have an active part in democratic processes and to be participants in the rewards of the democratic system.

"Industrial concerns holding defense contracts and denying to Negro workers the right to employment merely because of race are failing to protect the national interests in two ways. They are depriving the nation of the valuable skilled services of a large number of workers; they are also contriving to disrupt the morale of one-tenth of the nation's population.

"Among the greatest offenders in this respect are the aircraft companies of the country. Only two major aircraft concerns in the entire country have been reported to the National Urban League as employing Negro mechanics, and these employ only a few.

"According to the War Department's announcement, several important aircraft companies have applied for certificates of government protection entitling them to special tax privileges. The National Urban League urges that such certification and special tax privileges be withheld as long as these companies persist in defying the public interest and refuse employment opportunities to Negro workers.

"We hold that such action by the Commission will have a salutary effect in several ways. It will maintain democratic principles by refusing to award public favors to concerns which set themselves against the public interest. It will put some teeth in a statement of policy which previously has been ineffective. It will greatly hearten the loyal but harried Negro citizens of America by giving a sign that their government is prepared to defend their social and political rights as part of our preparation for the larger national defense."

The object was to form a group through which the colored residents could co-operate in every way possible with Uncle Sam's war effort and especially in the Red Cross and Civilian defense activities.

All ministers who were present and other leaders made talks pleding their best efforts for such undertakings.

Educators To Hold Conference; Study Institute Defense Meet

Adult educators from many educational walks of life—mission school community workers, WPA adult educationists, Y. M. C. A. workers, Negro college extension workers, and those who work in the interest of share croppers—converge on Washington Jan. 30-31 and Feb 1 to attend the Third Annual conference on Adult Education and the Negro, William M. Cooper, director of the Hampton Institute Summer school and extension department and secretary of the conference announced yesterday.

This three-day study and confab on adult education, the Negro and national defense, which will be held at Howard university, is one of Negro education's major conferences. It is sponsored by the American Association for Adult education, the Association in Negro Folk education, and the Extension Department of Hampton institute.

Official representatives from more than 20 states having programs in adult education for and among Negroes, as well as educational leaders from colleges, white and Negro alike throughout America, will report, discuss and listen to authorities and specialists in their attempt to formulate objectives and give direction to programs in adult education for Negroes and their contribution to America's mobilization for defense. The meeting is open to all persons interested in adult education.

Hampton Defense Conference

The first major discussion of the conference related to defense will be launched by Dean R. O'Hara Lanier of Hampton institute, who will give a resume of the conference held at the institute in the fall of 1940. Mrs. Mary McLeod Bethune, of the administrative personnel, National Youth administration, will preside in this session Thursday and present likewise Judge William H. Hastie, civilian assistant to the secretary of war; Dr. Robert C. Weaver, administrative assistant, National Defense Advisory commission, and T. Arnold Hill, division of Negro Affairs, National Youth administration. Adult education in the national emergency will be discussed by Dr. Mordecai Johnson, president of Howard university; Dr. Morse A. Cartwright, president of the American Association for Adult education: Dr. Rayford Logan, professor of history, Howard university; and Dr. Lyman Bryson, adult educationist, Teachers' college, Columbia university.

Library of Congress to Entertain

A feature of the program of Friday related to the cultural development in adult education will be a visit by the conference to the Library of congress to view the most comprehensive collection of Negro paintings, drawings, and prints ever assembled as "illustrative of the contribution of the American Negro to American culture." The exhibit was assembled by Dr. Alain Locke, professor of philosophy at Howard university; Archibald McLeish, of the library of congress; Mrs. Mildred Holzhauer, director of WPA Art program, exhibit section; and Holger Cahill, national director, WPA Art program.

The Friday night session will present a discussion of the most recent developments related to the psychology of adult learing by Dr. Irvin Lorge, professor of psychology at Teachers' college, Columbia university, who has completed additional experiments to those conducted by Dr. E. L. Thorndike, related to the adult's learning ability.

Dr. Channing H. Tobias, national secretary, Y. M. C. A; Dr. Rachel Davis-DuBois, consultant on intercultural education, U. S. office of education; William M. Cooper; James A. Atkins of the WPA Education and Recreation department; Miss Pauline Redmond, of the School of Consumer education; W. R. Chivers, sociologist, Morehouse college, Atlanta university; and Samuel A. Madden, of the WPA of Virginia, and others are scheduled to participate in the conference.

Exhibit a Feature

As in the previous conferences, a carefully selected number of exhibits, including as of first importance the literature and materials on adult education, will be exhibited throughout the conference. Howard university, through its extensive resources, is arranging a special exhibit on materials suitable in the field of adult education among Negroes. The literature and exhibits of the program are being selected and arranged by Samuel A. Madden, supervisor Negro WPA Adult education, Virginia.

The first conference on adult education and the Negro, as sponsored by the American Association for Adult education, the Association in Negro Folk education, and the extension department of Hampton institute, was held at Hampton institute in October 1938. The second conference was held at Tuskegee institute in January 1940.

The conference maintains a cleafing house for information relative to adult education for and among Negroes and has prepared and circulated more than 50,000 pieces of literature relative to adult education. Dr. Ambrose Caliver, senior specialist in the Education of Negroes, United States office of education, cites the adult education conference as being one of the significant Negro education movements in America.

Defense: One For All; All for One

MAR 1 1941

In her address at Virginia State College Sunday, Mrs. Roosevelt, as was to have been expected, went directly to the heart of what is necessary to achieve a united America for adequate national defense. In simple words but with convincing logic she said:

> We have to decide just what we really want as a minimum for all the people of our nation. How we are going to achieve it I do not know. I don't care. I know we can't achieve it in one generation, but I know we must keep before us the fact that in the long-range defense there must be hope for every individual in the nation. They cannot feel that they are doomed, and their children after them.

There is no mystery about what Mrs. Roosevelt was referring to. Every one who is at all familiar with what is going on knows that as this nation girds for defense in the greatest crisis in its history, there are forces which are operating to fasten upon one-tenth of the population the very forms of economic slavery which they detest and fear at the hands of our actual and potential enemies.

As the nation calls upon its manpower to enroll for military training, no man is deferred on account of his race and color, but certain branchces of the armed service are arbitrarily closed to men of the Negro race. MAR 1 1941

As the nation spurs its industrial organization to do its utmost in the building of housing for its army, and for building the implements of war, certain brackets of employment are definitely closed to men of the Negro race.

Thus national policies are made; employment policies and opportunities are made and legalized which effectively close the door of hope to the race that constitutes one-tenth of the nation's population.

Until these policies and practices are defiinitely changed—permanently destroyed—there can be no national unity, no real national defense.

Keep Northern Negro In North, Says Bankhead

He Asks Chief Of Staff To Help Avoid Racial Strife At Army Posts

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., Aug. 2. — (AP) — Senator Bankhead (D), Alabama, has suggested to Gen. Marshall, army chief of staff, that Northern negro soldiers be quartered in Northern States only, the senator revealed today in a letter to John Temple Graves, columnist for The Birmingham Age-Herald.

The letter, quoted in Graves' column, says "the best friends of the negroes in the South are very much concerned about the growing anxiety that race conflicts may break out and lead to bloodshed."

"Our people feel that the government is doing a disservice to the war effort by locating negro troops in the South in immediate contact with white troops at a time when race feeling among the negroes has been aroused and when all the energies of both the whites and the blacks should be devoted to the war effort," the senator's letter to Marshall said.

Bankhead then suggested that if negro soldiers must be trained in the South "as a result of social or political pressure, can't you place Southern negro soldiers there and place the Northern negro soldiers in the North where their presence is not likely to lead to race wars?"

The question of racial relations has been in the news in Alabama for several weeks. Horace Wilkinson, Birmingham attorney and a leading State political figure, urged formation of a league for white supremacy in a recent address before the Bessemer, Ala., Kiwanis club.

Gov. Frank M. Dixon, of Alabama, refused to sign a Federal contract for the convict-operated textile mill because he objected to the fair labor practice clause, which binds the contractor not to discriminate against any person because of race, color, creed or national origin.

Bankhead Told Negro Troops Will Continue To Come South

Chief of Staff Says Winning Of War Is Only Consideration

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(A N P) —Northern troops will be kept in the south "whenever necessary in the furtherance of our war efforts," Gen. George C. Marshall, chief of staff, told Senator John H. Bankhead in a letter Wednesday.

Recently the Alabama senator had asked that northern troops be stationed in the north in order to keep down racial friction. There have been several outbreaks in southern camps when northern recruits resented the attitude of southern whites.

"The only sound basis upon which we can proceed in the prosecution of the war is to station our troops in accordance with the dictates of military necessity," Gen. Marshall replied.

WAR COMES FIRST

"Therefore, while our policy in general is, when practicable, to station northern troops in northern stations and southern troops in the south, and also to station Negro troops in localities where a commensurate Negro civilian population exists, the implementation of the police must be secondary to military requirements.

"Although requirements of the military situation must take precedence over other considerations during the emergency, the war department appreciates the sentiments of the civilian communities near our army posts and will deviate from the policy as outlined only when necessary in the furtherance of our war efforts."

Meanwhile, government officials here were said to be deeply concerned over reports of racial disturbances in the south. Reports have come in, it is understood that harmonious relations between whites and Negroes in the south have been disturbed by what are considered rash actions or remarks on the part of a few members of both races.

BIDDLE DENIES RUMOR

One official report, however, indicated that while there had been a few disturbances, both races were eager for a return to normalcy, and that passions that have been aroused have calmed down on both sides.

One report that the department of justice was concerned with race relations in the south was denied this afternoon by Atty. Gen. Biddle. At a press conference, he said that the department does not concern itself ever with problems of race relations, only if special allegations are made that constitutional rights have been violated, he said, is an investigation made.

THE ASSOCIATED NEGRO PRESS SAYS WAR DEPARTMENT MAY ACT BECAUSE OF VICE EXPOSE

The Associated Negro Press, in its deadline release dated August 31, stated that action by the War Department against the CHICAGO BEE was imminent, as a result of a story it printed concerning the proposed building of a "recreation" hall in Fry, Ariz., adjacent to the Fort Huachuca military camp.

An expose of plans laid by "substantial Chicago businessmen" to introduce vice on the premises of the "recreation" hall was the story referred to in the ANP release. The story appeared in last week's (Sunday, August 30) edition of the BEE.

According to ANP the War Department can do nothing in the matter but has "enlisted the aid of civil branches of the government to investigate and take such measures as are appropriate."

The BEE has received no official communication from the War department that any action against it is contemplated. There have been no statements issued by the War department to the press that the BEE would be "taken to task" because the story uncovered plans to inject vice conditions near a military reservation.

The editors of The BEE are investigating to determine how ANP secured information of a confidential nature about War department intentions to "crack down on the CHICAGO BEE."

The news-gathering agency which circulates to more than 100 newspapers, cites as its source of information "officials who ask not to be quoted." These "officials" are, however, quoted, though not named, in other sections of the release.

According to ANP, an "official" said: "The War department is as much opposed to gambling, marijuana smoking and prostitution as any other group of citizens, and to say that the government is sponsoring such a thing is unthinkable."

Actually, the CHICAGO BEE story made no such accusation. What it did say was that "Chicago businessmen and shady characters are conspiring to mulct soldiers and officers stationed at Fort Huachuca, Ariz., of their meager earnings, sabotage their health, and seriously hinder the war effort."

The CHICAGO BEE refutes the statements made by the "official" and printed by ANP that it had made derogatory remarks about the War department, or inferred that that agency was consciously entering into an "off-color" proposition.

The BEE said "ostensibly the businessmen" and underworld overlords are operating under the guise of deep patriotism in providing a center where service men might relax during idle moments."

SENATOR BANKHEAD AND THE NEGRO

AUG 15 1942

THE WIDELY PUBLICIZED letter of Senator John D. Bankhead of Alabama to General George C. Marshall, urging that Negro troops from the North be removed from southern training camps, achieved one purpose at least—to attract national attention to the growing anti-Negro feeling in certain parts of this country. Said the Senator:

"The best friends of the Negroes in the South are very much concerned about the growing anxiety that race conflicts may break out and lead to bloodshed.

"Our people feel that the government is doing a disservice to the war effort by locating Negro troops in the South in the immediate contact with white troops at a time when race feeling has been aroused and when all the energies of both whites and blacks should be devoted to the war effort'.'

The Senator added that if Negro soldiers must be trained in the South "as a result of social or political pressure, can't you place Southern Negro soldiers there and place the Northern Negro soldiers in the North where their presence is not likely to lead to race wars."

This suggestion for the segregation of Negro soldiers is typical of the white Southerner's way of thinking. To the Axis, an American soldier is an enemy regardless of whether he be black or white, yet to certain white men in this country, a Negro is still a Negro—a second rate citizen at best—even though he may wear the uniform of the U. S. Army and shoulder a gun in defense of his country.

If there are racial conflicts in southern camps. it will be because the civilian population of the white South refuses to respect the Army uniform when its wearer happens to be colored. And for the federal government to adopt Senator Bankhead's suggestion would be to endorse this attitude. The increasing hostility between the races in the South is due largely to the refusal of Negro soldiers to accept the segregation, discrimination and other undemocratic practices in the South.

Negro Soldiers In The South

AUG 23 1942

THE War Department decided that the suggestion of Alabama Senator Bankhead that Negro soldiers be trained in the North was unsound.

That was about the only conclusion that the War Department could have reached. Any other decision would admittedly have placed the army in a most unfavorable light with respect to its power to prosecute a war. The War Department would have admitted that it could no longer prevent insults against army uniforms worn by colored soldiers. It would have admitted that it was unable to forbid the brutal treatment by prejudiced southerners which has been accorded Negro soldiers who are sent South of the Mason-and-Dixon line to train to fight for the United States.

In its answer to the senator from Alabama the communication from the War Department did not go far enough. I said nothing about the fact that there would be some attempt to stem the tide of racial hatred that is manifested against colored trainees in the South. It did not say that it was in a position to see that justice was done and would cooperate with all agencies to that end.

We had rather hoped that the War Department would have taken that opportunity to assure the many thousands of colored soldiers and their friends and loved ones that a new order would obtain in the South hereafter.

Whether the senator from Alabama made the suggestion out of deference to the colored soldiers or because he was expressing the attitude of his constituents regarding their desires not to have colored soldiers around is left to conjecture.

But if he is interested in the protection of colored soldiers he will not stop there but will ask that the Federal government take definite steps to protect all soldiers in the South. He will go even further and demand that discrimination based on color against any person wearing a uniform in a public place be made a Federal offense. If the good senator from Alabama does not do that we are compelled to view his request as one made in the interest of those millions of southern whites who do not want to see a Negro dressed in anything save overalls—and ragged, dirty ones at that.

BANKHEAD REQUESTE IS REJECTED BY ARMY

Negroes to Be Stationed Where Military Policy Dictates

AUG 14 1942

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13 (AP)—General George C. Marshall, Chief of Staff, has rejected the suggestion of Senator Bankhead of Alabama that Northern Negro troops be stationed only in the North to avoid any possible racial difficulties, aides to the Senator disclosed today.

General Marshall said in a letter to the Senator that military policy must dictate the locating of troops, although full consideration is given to the sentiments of civilian communities adjacent to the posts.

Mr. Bankhead's letter to the general followed a disturbance involving some Negro soldiers at Jacksonville, Fla.

"The War Department has given careful study to the assignment of troops," General Marshall said, "and fully recognizes that harmonious relations between the soldiers at any particular camp and the adjacent civilian population is conducive to high morale and contributes to military efficiency.

"I am convinced, however, that the only sound basis upon which we can proceed in the prosecution of the war is to station our troops in accordance with the dictates of military necessity.

"Therefore, while our policy in general is, when practicable, to staotin Northern troops in Northern States and Southern troops in the South, and also to station colored troops in localities where a commensurate Negro civilian population exists, the implementation oft he policy must be secondary to military requirements."

OCT 24 1942

FORT BRAGG, NC.—Rebellious unrest of Negro soldiers at sudden replacement of Negro Post Exchange (PX) staff by whites is spreading because of antagonistic attitude and contemptuous treatment offered them by newcomers, it was revealed here this week. The new white clerks are said to greet any complaint from Negro soldiers about prices with angry retorts that "we don't have to take any orders from niggers."

The prices of various items in the PX have been changed arbitrarily every two or three days since they took over. When they first took over, some of the Negro troops were preparing to chase them off the post by force if necessary, are said to have been restrained by guards who persuaded the soldiers to report their grievances to the higher authorities.

The condition has aggravated resentment of the Negro troops which burst forth recently when the all-Negro staff of the PX was ousted. According to one of the dismissed clerks, the whites just moved in and no reasons for the change have yet been made public.

WHAT ABOUT THE NAVY DOOR, MR. PRESIDENT?

JAN 31 1942

THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON

January 14, 1942

Mr. Joseph Curran, President
National Maritime Union
346 West 17th Street
New York, N. Y.

My dear Mr. Curran:

I am informed that the discrimination against colored seamen, referred to in your telegram of January 2nd, was eliminated by the action of the United States Maritime Commission on the day it occurred.

It is the policy of the Government of the United States to encourage full participation in the National Defense program by all citizens, regardless of race, creed, color, or national origin, in the firm belief that the democratic way of life within the nation can be defended successfully only with the help and support of all groups within its borders.

The policy was stated in my Executive Order signed on June 25, 1941. The order instructed all parties making contracts with the Government of the United States to include in all defense contracts thereafter a provision obligating the contractor not to discriminate against any worker because of race, creed, color or national origin.

Questions of race, creed and color have no place in determining who are to man our ships. The sole qualifications for a worker in the maritime industry, as well as in any other industry, should be his loyalty and his professional or technical ability and training.

Sincerely yours,

Franklin D. Roosevelt

JAN 31 1942

With the refusal of certain steamship companies to employ Negro seamen, President Roosevelt, in a letter to Joseph Curran, president of the National Maritime Commission, has stated, "Questions of race, creed or color have no place in determining who are to man our ships." Curran laid the matter before the President in a telegram when certain large shipping companies refused to do "business as usual" if they had to hire Negro seamen. The Grace Line and United States Lines were the major offenders cited by Curran to the President.

Black Dispatch
Oklahoma City, Okla

Train Negro Soldiers in The South

JAN 24 1942

Despite the fact that a recent race riot occurred in Alexandria, Louisiana, between white civilians and Negro troopers, the Black Dispatch still insists that Negro soldiers should be quartered in the South. We say this in spite of the fact that a number of foolish Northern blacks insist that Negro soldiers be trained in northern centers.

The important responsibility of the government is to see that Negro soldiers are respected in the South, and every other place where the Stars and Stripes are unfurled. On never solves his problems running from them; somehow, and in some way, men must face their difficulties in life.

Fundamentally, this is the difference between the Northern black man and the Southern. The Northern Negro ran from something the Southern black man has been willing to face. The black man who has stayed in the South is fighting for a little of heaven below the Mason and Dixon line. It is in the hills where the magnolias bloom that we demand peace, tranquility and happiness just as much so as anywhere else in America. This is where our fathers and mothers are buried and here is the place where Southern black men will make our last ditch fight for guarantees of the constitution.

Is it not a silly and cowardly suggestion to government when we say "Move Negro soldiers out of the South because they cannot get protection there"?

Why would it not be better to demand that the uniform of the United States army be respected and that anyone who assaults a soldier in the uniform of the United States be tried and severely penalized in federal courts? Some day we must, and will, reach this place and point in national morals and Negroes should just as well father the thought as anyone else. Why should a Negro soldier go forth to fight for something in foreign lands which he does not possess at home,

It makes no difference whether the boys come from Philadelphia, New York or Chicago, Negro soldiers should have the respect of all citizens. A northern black man should be respected just as much in the South as a southern white man is respected in the North. We should have no other rule or custom if this is a democracy, the land of the free and the home of the brave.

One of the rules that should be insisted upon is that Negro troopers should be in charge of Negro M. P.'s. These Negro military police should be armed with guns and given the same authority as white M. P.'s. Any other regulation is silly. Knowledge that armed Negro military police are down in the Negro district and will enforce the law without regard to race or color will keep every undesirable white man out of that section, and knowledge that white officers are up in the white section clothed with similar authority will bring about the same result.

But it is wrong to send a herd of unarmed Negro pimps out among thousands of Negro soldiers to give information to armed white M. P.'s, and expect order to be maintained. Such a program begins with the thought that law must be enforced by white but not by black citizens.

Civilization must some day come to the South, but it will never arrive through the efforts of whites who are controlled by false pride, or through Negroes who run every time a discordant note is struck in American life. We insist that Negro soldiers be trained in the South and that the South be required to respect citizens training to defend our national institutions.

The view we present here results from objective thinking. We yearn and long for the day when America will have democracy that is actual, and not alone ritual. We are asking now in war what later on we want in peace, and we understand and know that democracy in the end will not be worth the snap of your finger in the North unless it is a living force and reality in the South. One of the freedoms we are fighting for is "freedom from fear." We must have physical safety before we have freedom from fear. We fight in war for that which we hold precious in peace.

COLORED TROOPS IN THE SOUTH

JAN 24 1942

Another clash between colored soldiers and Southern whites took place a few days ago. It is the same old story of stationing Northern colored troops in Dixie. It is foolish business, which Army bigwigs persist in doing despite reiterated protests and warnings. Northern bred soldiers cannot stomach the epithets and the overbearing attitude of Dixie low-brows. Under the difficulties of restraining men whose resentment to insults takes the form of violence—yes, we have them, too—a riot easily starts and some get hurt, or killed especially when there are white military police present whose fingers itch to pull triggers.

JAN 24 1942

There will, of course, be another army investigation, which in all probability will get nowhere. After months of probing and an accumulation of stacks upon stacks of testimony in the case of the Fort Bragg rioting the War Department announces that it still is unable to name the person or persons guilty of the shootings. It all amounts to the army "whitewash" which many predicted before the Fort Bragg investigation got underway. The outcome of the Fort Bragg inquiry does not breed any confidence that an investigation by army heads of the latest clash will be productive of any better result. The sensible course is to keep Northern colored soldiers out of the South.

Parents Resent Son's Treatment by Navy

JAN 24 1942

Taking exception to the fact that her son, who applied to be an amateur radio technician in the United States Navy was instead offered a messman's blank to fill out, Mr. and Mrs. Arrindell Barrow, of 1800 Seventh Ave., directed a letter to President Roosevelt last week, declaring "that they find it humanly impossible to give their sons their blessing as they go forward to do their part for our country."

JAN 24 1942

The letter to the Chief Executive said:

"My boy has the requirements; he has been making radios and working with them for the past eight years, but he was never even asked for his requirements. He was jusat handed a messman's pamphlet.

"As an American mother who has two sons, the oldest about to enter the army and the youngest who has been most enthusiastic to serve his country by entering the navy, I am extremely disappointed to find such vile un-American practices existing in our armed forces where every individual basicly makes the same sacrifice.

JAN 24 1942

"I refuse to believe that such discrimination exists; therefore, I am appealing to you as commander-in-chief of our armed forces to enlighten me as to what are my obligations to the government and the government to me and my family as citizens, when my rights as a citizen are thusly abridged in contra-distinction to that of other citizens.

"My son being qualified should not be denied the right to enter his choice branch of the service in performing his sacred duty.

"If this horrible situation which I believe does exist, I find it humanly and truthfully impossible to give my sons my blessing as they go forward to do their part for our country."

Fair Practice Group Eyes Navy Race Ban

JAN 24 1942

In a letter to Congressman Emanuel Celler, dated January 12, Lawrence W. Cramer, executive secretary of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice, informed the Representative from the 15th New York District that the Committee had a personal interest in the fact that colored men could not enlist in the United States Navy other than messmen and the group wanted to correct the situation.

The letter, in part, reads:

"The Committee on Fair Employment Practice as Secretary Knox states is actively investigating all complaints of discrimination against persons because of their race, creed, color or national origin in defense industries or in the Government service which reach it.

JAN 24 1942

"If you have complaints of discrimination in defense industries or in the Government service which reach you, I suggest that you advise the complainants to forward their complaints to my office. For your information I transmit herewith six copies of a release 'How to Submit Complaints' which outlines the information required by the committee to permit it to investigate a case.

"The Committee has no authority to intervene in cases of discrimination involving service in the armed forces of the United States. This is a problem in which members of the Committee all have a personal interest and they are doing what they can to correct the situation, but officially they are without authority.

Florida Service Club Rated Nation's Best

MAR 28 1942

By OLLIE STEWART

CAMP BLANDING, Fla. — News item: "Camp Blanding Service Club No. 4 gets highest rating at morale meetings in Washington."

The above is a tribute to the efforts of the hostess staff here at Camp Blanding, consisting of Mrs. Childs, Miss Scott, Mrs. Evans and Miss Garlington. And it means that of the many service clubs throughout the nation, the service club for colored at Blanding is tops.

I heartily agree with the verdict. It is a pleasure to hear the soldiers praise the excellent care taken of them and their wives and mothers by Mrs. Childs, who is senior hostess, and Miss Scott, junior hostess in charge of the guest house.

Cafeteria Food Is Good

Various companies give dances in the big club auditorium each week. The cafeteria is open daily for men who want a change of diet, and a hot meal when they have leisure time. Mrs. Evans has charge of the cafeteria and the food is good as well as reasonable.

The library has a record I haven't found anywhere else. Miss Ebbie Garlington, librarian, reports that there are 1000 registered borrowers among the men in camp. The library is crowded every night, and books of every type are circulated.

All the Newspapers

And practically every colored newspaper and magazine now being published is on the racks in the Blanding library, aside from a large assortment of white daily papers and magazines.

When I was here in the summer, a large tent theatre was in operation. Now the colored area has a modern theatre building, one of the two on the post with a well-equipped stage for in-person entertainers.

THREE SOLDIERS KILLED IN FORT DIX 'BRAWL'

APR 4 1942

White M. P., Two Negroes Slain In Exchange Of Gunfire

FORT DIX, N. J., April 3.—(AP)—Authorities of this military post said Friday that the killing of a white military policeman and two negro soldiers, and the wounding of five negro soldiers, during a gun battle was "merely a brawl" without racial significance.

Col. C. M. Dowell, post commandant, stated after an investigation of the bloody 15-minute clash between M. P.'s and occupants of a negro barracks that there had not been "the slightest antagonism between white and negro soldiers here at any time. Thursday night's incident was merely a brawl, which, if it had to happen, might just as well have occurred between members of the same race."

The fusillade of bullets on the darkened plains ended when negro and white officers ordered both sides to halt firing.

The incident, as reconstructed by Major Woldike, post public relations officer, occurred after a score of military police hastened to lay siege to the barracks from which gunfire answered a bullet "fired over the head" of a negro soldier.

The negro had fled from the Waldron Sports Palace, in nearby Pointville, Major Woldike said, after grappling with an M. P. who intervened during an argument among soldiers waiting to use a telephone.

White And Negro Troops Clash At Alexandria; 30 Wounded

ALEXANDRIA, LA., Jan. 11.—(AP)—Negro soldiers were restricted today to nearby Camps Livingston and Claiborne by the Fifth Army Corps headquarters following a riot here last night in which 30 persons were wounded, including 28 negro soldiers, one woman and one State policeman.

Four of the soldiers, shot in the two-hour clash in the city's "Little Harlem" section, were in a serious condition, army officials said.

A company of white military police from Wisconsin, after becoming involved with the soldiers, called for help and was reinforced by city and State police.

Chief of Police George C. Gray estimated 60 military police, a score of city officers and 10 State troopers took part in rounding up 3,000 negro troops, dispersing 3,000 negro civilians and closing 15 saloons and cafes in a four-block area.

Practically all of the negro troops involved were from Northern states, principally New York, Pennsylvania and Illinois, officers said.

Fifth Army Corps authorities announced that the negro soldiers were restricted to their camps but were not placed under arrest. Military police today continued to round up negro soldiers in the city, explaining that these were mostly non-commissioned officers with families in town who had weekend passes.

The negro section is patrolled by negro military police, who with the Wisconsin company, are under orders of Maj. Ray McKnight, assistant corps provost marshal. The first trouble was reported to have occurred in front of a negro theater when a Wisconsin policeman arrested a negro soldier and a crowd of negro soldiers swarmed the white officer and his prisoner.

Bullets, bricks, sticks and rocks flew fast during the riot, windows were broken and between 25 and 30 tear gas bombs, the city's entire supply, were used. The negro troops were ordered to the bus station, loaded into buses and sent back to their camps.

Fifth Army Corps, under the command of Maj. Gen. Edmund L. Daley, in explaining the riot today asked that no military officer be quoted directly, but said the 28 negro soldiers wounded were either shot, clubbed or otherwise bruised.

The army withheld the names of injured soldiers taken to military hospitals. A civilian hospital, where two of the soldiers were treated, listed them as Binnie Robinson, 24, and Lewis Lawrence, 22, addresses unknown.

May Frances Scales, 22, was shot in the hip by a stray bullet, officers said. One State policeman had a bandaged finger he said he hurt when he hit a soldier on the head with his flashlight.

The scene was quiet today and damage was confined almost entirely to broken windows.

COLORED SOLDIERS WILL ELECT 'QUEEN'

Popularity Contest Sponsored By USO Hostess Group

Greater scope of activity is now being attained in affairs of the colored United Service Organizations club on West Fifteenth Street operated under the direction of Ralph Metcalfe, Atlanta-born and internationally-known athlete. One of the more interesting events is a "Victory Queen" contest which is being conducted under the direction of his wife and in cooperation with the USO Hostess Committee headed by Corinne Patillo.

Among the young women selected as candidates for the "Victory Queen" are Frances Dunson, Julia Jackson, Gwendolyn Westfield, Maggie Grishom, Sara Peoples, Rita Nelson, Pearl Williams.

The "Victory Queen" will be determined by popular vote of the colored soldiers of Fort McClellan. She and her attendants will be feted on June 5.

Men Get "Reform School" Treatment at Ark. Camp

(EDITOR'S NOTE: The following is a letter to the AFRO from a soldier who reveals conditions as they exist at Camp Robinson in Arkansas.)

The soldiers of the Ninety-second Engineer Battalion (Sep.), stationed at Camp Robinson, Ark., have no theatres, no service club, no guest house and post exchange with colored clerks.

Colored soldiers, the majority of whom are from the North, have to present Class "B" passes to white M.P.'s before leaving or entering the camp, while white soldiers on the other hand may have the privilege of leaving without going through such formalities.

Call Soldiers "Boy"

The white M.P.'s also have the habit of calling or referring to colored soldiers as "boy" and then apologize for it, due to the fact that the camp commander has given strict orders that everybody must do all that is possible to keep the colored men in their place.

The Ninety-second Engineers' staff officers even refrain from protesting against such conditions. But that is what a colored soldier is fighting for.

This battalion's authorized strength is estimated to be more than 1,000 enlisted men and officers and yet only 10 per cent may receive passes on what are called recreation days (Sunday, Wednesday and Saturday until midnight). These passes begin when the working day is complete at 6:30 p.m.

Keep 24-Hour Vigil

The colored communities of Little Rock and nearby towns welcome the colored soldiers but the army officials in this locality keep a 24-hour vigil to see that the men never get any privilege beyond that of a bad child in a reform school.

There may be some ruffians in the group but a person cannot judge the entire battalion by what one man does. Many of these men have been called from well-to-do homes and should not be treated as rascals.

Chaplain's Appeals Ignored

The colored M.P. must patrol his beat with only a night stick while the white M.P. has a night stick and also a pistol.

The officials' reason for this is that the colored man is not sufficiently trained to handle a pistol, but we all know that isn't true. The real reason is the lack of belief of the colored soldiers' capabilities.

A few of the organization's staff officers are so strong in their belief of white supremacy that they are willing to jim crow our chaplain. He has made several appeals to higher authorities but to no avail.

RELEASES FOR NEGRO PRESS PLANNED HERE

Effort Being Made To Combat Distorted News Stories

The public relations department of the Branch Immaterial Replacement Training Center at Fort McClellan under the direction of Lieutenant Harold D. Steward, public relations officer, is preparing a series of news releases on Negro soldiers and their daily camp life.

Pictures of the colored soldiers on the drill field, in their daily recreational activities, and during their religious services will be placed in publications throughout the country.

The news campaign will be an effort to assist the Negro press in building the morale and creating a better understanding between the soldiers of all camps throughout the United States.

This campaign is also undertaken to finish press releases to Negro newspapers and prevent them from using sensational methods to exploit and distort news about colored soldiers that lower the morale of the colored civilians.

Press releases from Fort McClellan will be written about the colored soldiers by colored reporters who have been drafted into the United State Army under the Selective Service Act.

Negro journalists can be influenced to familarize the Negro population with the accomplishments and the possibilities of the part played by the Negro soldier and not the unfortunate incidents that have been far overplayed in the Negro press.

The National Negro press can be of great assistance in conveying the much needed appeal to the 13,000 Negroes who are presently dependent upon the Negro press for their army information and who are now being given, to a large extent, only the unplesant side of a Negro soldier's life.

This new army Negro press service will get into full swing during National Negro Newspaper week, March 1 to 7.

Pittsburg Courier

(This column represents the personal opinion of Mr. Schuyler and in no way reflects the editorial opinion of The Pittsburgh Courier.—The Editor)

Pittsburg, Penn.

FEB 28 1942

When I am wrong, I am willing to admit it. So I want to take this occasion to retract previous statements here and elsewhere that Negro troops should not be stationed in the South. It will be recalled that I contended that Negro troops should be stationed outside the South so long as the Administration persisted in its policy of segregating them into separate units and refusing to protect them against the Negro phobia of the worst white elements. I predicted that failure to do this would result in frequent clashes and more frequent humiliations.

The clashes have occurred and the humiliations have been legion, as every Negro painfully knows. Nevertheless, I take back what I said before, and am now asserting that training the Negro troops in the South is the best thing that could possibly happen. Therefore, I wish to commend the U. S. Government for its farsighted policy and to also congratulate the Black Cabinet in Washington, D. C., for not being swayed by my superficial reasoning. Further, I urge that all Negroes as soon as inducted into the service be shipped to the South immediately, preferably Georgia and Mississippi, and that the current policy of giving the green light to military police and local constabulary to whip black skulls be continued indefinitely.

Why do I make this flip-flop? Why do I indorse a policy that has sent several young Negroes to the Kingdom, subjected numerous others to physical injury and the remainder to bitter humiliation? Have I suddenly gone Uncle Tom? Have I decided to emulate our outstanding leaders and glued a bandanna handkerchief to my graying poll? Have I decided, like so many other erstwhile radicals, to woo reaction "for the duration"?

No, my dearly beloved, my crawfishing comes from Machialvellian calculation. I am looking a long way ahead, folks, to the time when these black boys will rush into battle against the Axis. Being a "Race Man," I want to see our soldiers acquit themseives better than their white buddies. I want to see them come back covered with glory and medals, so that we all may assume a more important role in American life. If they conduct themselves with great skill and courage on the battlefield, they may return to a Dixie in which they may be able to vote, hold office and enjoy equality with others who have risked their lives for democracy. Who can tell? Stranger things have happened! Even lynching may be stopped.

So, my fr—a—a—nds, here is the layout: Success in battle is the ultimate object of all military training. The best trained, most experienced soldiers are the most successful in battle. Thus, if Negro soldiers get the best military training, they are apt to be the most successful in battle. Follow me?

Well, suppose we had prevailed upon the Army moguls to train Negro soldiers in some part of the country where they would NOT be beaten up, shot down and humiliated? Suppose, as a result of this policy, the Negroes had been treated exactly like the white soldiers and made to feel equal and welcome everywhere and by everybody? Would the Negro not have been as soft and unprepared for warfare as his white buddies? Could we have been sure that he would ALWAYS do better than the white lads with equal training? No, say I. And the echo answers, No.

The present training for Negroes has been ideal preparation for modern warfare, which requires steady nerves, ability to withstand privation, experience in street and jungle fighting, and great resourcefulness. The white boys will have to wait until they actually start fighting the Axis to get such experience, whereas the Negro boys are getting it in the South long before they get to the front. It is excellent nerve training for young men in uniform to be insulted and humiliated, yet forced to restrain the understandably human urge to retaliate. It is excellent hardening for Negroes, supposedly training as warriors, to be assigned to washing, cleaning and digging for white soldiers supposedly their equals. The various clashes between Negro soldiers on the one side and combined military and local police on the other in Arkansas, Louisiana, Tennessee, North Carolina and other parts of Dixie, have given our lads needed training in street fighting, which will stand them in good stead when they are battling for democracy in white Australia or black Borneo. As the crowd of local Crackers in rural Arkansas forced these lads off the public highway, so will the Jap and German strafing planes compel them to seek cover beside the roads in Libya, West Africa and India.

After spending several weeks or months down South without getting into any fatal trouble with local police and populace, a Negro soldier is more resourceful than a Japanese sniper in the Sumatran or Borneo jungle. He is well experienced in street and alley fighting. His head having been whipped often by military and local police, he is hardened for hand-to-hand fighting. Where the white soldier has only faced blank cartridges on maneuvers, the Negro has had his baptism of fire in Fayetteville and Alexandria.

So the Negro soldier will acquit himself better on the fatal field of battle for all this fine home training. And that's why I now believe all of our boys should be trained in Dixie.

Selectees Jim-Crowed At Camel Camp Program

MAR 21 1942

FORT RILEY, Kas. — Colored selectees at the Replacement Center here were discriminated against when the Camel Cigarette Company gave a program at one of the theaters on this army reservation Wednesday night, February 25.

Several men from the all-Negro eighth squadron went to the theater early for the free show. They took seats on the front row but promptly were told to move to the rear of the theater in a section reserved for colored soldiers."

When the Negro soldiers moved to the back, white soldiers were ushered to the front row seats.

During the course of the show, which is taken weekly to various army camps to "bolster the morale" of the men in the armed services, cigarette girls with the assistance of ushers distributed free cigarettes to the soldiers.

The "section reserved for colored soldiers" was passed up entirely, the Negro men in arms receiving no cigarettes.

Negro selectees have expressed deep resentment at this treatment and protests are being sent to the U. S. War Department and to the Camel Cigarette Company.

MAR 28 1942

FORT JACKSON, S.C.—This is another army post in which there isn't a single colored commissioned officer—and where the colored soldiers do no soldiering. All the colored units here are work units. In describing Fort Jackson, which is situated about five miles from Columbia, S.C., you have to use adjectives. On the surface, it appears calm and pleasant; but underneath, where the colored men are concerned, it is mean and nasty and dripping with prejudice.

There are approximately 40,000 soldiers stationed here (the city of Columbia has but 60,000—and only 1200 of these soldiers are colored. Among the whites are Chinese and Filipinos, but the colored are far, far away across the railroad tracks.

They are assigned to the following units:

The Quartermaster Detachment, with 138 men; the 28th Quartermaster Regiment (three companies), about 350; the 91st Quartermasters (railhead), 150 men; Service Detachment, 200 men; 240th Quartermasters (now on maneuvers), 300 men; 67th Quartermasters (pack troops), about 100 men, and the Headquarters Detachment (administrative), about 25 men.

These are some of the things the men will tell you:

Not long ago a detail was working in Columbia, unloading supplies for the post. A ramshackle warehouse floor collapsed under the weight of too much freight and several men were injured. One had a broken knee and another a fractured shoulder bone.

A city ambulance was called in order to rush the injured men to medical attention, but when the ambulance arrived and the doctor saw that the men were colored, he refused to touch them or treat them — even though they were suffering and even though they wore the uniform of the U.S. Army.

They had to live there in pain until a white officer took one away in his personal car, and a colored non-com removed the other in his car.

KKK Raid Threatened

Not so long ago, also, a group of white soldiers representing an entire division sent word that they were going to turn Ku Kluxers long enough to chase the colored units clean off the post. They promised faithfully and solemnly that every colored soldier found on the grounds that night would be given a stiff going over.

Some few of the colored men ran off to the woods—they had no ammunition and most of them had no guns nor any place to get any. The rest drove nails into sticks and planks and sat down to wait. They were determined to go down fighting.

Late that night, when the Ku Kluxers were all set to invade the colored area, a white officer in the colored area saw all the lights burning and wanted to know what was happening.

The non-coms explained that they were waiting to defend themselves from the army Klansmen, and immediately the officer called up the officer in command of the white division and told him that if one white soldier entered the colored area that night to start a fight, he would give the colored soldiers guns and ammunition.

MAR 28 1942

The threat was effective, and the invasion was called off. But the evil lingers on. There is a lot of bad blood in Fort Jackson on both sides.

Three Soldiers Killed In Gun Battle At Dix

APR 4 - 1942

Five Wounded In 15-Minute Bloody Melee

FORT DIX, N. J.—(ANS) — A dispute of a "next" on a telephone in a near-by amusement center Friday had left two colored soldiers and a white military policeman dead and five soldiers wounded.

The soldiers fought a bloody 15-minute battle on the darkened plains of Fort Dix Thursday night.

The sudden, bitter outburst ended when Negro and white officers appeared on the scene and ordered the embattled white military and Negro enlisted men to cease firing.

A score of military police had been hastened to lay siege to barracks housing Negro troops from which it is alleged a fusillade had answered a bullet "fired over the head" of a flee Negro soldier.

According to Major Aage Woldike, post public relations officer, the battle was the "first manifestation of any ill-feeling among different races at the post."

ARGUE WITH M. P.

Negro and white soldiers reportedly had gathered as before in the Waldron Sports Palace, in the community of Pointville on the edge of the post, Major Woldike recounted, when a scuffle occurred among soldiers waiting in line to use the phone. The place contains a bar, a lunch counter, amusement and bowling alleys.

APR 4 - 1942

According to Major Woldike, an M. P. stationed at the place attempted to halt the argument and had words with a Negro soldier who allegedly lunged for the M. P.'s pistol, ripping the holster, but failing to grasp the weapon. The soldier is said to have run outside and the M. P. fired a shot after ordering him to halt. This shot brought forth a fusillade from the barracks across the roadside from the amusement center, it was stated.

The troops had been on the firing range in the afternoon and, although regulations require all troops to be searched upon leaving, some must have salvaged ammunition and taken it with them, the public relations officer said.

The summoned Military Police deployed on teh open spaces front the barracks. More than 50 bullets were fired before the shooting ended, according to reports.

The dead were listed as follows:

Private Isaac W. Brown, of Henderson, Tennessee.

Corporal W. E. Hall, no address available.

Private Manie W. Strough, white, of Honeycamp, Va., a military policeman.

Race Relations in La. Camp Considered Good

JUN 7 - 1941

CAMP LIVINGSTONE, La. — (ANP) — Among the 32,000 troops stationed here are 6000 colored soldiers who mingle with the white soldiers, who are largely from Wisconsin and Michigan, in relationships that can be described as fairly cordial.

There are nineteen colored commissioned officers, fifteen medical officers, two dentists and two chaplains. Two of the officers are captains and all others are lieutenants.

The nearest city is Alexandria which has its prejudices, but none more pronounced than any other southern community. At one time there was a tendency toward considerable mingling of white draftees from Wisconsin and Michigan with certain types of colored girls. Their appearances on the streets with these women brought protests from residents and the practice has since been checked.

Hospital Belies S. C. Attitude

The base hospital here has accommodations for 1500 patients with identical equipment in the colored and white wards. Some of the colored doctors are working in white wards, a situation that belies the attitude of certain high army officials who some months ago said the inclusion of colored doctors on the staffs of army hospitals was unthinkable.

The medical conferences and meetings are attended by colored and white officers alike with entire equality in the presentation and discussion of cases. Incidentally, most of the white medical officers are southern men.

Furniture For Negro Soldiers' Fellowship Room Asked By Clubs

Federated Group Aims To Equip Lounging Quarters At McClellan

Complete furnishing of a fellowship room for Negro soldiers at Ft. McClellan is the object of a statewide drive of the Alabama Federation of Women's Clubs, announced Sunday by Mrs. R. L. Ogden, state defense recreation and youth cooperation chairman, and Mrs. Harry Bradley, state national defense chairman.

Federated clubs throughout the state have been asked by the two chairmen to contribute articles of furniture needed for the room, which will be used in leisure-time hours of soldiers at the training center.

Clubs in the state should report or send their contributions to the Rev. Frank Ledford, special services officer at the fort, and Birmingham clubs may send their furnishings through Mrs. Ogden or Mrs. Bradley.

A report of each article sent for the Negro fellowship room should be made to one of the two chairmen, and all furniture sent directly to the fort should be marked "Alabama Federation of Women's Clubs Negro Fellowship Room."

Federated club members in the state have completed furnishing of six fellowship rooms for white soldiers at the fort, and expect to continue their work for both white and Negro soldiers.

Although 90 fellowship rooms have been furnished by societies, clubs, churches and labor organizations of the state, 36 rooms still lack furniture, according to the Rev. Mr. Ledford.

Articles needed to furnish a room include a piano, 10 lounging chairs, four floor lamps, one victrola, two sofas, four reading lamps, one radio, six card tables and a ping pong table.

A plaque, bearing the name of the Alabama Federation of Women's Clubs, will be placed in the completd room.

All furnishings contributed by clubs should be new or second-hand in good condition, Mrs. Ogden stressed.

Fort Benning Soldier Writes About Conditions in Camps

Editor's Note: This article by William (Daddy Pete) Robinson, who describes himself as a 'soldier of the U. S. A. of the Negro race,' is reproduced in much the same language in which it was received. It came from Ft. Benning, Ga.

BY WILLIAM (DADDY PETE) ROBINSON

My story which you are about to read is of the Negro soldiers who are now serving in the United States Army. What I would like to know and ask the President is what are Negro soldiers considered—soldiers or dogs? The way they are treated in the southern States you wouldn't know. It is unimaginable. Instead of getting prepared to fight the Japs or the Germans, it seems as though we have a greater battle here to fight. These southern non-coms are nothing but the white man's Uncle Toms.

The northern boy catches particular h——. The bus drivers in the South carry blackjacks and guns. These white M. P.'s are awful. I don't see how such a thing can exist in a democracy. Not the way the Negro soldier is treated.

A friend of mine received a letter from a friend of his in Shelby, Miss. He said he'd rather be in jail than to be treated the way the white people are treating the soldiers of the Negro group. He said they don't even want them to ride on the buses. Don't want to give them any transportation. The bus drivers, he said, will shoot or hit you with sticks just as if you were nothing at all. He said there was a riot, that soldiers from New York and other northern States went back to camp to get guns, but some how some one stopped the trouble.

He said he was afraid to write the rest of the story. The people of the Negro race should really get together. Send the President a petition. So that the many mothers of these boys can see that their sons get treated like human beings. Like American citizens of the U. S. A., for which they are soldiering.

Negro M. P.'s at Fort Dix Turn Tables; Beat Up White Soldier

(Special Correspondence)

AUG 1 - 1942

TRENTON, N. J.—South Jersey's ABC plan on handling colored soldiers (Jim Crowing 'em out of taverns, etc.) came near causing another riot here last Sunday, when a white soldier was ordered off North Willow Street (the colored section) and severely beaten because he refused to go.

The victim, Private 1942 F. Johnson, an MP from Fort Dix, was lying on the sidewalk when police arrived, suffering from body bruises and a kidney injury.

Around him were four colored MP's, Sergeant Don Blackmon, famous wrestling champion, who is well known in Harlem, Corporal Preston Conners, Private Julius Carrier and Private Omar Martin. The white soldier, they told police, failed to obey Sergeant Blackmon's order to leave the "colored district."

AUG 1 1942

Lieutenant Colonel Lewis Sussman's investigation revealed, he told reporters, that the colored MP's were doing their duty. "In fact," Sussman said, "I have received many reports from Trenton that the colored boys are doing a fine job in maintaining order."

Local Police Captain Edward Barry did not agree, however, with the Army official's statement. "There appears," he said, "to be no reason why four soldiers should have to beat up one while trying to arrest him."

As a result of the opposing viewpoints and Trenton's policy of keeping white and colored people separate in public gathering places, the investigation was still under way this week but, like the riot several months ago at Fort Dix, the true story will probably not be told until after the war.

Senator Asks Army To Keep Northern Negroes in North

Birmingham, Ala., Aug 2 (AP).—Senator John D. Bankhead (Democrat), Alabama, has suggested to Gen. George C. Marshall, Army chief of staff, that Northern Negro soldiers be quartered in Northern States only, the Senator revealed today in a letter to John Temple Graves of the Birmingham Age-Herald.

AUG 3 1942

The letter, quoted in Graves' editorial column, says "the best friends of the Negroes in the South are very much concerned about the growing anxiety that race conflicts may break out and lead to bloodshed."

Bankhead then suggested that if Negro soldiers must be trained in the South "as a result of social or political pressure, can't you place Southern Negro soldiers there and place the Northern Negro soldiers in the North where their presence is not likely to lead to race wars."

URGES ARMY TO KEEP NEGRO TROOPS NORTH

Senator Bankhead Says South Fears Racial Outbreaks

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Aug. 2 (AP)—Senator John D. Bankhead has suggested to General George C. Marshall, Army Chief of Staff, that Northern Negro soldiers be quartered in Northern States only, the Senator revealed today in a letter to John Temple Graves of The Birmingham Age-Herald.

AUG 3 1942

The letter, quoted in Mr. Graves's editorial, says:

"The best friends of the Negroes in the South are very much concerned about the growing anxiety that race conflicts may break out and lead to bloodshed.

"Our people feel that the government is doing a disservice to the war effort by locating Negro troops in the South in immediate contact with white troops at a time when race feeling among the Negroes has been aroused and when all the energies of both the whites and the blacks should be devoted to the war effort."

Mr. Bankhead then said to General Marshall that if Negro soldiers must be trained in the South "as a result of social or political pressure, can't you place Southern Negro soldiers there and place the Northern Negro soldiers in the North, where their presence is not likely to lead to race wars?"

ONE OF TWO THINGS HAPPENING

As we see it, there is one of two things happening in our country that is quite unhealthy, not only from the present war standpoint, but for the future of our whole country, North as well as South. Our War department is either ignorant of our people, or there is Hitler influence at work in our War department, either of which is a crime. The thing we have reference to, is sending Northern colored soldiers South for training or induction into the service. This lesson should have been learned during World War No. 1.

We are glad to see Senator Bankhead of Alabama, finally get up the courage to "suggest" to Gen. Marshall "that Northern negro soldiers be quartered in Northern States only."

Many observing Southern people have sensed what is happening in the South already, from a race viewpoint, and it does not look good for either the negro or the white people, and we might say, to those of the north equally with those of the south. There is a certain element of northern white people, and we might say of some sections of the South; Atlanta, for instance, who are posing as friends to the colored race, who are responsible for what is happening. These people are not friends to the colored race, as has been many times demonstrated, and will be again demonstrated, if there isn't a check put on them soon, and a better place could not be found to start than with the first lady of the land, and a number of National magazines.

The negro of the South who falls for the folly of believing: "now is the time to exert our equality desires," regardless from whom it emanates, is only placing thorns in his bed, and all right thinking and right living colored people realize this, and will not be led astray by cranks, fanatics or criminally inclined people.

Never was there a better place to apply that old slogan: "A stitch in time saves nine." A la Germany.

Bankhead's Suggestion

Senator John H. Bankhead is not one of the latter-day liberals who dons a pair of colored glasses when he looks at problems affecting the welfare of his nation or that of his native Southland. He keeps his feet on the ground and makes no excursions off the deep end on any subject. Therefore, if General Marshall is as wise as we believe he is he will give careful study to a suggestion which the Alabama Senator has made in reference to training Negro soldiers in the South.

Through no fault of its own outside agitators have come into the South with a plan for revolutionizing its way of life. They have chosen the period of a great war emergency which demands national unity as the proper time to launch a social revolution having as its prime purpose the breakdown of Southern segregation laws and the fostering of social equality between races. That the South will resist with all its power this meddling by the spreaders of dissension goes without saying.

So, Senator Bankhead, in a forthright letter to General Marshall, suggests that if the War Department is determined to train Negro soldiers in the South that only Southern Negroes be trained here. Let Northern camps, he says, train the Northern Negroes. If that suggestion is followed the agitators will have little chance to tear down racial harmony and create strife.

The Southern Negro knows the South and its people. The intelligent members of the race know that the South's failure to give the Negro full educational and economic opportunities is the result of the South's own poor economic lot. Knowing these things they are not resentful. They also know, from experience, that segregation laws are as much for their protection as for the protection of whites. And they know it is unwise and undesirable to ask for social equality.

But the Northern Negro does not know these things. He has been encouraged and often made belligerent by radicals like Mrs. Roosevelt who do not have the slightest conception of the problems involved in maintaining smooth relations between the races in the South. Thousands of them now being trained in the South are being incited by their radical and unpatriotic advisers to demand and get social recognition because they wear the uniform of the United States Army. If trouble comes—and it surely will if these Negroes persist in following their present leandership — responsibility will lie directly at the door of those in Washington who have inspired it. No other single individual will have contributed as much to the chaos which will follow as has Mrs. Roosevelt.

If General Marshall can resist political pressure and follow Senator Bankhead's suggestion he will have done much toward relieving the feeling which is rapidly spreading throughout the South. It is far better to use a little common sense and tact in avoiding trouble than to wait until it has developed and then try to correct it. We hope General Marshall is smart enough to see how essential it is to maintain racial harmony as a means of encouraging national unity.

Salute To Butner

The largest flag in the nation has unfurled its stars and stripes in the winds of freedom blowing over Camp Butner—symbol of assurance that the sun shall rise for all the world, not merely for Japan.

The flag-raising ceremony, an occasion of solemnity and reverence, Tuesday officially dedicated Camp Butner to the service of the nation. THE HERALD takes this opportunity to welcome the camp and its personnel to the community.

Camp Butner has chosen to set out its shingle in the heart of the educational center of the Carolinas. As Governor Broughton pointed out in his dedication address, the camp is within 20 miles of four great educational institutions, Duke University, the University of North Carolina, State College and Wake Forest College. These are the largest. Within this sphere are smaller women's colleges which have contributed to the higher learning and culture of the nation for hundreds of years. Within this sphere, also, is the North Carolina College for Negroes, an institution which has given its graduates, not only knowledge and culture, but a virile spirit of leadership that has been a God-send to the peoples of a one-time down-trodden race.

In the midst of this atmosphere of educational achievement Camp Butner takes its rightful place, not as just a waiting station for warriors destined to perform deeds of valor on far-flung fighting fronts of the United Nations, but as an institution of learning.

Camp Butner is little concerned with the romantical aspects of eighteenth-century literature, but the draftees and volunteers there are students just as surely as are the young men and women matriculating in the great universities of the land. The soldiers at Camp Butner, privates and officers, are there to learn. They are there to learn the technique and strategy of modern warfare. They are there to learn to survive when assailed by all the ruthless savageness of a cunning and malicious enemy bent on total destruction. They are there to strengthen their bodies, to broaden their minds, to practice cooperative living and unselfish teamwork in the hurdling of the many hazards besetting the perilous pathway to victory. They are there to learn to distinguish between a judicious use of smashing force and the shallow intimidation of a stupid bully.

Camp Butner has a tremendous job, manifold in its vital aspects and never-ending ramifications. It has problems unknown to the university. It has a duty to the youth of the nation and to the Founding Fathers of these United States.

THE HERALD, spokesman for the community, is proud of Butner and of the essential freedoms for which it stands. To its many soldiers and officers we offer the handclasp of friendship, the salute of respect, the pledge of cooperation in its task ahead.

Would Train Only Southern Negroes in South

BIRMNGHAM, Ala., Aug. 3 (AP). Senator Bankhead (D., Ala.) belives that if Negro soldiers must be trained in the South, they should be Southern Negroes.

The Senator revealed in a letter to John Temple Graves, columnist for the Birmingham Age-Herald, that he had suggested to General Marshall, Army Chief of staff, that Northrn Negro soldiers should be quartered in Northern states only.

"Our people feel that the government is doing a disservice to the war effort by locating Negro troops in the South in immediate contact with white troops at a time when race feeling among the Negroes has been aroused and when all the energies of both the whites and the blacks should be devoted to the war effort," he wrote Marshall.

Bankhead declared that "the best friends of the Negroes in the South are very much concerned about the growing anxiety that race conflicts may break out and lead to bloodshed."

If Negro soldiers must be trained in the South "as a result of social or political pressure," the letter said, "can't you place the Southern Negro soldiers there and place the Northern Negro soldiers in the North, where their presence is not likely to lead to race wars."

Tifton, Ga., Gazette
August 4, 1942

Senator John Bankhead, of Alabama, suggests that, if negro troops must be trained in the South, they be southern negro troops, rather than those from the northern states. Such a plan likely would meet with the approval of the negroes, themselves, too. A lot of the northern negroes are afraid of the treatment they would get in the South, while the southern negro usually believes that his best friends are in the South. Such a plan probably would meet with approval all around, but the Army may not approve. To the Army, a soldier is a soldier, regardless of color. All are treated alike.

Army Chief Rejects Plan For Negroes

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13 (AP)—Gen. George C. Marshall, Army Chief of Staff, has rejected the suggestion of Senator Bankhead (D., Ala.) that Northern Negro troops be stationed only in the North to avoid any possible racial difficulties, aides to the senator disclosed today.

General Marshall said in a letter to the senator that military policy must dictate the locating of troops although full consideration is given to the sentiments of civilian communities adjacent to the posts. Bankhead's letter to the general followed a disturbance involving some Negro troops at Jacksonville, Fla.

Marshall said:

"The War Department has given careful study to the assignment of troops and fully recognizes that harmonious relations between the soldiers at any particular camp and the adjacent civilian population is conducive to high morale and contributes to military efficiency.

"I am convinced, however, that the only sound basis upon which we can proceed in the prosecution of the war is to station our troops in accordance with the dictates of military necessity. Therefore while our policy in general is when practicable to station Northern troops in Northern stations and Southern troops in the South and also to station colored troops in localities where a commensurate Negro civilian population exists, the implementation of the policy must be secondary to military requirements."

Problem Affecting Negro Soldiers At Benning Emphasized

Vice conditions in the Columbus area were discussed by local and military officials at a secret session here yesterday. After the session Colonel Walter S. Fulton, commanding officer at Fort Benning, declared, "a new accord has been reached by us in control of the prostitution and venereal disease situation."

Special emphasis was given treatment of the problem of vice as it is affecting the Negro soldiery at Benning, Colonel Fulton said.

The session was barred to reporters, but each confree at the vice roundtable was interviewed as he emerged, only to say, substantially:

"You will have to see Colonel Fulton for any statement."

The "roundtable", called suddenly by Colonel Fulton and with no advance notice to others than the conferees, assembled members of the city commission, Mayor Edward S. Murrah and Police Chief John G. Newberry with army authorities.

At the conclusion of this one-hour session, leading figures in county government were called, including county commissioners and County Police Chief J. W. Satterfield.

Present also were Capt. J. A. Loveless, Benning venereal control officer, and Dr. W. H. Aufranc, of the venereal disease branch of the U. S. Public Health service. The latter two, recommended the revocation of beer and whisky licenses of two Negro resorts before last Tuesday's city commission hearing.

Dr. Arthur Fink, the army's district representative in the vice control campaign, sat through both branches of the session.

Colonel Fulton, emerging from the closely guarded round-table, said he believed that the vice situation among the white element of the Benning soldiery was definitely improving, but expressed concern over the fact that about 70 per cent of the prostitution and venereal disease blight is among the Negro troops.

What executive action was taken at the conference, if any, was withheld by the conferees. Colonel Fulton said he was satisfied with the cooperation being given by civil authorities in vice control, and expected even fuller coordination of military and local law-enforcement officers as a result of the conference.

Negroes and Whites Learn Together To Be Officers

OCT 9 - 1942

By WILL V. NEELY

FORT BENNING, Ga.—Here at Fort Benning, deep in the southland, nestled among the Georgia pines and hills is America's large infantry school.

Like a gigantic chain, every week or so hundreds of embryo infantry officers are graduated and assigned to units of Uncle Sam's rapidly expanding army.

Among those graduated are a large number of Negroes gathered from every section of the United States. Upon arrival at Fort Bennig the candidate is met at the station and escorted to the casual battalion for processing. He is then assigned to a class in one of the numerous companies in the area.

OCT 9 - 1942

Negroes and whites attend classes together, share the same quarters and eat together in the same mess hall. They are given equal chances with the white students and act in the capacity of student company commander, first sergeant, platoon leaders and squad leaders.

One platoon in the 4th company, Second Student Training regiment, consists entirely of Negroes and its leader is Lt. J. McCarthy, a member of the school staff. The 4th company is commanded by Capt. Gilbert A. Williams with the assistance of a staff of highly efficient officers.

The officers give the colored students the same cheerful consideration and observation as the white students. Great interest is taken in the personal welfare of each man and the student soon learns to place the utmost confidence in his officers.

The training is the most rigorous possible under the present emergency and students have little time other than to study and keep abreast of the stiff schedule of the infantry school.

OCT 9 - 1942

Excellent food and high morale keep the students enthused in the preparation of their work and studies. They realize that the conditioning received at the school is a part of the government's plan for an army second to none.

To Uncle Sam it makes no difference whether a candidate is Negro or white as long as he has the qualities so necessary for the making of a first class officer.

Negro students know this and realize that the gold bars with which they are being decorated is a symbol of true American tradition and democracy.

Negro Leaders Flay Bankhead

Unanimous — and vehement — condemnation of Sen. John D. Bankhead's proposal that Northern Negro soldiers be quartered only in Northern camps came from national and New York Negro leaders yesterday.

The Alabama Senator, in a letter to the editor of a Birmingham newspaper, said he had asked Gen. George C. Marshall to place only Southern Negro soldiers in the South, and put Northern Negroes in states "where their presence is not likely to lead to race wars."

"Our people," Bankhead told Marshall, "feel that the Government is doing a disservice to the war effort by locating Negro troops in the South in immediate contact with white troops at a time when race feeling among the Negroes has been aroused and when all the energies of both the whites and the blacks should be devoted to the war effort."

'Abdication of Power'

Walter White, secretary of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, immediately wrote Gen. Marshall:

"To follow Sen. Bankhead's suggestion would be for the United States to admit its own impotence against Jim Crow. It would show that the War Dept. hasn't the guts to protect its soldiers in uniform if they have dark skins. It would be in effect an abdication of power by the Government, an admission that the South is stronger than the country as a whole and able to impose its prejudices no matter how detrimental to the war effort."

Other reactions in New York:

Charles Collins, chairman of the Negro Labor Victory Committee:

"To advocate that Northern Negro troops not be stationed in the South is to advocate separation of the Southern States from the Nation and the democratic cause for which we fight. Such a procedure would harm national unity and cater to the poll-taxers, lynchers, Ku Kluxers and fifth columnists who welcome any opportunity to separate North from South, white from Negro. It is not the Negro soldier who must leave the South, it is the system which segregates and humiliates him."

'Good Enough to Reap Rights'

Hubert T. Delany, appointed justice of the Domestic Relations Court by Mayor La Guardia last Saturday, a member of the National Board of Directors of the USO and chairman of the Harlem-Riverside Civilian Defense Council:

"Senator Bankhead fortunately does not run the country. It is ridiculous to permit racial or religious bigots to determine Army policy. The war and the peace to follow can't be won if the morale of Negro soldiers is to be further undermined. If a Negro American is good enough to wear a uniform, he ought to be good enough to reap the rights and benefits his country offers other men in uniform."

White Troops Annoy Girls

SEP 5 1942

CHARLOTTE, N.C.—The constant ramblings of groups of white soldiers through colored areas during the recent maneuvers created a huge outburst of dissatisfaction on the part of colored citizens who contend that the safety of colored women was threatened.

SEP 5 1942

Special note was taken in the First Ward around E. Sixth Street and in Second Ward around S. Brevard Street. On E. Sixth Street, white soldiers yelled at colored women who were on their porches or sitting in their doors.

On S. Brevard Street, one inebriated white soldier bought a half-dozen bottles of beer at a colored cafe and reportedly sent them to some colored girls. Other instances were also reported.

However, the maneuvers ended last week, leaving only the soldiers from Camp Sutton, Morris Field and the local quartermaster depot.

TROOP TRAINING

We are incdlined to agree with General Marshal that the Department of War should allot troops for training in sections where there might not be reasonable fears that there cannot be amity and cordial relations established. It has been claimed that too many northern negroes are being placed in the south and that confusion and disorder has resulted.

The south can well afford to be be quartered with negro troops because it understands the negro and is will to do more for them than anyone else. However they do draw the line at those who come from another sector, who insist on breaking down an irrevocable rule of segregation that has been kept sacred for many years and at great cost.

The negro troops in the main are taking their medicine in the army just as white troops are doing it and are going to make good soldiers, despite the tradition of some of their critics that they are not of a type that really makes a force fitted to meet the Germans or the treacherous Japs. That will have no effect on the matter for there are enough jobs in this man's war to go around and every man can find something that he can do and do well.

There will be thousands of troops who will misbehave, white or black and there is no way around, never has been in fact. The communities in which they are lodged owe it to them to be courteous and friendly but not to give up their traditions and customs because of some alien and antagonistic elements. They are not going to be willing to do that when the question is one of purity of race, despite the abuses and elementally unsound phases that have been developed here and elsewhere. The job is to keep down those evils rather than to emphasize and magnify them.

Bankhead Recognizes Issue

Senator John H. Bankhead has written General Marshall, Chief of Staff, a letter protesting against the friction that is being created between the races in the South and in referring to the influences from outside that are helping to create this friction he speaks of "the social and political pressure" that is causing Negro soldiers from the North to be stationed in the South.

The gravity of the situation, as viewed by Senator Bankhead, is reflected in these words "The best friends of the Negro in the South are very much concerned about the growing anxiety that race conflicts may break out and lead to bloodshed. Our people feel that the government is doing a disservice to the war effort by locating Negro troops in the South in immediate contact with white troops at a time when race feeling among the Negroes has been aroused and when all the energies of both the white and black should be devoted to the war effort."

Senator Bankhead then said to General Marshall: "If you feel obliged to have Negro soldiers in the South, as a result of social or political pressure, can't you place Southern Negroes there and place the other Negro soldiers in the North, where their presence is not likely to lead to race wars?"

This is a fine and sensible stand but Senator Bankhead might have rendered an even more helpful service by demanding that the "social and political pressure" which now is being exerted in Washington in an effort to put over the racial equality movement should at least be relaxed for the duration of the war.

The purpose of American troops, white and black, is to defeat the common enemy and to use the Negro troops in promoting a senseless social experiment is outrageous.

Greenwood, S. C. Index-Journal
August 4, 1942

MAY BE WISE

Senator Bankhead's suggestion to General George Marshall that Northern Negro troops be trained in Northern States may be a wise suggestion.

Whatever friction there may be in the South it was not started by white people of the South.

Neither is it the work of Fifth Columnists from Germany or any other foreign foe.

The blame for it will have to be laid at certain doors here in this country.

It is incumbent on every white citizen not only in the South but elsewhere to discourage anything in the way of inflamatory talk or action.

And every move which will tend to eliminate friction should be regarded as a patriotic act.

We should deplore anything which tends to disturb the peaceful relations which have obtained as a whole in the South.

A Word Of Caution

Within the next few days quarantine restrictions normally imposed on inductees will be lifted on thousands of recent arrivals at Camp Rucker. Men now confined to the post will be free to apply for leaves for the first time since their arrival. As Dothan is the largest town in the Rucker area it is natural to suppose that many of the new soldiers will move in this direction at the first opportunity.

Despite its meagre recreational facilities, Dothan will welcome the men from Rucker and will endeavor to make their visits as pleasant as possible. At the sam time all thoughtful persons will recogniz that, in any large group of men there will be found some who are not amenable to authority, either military or civil. It will be most unusual if a few of this type do not make themselves thoroughly undesirable guests. But the indiscretions of the few should not be used to the discredit of the many whose behavior will be exemplary.

* * *

Either by accident or design the War Department has seen fit to station at Camp Rucker a large number of Negro soldiers, a majority of whom come from Northern States. In some instances they are officered by men from these same States, men who are unfamiliar and unsympathetic with the ways and traditions of the South.

These Negroes wear the uniform of the soldier of the United States Army. As such they are deserving of the respect and consideration of Americans everywhere. And because Dothan and the entire Wiregrass have a reputation for harmonious relations between races; because more patriotic people cannot be found than those of this section, the Negro soldiers will be given fair and just treatment.

Yet it must be recognized that it is unfortunate for all concerned that Negro soldiers in such large numbers should be stationed here. In the first place, Dothan's normal Negro population is approximately 6,000, far too small to provide recreation and entertainment for the number of Negroes stationed at Camp Rucker. In the second place, the Negro soldiers, coming as they do from Northern States, are new to the ways of the South and will likely find them objectionable and unintelligible. In the third place, their white officers from the North—judging from some who have already made scenes here — are neither disposed nor qualified to give their troops the counsel and guidance that will enable them to fit themselves into the pattern of Southern life. In the fourth place, their arrival in the deep South comes at a time when certain ill-advised radicals are attempting to stage a social revolution which adds to the perplexities and difficulties of the problem.

For the benefit of the newcomers, and in the hope of exciting the sympathetic interest of the intelligent and level-headed members of both races, this newspaper sounds a word of caution.

Segregation of races has been practiced for centuries in the South. It is not a new thing designed for the humiliation of the Negro. It is the outgrowth of many years of experience and has been adopted as the only means of insuring racial harmony. Without segregation there would be strife and disorders beyond measure. This fact is well known to Southern Negro leaders and is accepted by them as being in the best interest of their race.

As a result, Negro soldiers visiting Dothan will find here, as in every other Southern community, that certain safeguards have been erected. They will not, for instance, be admitted to cafes and restaurants catering exclusively to white trade; they will find special provisions made for their comfort in theatres and other public places, but they will not be welcomed to sections reserved for white persons. In a majority of cases they will find these places plainly marked to avoid confusion and embarrassment.

Without attempting to enter into a debate on the merits of this system of segregation we merely point out its existence. Knowing the South and its peoples, knowing their temperament and their traditions, we also know that there is no power on this earth that can at this time change them. Those who take the advice of radicals who do not know these things and undertake to force a change are treading dangerous ground that will surely erupt and consume them.

* * *

A temperate approach and a tolerant attitude on the part of all concerned will do much toward helping all of us over a tough spot that none of us has sought.

Army Sets Expenditure Of $132,000 On Quarters For Negroes at Cmp Croft

Building Program "Booms" With War Construction

Approximately $132,000 is to be spent to provide quarters for Camp Croft's negro service command in the Tenth Regional (negro) area, according to announcement made by government officials in Washington yesterday.

This announcement came in line with a number of indications that building was on the "coming boom" in the Spartanburg area. Planned are other Croft facilities—including an induction center—a $45,000 county health clinic and construction of permanent facilities for the air corps at the Fighter Replacement Training center at Memorial airport.

On Monday it was learned that the Van Winkle Construction company of Atlanta, Ga., had been awarded a contract on the low bid of $88,350 for the construction of 12 buildings in this camp area, the project to include 12 buildings—six 64-men barracks, two mess halls, two store houses and two lavatories.

$170,000 Cost Set

The $130,000 figure boosts to $17,-000 the amount known as earmarked for new building at the camp. Under the direction of army engineers a physical examination center will be built for the new Camp Croft induction center at a cost of $40,000.

Total expense of Croft projects at best can be estimated to cost several thousand dollars more than the top figure listed since they involve erection of four barracks, an administration building, a recreation center, a mess hall, a supply house and a bath house out of material being moved to Croft from the Newberry Civilian Conservation corps camp which is being abandoned. No estimate has been made on this expense.

Concerning the Tenth Regiment project, Captain R. H. Vogel, chief engineer with the war department's operations branch, yesterday advised Senator Maybank and Representative Bryson that bids on the program were opened July 3 at the Atlanta office of the Fourth corps area but that the contract award had not reached Washington.

The army official said that members of the negro service command include soldiers assigned permanently to camp maintenance duty, embracing chiefly common labor assignments.

This week, Brig. Gen. C. M. Wash, commandant, Third Air Force Fighter command, reported from Tampa, Fla., that the Spartanburg Fighter Replacement Training center at Memorial airport would be a "permanent installation" to be "expanded as necessary." In this connection, the army's air corps headquarters advised Senator Maybank and Representative Bryson yesterday that results of a preliminary survey of the airport to determine permanent installation needs have reached Washington and that the air corps has filed suggestions for a program, details of which were not immediately available. However, it was said that early action is expected.

High Priority Rating

Also from Washington, it was learned that A-8 priority had been given for the $45,000 clinic William M. Fine, Spartanburg contractor, submitted the only bid upon yesterday. Ed Dwyer, War Production board engineer advised Representative Bryson that this priority would be "high enough to take care of general materials necessary to complete the project." Dwyer assured Representative Bryson that special priority ratings for essential materials would also doubtless be granted.

Concerning the clinic, Federal Works agency advised newsmen that the bid must be checked against the cost of materials before the contract may be awarded. Priorities order must then come before the building program is started.

The clinic will be government-financed and would adjoin the present health department quarters on property adjacent to the General hospital. Present quarters will be used as a dormitory and for other purposes when the new structure is erected.

A Modicum Of Democracy Seems To Work Well At Ga. Army School

By WILL V. NEELY

FORT BENNING, Ga. — (ANP)—Here at Fort Benning, deep in the southland, nestled among the Georgia pines and hills is America's large infantry school.

Like a gigantic chain, every week or so hundreds of embryo infantry officers are graduated and assigned to units of Uncle Sam's rapidly expanding army.

OCT 24 1942

Among those graduated are a large number of Negroes gathered from every section of the United States. Upon arrival at Fort Benning the candidate is met at the station and escorted to the casual battalion for processing. He is then assigned to a class in one of the numerous companies in the area.

Negroes and whites attend classes together, share the same quarters and eat together in the same mess hall. They are given equal chances with the white students and act in the capacity of student company commander, first sergeant, platoon leaders and squad leaders.

One platoon in the 4th company, Second Student Training regiment, consists entirely of Negroes and its leader is Lt. J. McCarthy, a member of the school staff. The 4th company is commanded by Capt. Gilbert A. Williams with the assistance of a staff of highly efficient officers.

The officers give the colored students the same cheerful consideration and observation as the white students. Great interest is taken in the personal welfare of each man and the student soon learns to place the utmost confidence in his officers.

The training is the most rigorous possible under the present emergency and students have little time other than to study and keep abreast of the stiff schedule of the infantry school.

OCT 24 1942

Excellent food and high morale keep the students enthused in the preparation of their work and studies. They realize that the conditioning received at the school is a part of the government's plan for an army second to none.

To Uncle Sam it makes no difference whether a candidate is Negro or white as long as he has the qualities so necessary for the making of a first class officer.

Negro students know this and realize that the gold bars with which they are being decorated are a symbol of true American tradition and democracy.

Where Jim Crow Blinks

OCT 24 1942

Shades of Edgar Brown, who pleaded sometime ago for a Jim Crow officer's training camp! If you want inspiration and discovery that democracy is actually creeping out from under the blanket of segregation, go down to Fort Sill and make observations around the Officers Training Center.

OCT 24 1942

We arrived at Fort Sill (Oklahoma) Monday afternoon, and in company with the director of the USO Center, Mr. C. E. Singer, and Walter White, executive secretary of the N. A. A. C. P., we drove to the officers training center, and saw there what every white and Black American should know about.

We arrived around six o'clock when the officers were marching in from field work. We had wanted to see the officers at mess, but we did not go on the reservation with proper credentials to make this observation, but we did see an eyeful from our seats in the old Buick.

"Look yonder!" I called to my companions, as the first squad or section of officers came into view.

My excitement was aroused similarly as it was several years ago as I drove into Memphis and discovered a Negro running up a telephone pole. I thought that Memphis Negro was playing. We knew he would be if he ran up a telephone pole in Oklahoma. But we discovered when we arrived in close proximity to the Memphis black that he was working for the telephone company doing the same things white folk do for pay down in Oklahoma.

I could not believe my eyes Monday when I discovered that squad of white officers passing right before my eyes was actually commanded by a Negro. Marching straight and erect, with his piercing eyes constantly flashing at his white comrades, I saw him give orders that were instantly obeyed.

"Is he actually in command?" I turned to Director Singer and asked that question.

"Yes, he's in command, and if you'll stay here long enough you will see that democracy is actually practiced in this officers training school.

OCT 24 1942

We drove around into a more advantageous position for we observed that most of the units were discharged at a certain place.

Heavens! The squad that arrived when we stopped in a small, seemingly unused zone, had three Negroes marching, indiscriminately placed. They broke rank right before my very eyes, and the two Negroes and two whites dashed into the same hut.

Well blow me down! Do you know that on the government reservation at Fort Sill white and black youths are housed together? According to Director Singer, there has never been any difficulty or strained relationship of any kind. Those white and colored officers I saw dash into that hut were diving in home. Edgar Brown ought to see that.

A New York colored trainee who knew Singer, walked up and we started talking with him.

"Yes, we eat and sleep together, and you'd be surprised to know that one of the boys in my hut is from Florida. I never had a better friend in my life. I believe he'd fight for every right I believe is mine."

Chaplain W. H. Gross, of Greenwich, Connecticut, a fine, tall specimen of black manhood, told us in his quarters that there were somewhere around seventy-five Negro officers in training.

OCT 24 1942

Our New York boy told us that he had received training at Forts Bragg and Benning. "But conditions were terrible there," he said.

"I've made this discovery at Fort Sill," he said. "If the army will get rid of its jim crow rules and segregation policies the men will get along together."

Fort Huachuca Largest Military Command for Negroes in the World

Nov. 14, 1942

FORT HUACHUCA, Arizona. —Just outside the gates of this historic post, squatting at the foot of Arizona's picturesque mountains lie the unincorporated community of Fry, Arizona. Like the proverbial mushroom, Fry sprang up over night and grew by the grace and nature of the military patronage that so generously contributed to its survival out of necessity and not by choice.

In Fry, one has found the good with the bad, and needless to say, the evil has tried to run rampant to such an extent that the good would soon be decidedly the second best in the field. Canteens, theatres, grocery stores, sandwich shops and the USO Center are landmarks of decency and respect, that are certainly assets to the military assembled here. They patriotically cooperate with the Post Command for the best interest of the soldiers and should be given every chance to live and thrive in a clean atmosphere.

Nov. 14, 1942

Colonel Edwin N. Hardy, post commander, and his staff demand that Fort Huachuca be exposed to only the best in the way of clean, wholesome recreation. The improvements now being inaugurated with the cooperation of the Federal Government's WPA, the State of Arizona and patriotically financed by colored business men, with the entire project under the control of the military, will undoubtedly give Fry that necessary clean bill of health.

The Command at Fort Huachuca realizing this fact, and because it feels a protective responsibility to those men who are preparing to fight the Battle of World Survival and Decency, makes it known that only the best will be offered these men of Huachuca. Good, clean recreation is provided for all men who are in the throes of rigid military training, because after a hard day in the field, relaxation is necessary so that the man who carries America's colors into the fray can greet the new day refreshed and better able to "carry on."

This is the type of American soldier that is needed to whip the Japa-nazis. With its theatres, sports arena, ball diamonds, football gridirons, swimming pool, service clubs, post exchanges, Fort Huachuca is a community in itself.

Mushrooming out of the vast sandy Arizona waste like a huge Military Taj Mahal, is Fort Huachuca, the largest Colored Military Command in the United States. Emblazed with a historic past that dates back to the days of Chief Geronimo and The Apache Kid, Fort Huachuca has stood as a rugged protective sentinel along our continental border. Here today on this same Post, thousands of brown-skinned sons of America are going through intensive training paces, preparatory to coming to grips with a ruthless enemy that is intent upon destroying the tenets of democracy which are dear to the hearts of all liberty loving Americans.

In spite of the fact that Fort Huachuca is somewhat removed from heavily popularized urban areas, it is one, if not the finest military camps in the country. Because of its climate, which offers 245 days or better a year in continual sunshine and health giving altitude, which has in the past been an invitation to hopeful civilian convalescents, there is no doubt that the most rugged, aggressive fighting men can be made on this Post.

Negro Airfield At Fort Davis Incurs Protest

Nov. 19, 1942

Both Union Springs And Tuskegee Councils Oppose It

TUSKEGEE, ALA., Nov. 18.— A proposal by the War Department to establish an army air forces base at Fort Davis for the training of negro fliers with an auxiliary base nearby to harbor a negro unit of the WAAC brought an earnest protest today from the Tuskegee city council and the Macon County Board of Revenue meeting jointly.

At Union Springs, 20 miles south of Tuskegee the city council met and authorized a similar protest.

A representative of the War Department came to Tuskegee yesterday to ascertain the opinion of leading citizens. It was said at the joint meeting of the city and county governing bodies that he was informed the people of Tuskegee would look with disfavor on the plan. A similar attitude was said to have developed today in Union Springs. The protest, drafted by the Union Springs city council, it was said, would be sent to the War Department's representative and to Alabamians in Congress.

Nov. 19, 1942

Fort Davis, where surveys are understood to have been made for the two army bases, is seven miles north of Union Springs and 13 miles south of Tuskegee. According to the understanding of Tuskegee citizens consulted, provisions would be made for a personnel of about 3,500 negro troops and student fliers. It was not indicated how many members of the WAAC would be quartered at the neighboring base.

An air field for the training of negro fliers is already in operation about seven miles north of Tuskegee with a personnel of several thousand. It is understood in Tuskegee that the base will be maintained permanently and not closed with the conclusion of the present war.

ANDERSON PLANS ARMY CAMP PLAY

Will Visit Some Negro Units to Get Material for Fall Show About Soldiers

THE FLATBUSH TO CLOSE

'Dracula' Tomorrow to Mark End of Theatre's Season— 10 Attractions Sunday

Nov. 21, 1942

Maxwell Anderson disclosed yesterday afternoon that he is planning to visit some of the Negro Army camps this Winter and then write a play about Negro soldiers in the armed forces, provided he can obtain the proper material. The Playwrights Company would sponsor it, but not until next Fall.

The playwright also revealed that "The Eve of St. Mark," his latest work now at the Cort Theatre, is available to any camp desiring to present it. "Its theme," says Mr. Anderson, "makes it suitable for presentation by only five actors." "The Eve of St. Mark" also will be shown on a nationwide scale this season by the National Theatre Conference, an association of amateur groups.

Tuskegee Whites Protest Negro US Army Air Base

TUSKEGEE, Ala.—A proposed Negro army air base to be established at Fort Davis, 13 miles south of here, with an auxiliary base nearby for Negro WAACs met with active protest from the Tuskegee city council and the Macon County Board of Revenue at a joint meeting last week.

A representative of the War Department came to Tuskegee last Wednesday to sound out the opinion of leading white citizens, and was informed at the joint meeting of the city and county governing bodies that the townspeople looked on the plan with "disfavor." Re-Tailored Uniforms Give M. P's Biggest "Headache"

Nov. 21, 1942 By KING

FORT HUACHUCA, Arizona—For a Post as large as Fort Huachuca, there have been comparatively few major crimes for the MP's to take care of. A close investigation has revealed that the major crimes here have been over exaggerated, and the public at large has generally been given the wrong impression, mostly from undue publicity.

It has been found that a great number of the crimes committed and blamed upon soldiers are committed by transient "Camp Leeches" who drift into the vicinity of various camps and prey upon the unsuspecting soldier. These "leeches" are gradually being thinned out by the MP's, with the close cooperation of the deputy sheriffs and other civilian authorities.

"Headache"

The violation of Army regulations concerning uniforms has given the Military Police their biggest headache. Since a great number of the soldiers stationed here have not been long removed from civilian life, some have had their uniforms tailor-made in "Drapes" and long coats resembling the "Zoot Suit."

MP's Cover Largest Area

With the exception of Alaska, there is no other camp with as much territory to be covered as has Fort Huachuca.

Colonel Edwin N. Hardy, Post Commander, requested that the War Department send a man with great experience to duty as Provost Marshall at this station and Lieutenant Colonel Walter C. Rathbone, Acting Corps Provost Marshal. Corps, Area Headquarters, was sent to this station early this year. Colonel Rathbone has over 27 years active military service.

Former Professor at Howard

Several of the members of his classes are now stationed at this Post as commission officers, some holding as high a rank as captain.

Men from various organizations, and different Posts in the country, write the Provost Officials here at Fort Huachuca, seeking transfers to this rapidly advancing organization, but due to the limited allotted strength, they have to be refused until vacancies exist within the organization.

PROTEST PLANS FOR NEW ARMY SCHOOLS

Dec. 5, 1942

TUSKEGEE, Ala., Dec. 3—City Council and the Macon County Board of Revenue are vigorously opposing the War Department's plan to establish a second flying school at nearby Fort Davis and set up a WAAC unit in the vicinity of the school for the training of Negroes. A joint meeting of the Tuskegee Council and the Board adopted a resolution opposing the plan. Dec. 5, 1942

A similar protest resolution was adopted by the Union Springs City Council. The resolutions have been forwarded to the War Department in Washington.

Boys in the numerous Army camps are given to putting on amateur shows. Sometimes they call in a few girls for feminine roles sometimes several husky privates are commanded to take an extra close shave, don feminine apparel and try to talk like a lady.

Up to this time I have read of no amateur minstrel shows in the camps—and a minstrel show is a natural for soldiers, because it demands no femmes. In the glorious days of Al G. Field and Lew Dockstader, a woman in a minstrel show would have been contrary to precedent, subversive in nature and a violation of the constitution. Dec. 7, 1942

Why no minstrels? Perhaps because so many of these soldiers are from Up Nawth, a region so benighted and unfortunate as never to have heard an end man taking a fall out of the interlocutor. Minstrels were a southern product—or a national product whose market was confined to the south. Al G. Field on Broadway would have been as welcome as an Uncle Tom's Cabin show in Richmond.

It is true that Al Jolson insisted on blacking up for any of his series of "Mammy" songs and Eddie Cantor couldn't do even a picture without one sequence in burnt cork. But the nation-at-large never took to the men in gorgeous uniforms clashing tambourines or the traditional opening by the middle man — or interlocutor — "Gentlemen, be seated."

The minstrel show, in my early youth, was the favorite vehicle of the men around town who were called upon to raise money for some worthy cause. Nor did even the most puritanical sect, which would have scorned the tainted box office receipts of a play or musical comedy, reject the offering from a minstrel. There were no painted women in a minstrel show, therefore no sin. How can you have sin without women?

Long Gone

My, my, it's been a long time since Atlantans saw a professional minstrel show. Perhaps they have perished from the earth, else surely they'd have visited us. This was a great minstrel town, with hordes of fans. Atlanta produced a deal of minstrel talent, too. Billy Beard, the "Party from the South," now living here again and doing stunts for conventions; Green Adair, prominent in radio, and several others whose names escape me.

Atlanta's greatest minstrel fan was the well-beloved Lucien York, for years an executive of Rich's. The store got mighty little work out of Lucien, I am sure, when Lew Dockstader and his gang were in town. York knew them all, lived with them, ate with them—perhaps slept with them—and if the show played four performances he saw all of them from the first row, a species of torture which would have driven me to suicide.

Clayt Robson was another minstrel fan. Thousands will remember Clayt, professional lobbyist who had apartments in the old Kimball House, represented various interests and was liked by all. Indeed, Clayt grew so large—not only in figure—he must have weighed around 275 pounds—but in influence, that he did not visit the state capitol during legislative sessions nor call upon the solons in their rooms. He summoned them to his presence—and they came. It was my custom to pay a call on Clayt along about the shank of the evening, because his refreshments were excellent—and I liked Clayt, anyway. Dec. 7, 1942

Always there was a conference between Clayt and a senator or representative in the "other room." I never penetrated to the inner mysteries of that other room, having nothing to sell beyond my charming personality. But it was noteworthy that a bill opposed by Clayt Robson was nearly always adversed by the committee or mysteriously lost on the final night of the session, so it could not come up for a vote. Lobbyists rarely desire to pass a bill; they usually want to kill them. It is far easier to let a bill die from inattention or carelessness or lack of a quorum than it is to pass one.

Chief Told Troops Are Coerced

NAACP Contacts Secretary Of War Stimson

Dec. 5, 1942

ST. PAUL, Minn., (ANP)—Vigorous protests have been sent President Roosevelt and Secretary of War Stimson by the St. Paul Branch of the NAACP over the "breaking" of Regimental Sergeant Major Samuel Reed, former president of the branch, and wide spread reports that Negro soldiers at Camp Lee, Va., are being coerced and intimidated by their white commanding officer.

Reed, according to reports, was demoted by the commanding officer along with several other non-commissioned officers because of a list of recommendations submitted to him by enlisted men to correct "terrible ous service, limited use of service clubs for Negro soldiers, and discrimination and segregation practiced by the United States Army Air Corps.

The officer, who has been aggressive in all matters concerning Negro soldiers, is said to have been blamed for recommendations and as a result was "broken" and removed to Camp Dix, N. J., for shipment to "parts unknown." Dec. 5, 1942

Before his induction Reed was active in the fight to get Negroes into the home defense force.

FORCED TO STAND

Reports from authoritative sources said that many times Negro soldiers on leave have been passed up by bus drivers simply because they were Negroes. Complaints further stated that even when transportation facilities were available Negro soldiers were forced to stand in the aisles while white soldiers were seated.

Reed is a brother of Dwight Reed Jr., former star football player from Minnesota university now being trained at the officer's school at Fort Knox, Kentucky, where he is on the camp's eleven.

Co-ordinator For State Gives Plans

U-T To Be Scene Of One Of 11 Regional Schools

NAHVILLE, March 24 (AP)—A program which contemplates the training of 100,000 Tennesseans in Civilian Defense activities was outlined today at a meeting of college educators with Will R. Manier Jr., State Defense Co-ordinator.

The program will open with a five-day training school at George Peabody College here April 6-10, at which a curriculum and faculty for 11 regional schools will be developed, Manier declared.

"It will be our purpose at the Peabody school to train college professors and others to carry the Civilian Defense program to colleges throughout the state and thence to every county," the State Defense Co-ordinator told newsmen.

To Start Simultaneously

The regional schools will be inaugurated simultaneously in 11 colleges and universities in the state April 20 to 22 and will be held for three days each week thereafter "until we feel that we have a personnel sufficiently trained to carry our program to every county," Manier said.

The institutions which will conduct the regional schools, Manier said, are:

Peabody College, the University of Tennessee at Knoxville, the State Teachers Colleges at Memphis, Murfreesboro and Johnson City; Tennessee Polytechnic Institute at Cookeville, University of Tennessee Junior College at Martin, Austin Peay Normal at Clarksville, University of Chattanooga at Chattanooga, Union University or Lambuth College at Jackson and the Agricultural and Industrial Colleges for Negroes in Nashville.

Experts to Teach

"The training school at Peabody will be conducted by experts in first aid, fire fighting and the various services of civilian defense," Manier asserted.

"It is our hope, too, that we will be able to give practical demonstrations in the handling of gas and incendiary bombs."

"It is our hope, too, that we will be able to give practical demonstrations in the handling of gas and incendiary bombs."

The State Co-ordinator said he hoped to reach more than 100,000 persons in the state through the regional schools and county training programs which probably will follow.

Driesbach To Explain Duties Of Negroes In Defense Program

Role to be played by the Negroes in civilan defense and blackout of Birmingham March 17 will be described to the students of Parker Industrial High School by Jay G. Driesbach, assistant to the director of the Jefferson County Defense Council, Thursday morning at chapel period.

Principal W. B. Johnson will present the speaker.

All Negro air raid wardens, educators, members of ex-service men's grups and other organization leaders, gathered at the courthouse for a meeting Tuesday night which featured the address of Carl Wiegand, of the American Legion, and there pledged support of the civilian defense program.

In all solid Negro sections of the city, Negro citizens will serve as air raid wardens where they are willing to serve.

Area 6, under J. H. Berry, has followed this policy throughout North Birmingham, and Mr. Berry reports that the best organized sectors in his area are the Negro sections.

Negroes In Civilian Defense

From many sources connected with civilian defense we have heard reports of the fine spirit of cooperation and loyalty shown in various defense activities by our Negro population here in Birmingham. Some of the civilian defense leaders say, in fact, that in some instances the Negroes are going about their civilian defense duties in a more spirited way than the white people.

Obviously, it is a fine thing, in the first place, to have an enterprise such as civilian defense which calls for universal cooperation and in which Negroes can participate so fully, and, in the second place, to have the Negroes show such enthusiasm and loyalty.

In tonight's blackout we have a special occasion in which Negro participation will be valuable. In every possible way, they should be encouraged and helped and given the fullest consideration.

Defense Leaders Talk at Meeting of Negro Members

More than two hundred colored citizens heard local defense leaders in a mass meeting at Charles T. Walker School yesterday afternoon explain the several phases of the Civilian Defense set-up. Nearly every department of the program was represented by its leader.

Ranking officials of the Negro division of defense, captains and lieutenants and air raid wardens, members of the labor battalion, fire watchers and figthers, Red Cross first aid instructors, ministers and other key men and women were there and listened with rapt attention to the program as it affects the entire community.

Chairman of Richmond County Civilian Defense Council C. T. Sego spoke in general terms of the work and urged the full co-operation of every citizen.

Miss Dorothy Hains, chairman of the women's auxiliary, explained the registration of colored women, to be held at the churches next Sunday, stating that women are to play an important part in this war. Miss Haines asked for volunteer registrants among the teachers to conduct the registration Sunday.

Others who spoke on their particular branch of Civilian Defense were Henry Rhodes, chief air raid warden for the Tenth District, covering ten counties, and his assistant chief, Rodney Cohen, Sr., in charge of training; Chief Air Raid Warden Herbert Martin, of Richmond County and his assistant, J. L. Dantzler, Earl Pinkerton, chief of Negro air raid wardens, and Pickens H. Videtto, organizer of the labor battalion.

Marion S. Symms, head of communications, announced that a picture show, "The Bombing of Dixie", now being shown at the schools of the city, would be shown at Charles T. Walker School for colored people next Wednesday night, and urged a full attendance.

Questions asked from the audience clarified some points not brought out during the discussions, while Capt. William Rountree of the First Ward wardens, stated that his group had finished the first aid course, and was now ready for other instructions. At the close of the meeting, Dr. Drue King, native Augustan, now head of the medical department of the U. S. Veterans' Hospital at Tuskegee, was present and urged his fellowtownsmen to present a solid front in co-operating with the defense organization here. Doctor King, a former practitioner here, is spending a brief vacation in his home town.

Walter S. Harris, colored director of Civilian Defense for Richmond County, presided at the meeting.

Governor Lauds State's Civilian Defense Schools

Gov. Prentice Cooper today lauded the Civilian Defense Schools in Tennessee organized to educate some 150,000 persons in approved methods of fire fighting, etc., during cases of emergency and said that it was the largest education program ever attempted in Tennessee.

The Governor said all colleges in the State were represented at the defense school at Peabody College last week and that he was greatly impressed with the fine work being accomplished.

Certificates and an insignia are to be presented each graduate from the various schools throughout the State, the chief executive said.

"I want to give full credit to Will R. Manier, chairman of the State Defense Council," the Governor said, "for the program is progressing nicely and excellent cooperation is being given by schools and colleges throughout Tennessee."

The Governor said that special recognition also should be given Negro educators and institutions which have cooperated.

PHYSICAL FITNESS SETUP VANISHES

APR 16 1942

WASHINGTON, April 16.—Federal Security Administrator Paul V. McNutt said yesterday that the former physical fitness division of the Office of Civilian Defense was being integrated into his agency on a drastically reduced budget.

The new arrangement provides for only nine employes instead of the current 36. John B. Kelly, Philadelphia, OCD division director had recommended 102 employes when the physical fitness division first was ordered absorbed by the Federal Security Agency.

Under Kelly, the OCD division set up scores of co-ordinators for various sports, including bowling, hiking, and horseshoe pitching. Mayris Chaney, dancing protege of Mrs. Franklin D. Emphasizing that "civilian defense is serious business," Will R Manier, Jr., coordinator of the Tennessee State Defense Council, today announced a revised schedule of civilian defense training schools for Nashville and Tennessee.

A school for white persons will be conducted here Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday at Peabody College. A Negro school will be conducted at the the same time at A&I State College.

All of the schools will give instruction in the three-fold phases of the civilian defense program: the protective services such as air raid wardens, auxiliary police, firemen, etc.; community organization and services; and Civilian Defense Volunteer Office (enrollment for civilian defense as a reservoir for other services). Included will be instruction and actual demonstration in handling gas and incendiary bombs.

Other white schools in Tennessee have been scheduled as follows: Johnson City, State Teachers College, May 11-13; Knoxville, University of Tennessee, May 4-6; Chattanooga, May 4-5; Cookeville, Tennessee Polytechnic Institute, May 4-6; Clarksville, Austin Peay Normal, May 11-13; Jackson, Union University, May 4-6; and Memphis, Memphis State College, May 4-6, and several weeks thereafter.

Other Negro schools which have been scheduled are: Knoxville, Knoxville College, May 4-6; Jackson, Lane College, May 4-6; and Memphis Lemoyne College, May 4-6.

A course in civilian defense for negroes will be held at the Florida A. & M. College for negroes June 1 to 12. Invitations have been mailed to Florida county and local defense councils and to state defense councils in the Southeast, to enroll negroes with responsible posts in the citizens defense defense corps, or who have the care of buildings and personnel. Dr. J. R. E. Lee, president of the college, and chairman of the campus committee for the course, has mailed special invitations to negro institutions and negro leaders.

The remainder of the course Dr. Richards said, will be devoted to solid instruction in protection of buildings and personnel under demolition, incendiary or gas attack.

Dr. J. W. Holley Heads Negro Civilian Defense Committee of Georgia

Under the able leadership of Dr. J. W. Holley, president of the Georgia Normal College, the Negroes of the state have been organized into a smoothly functioning Colored Citizens' Civilian Defense Committee.

Early last December, Governor Eugene Talmadge, by executive act, created a Committee on Civilian Defense for Colored People, placing Doctor Holley at its head. The committee consists of five men and two women.

After its organization, the committee organized the Negroes of the state for training in civilian defense and today has a committee of five in all the counties of the state, both men and women. These committees, in turn, are orientated into the white committees, who form the leadership and direction of the civilian defense program in the several counties.

Following its organization, the committee was assigned the task of enrolling the colored people for civilian defense work throughout the state and within a few weeks more than 80,000 colored people had registered for defense service. This group was organized and classified according to the service they were to render and were trained by the county officials. Fire fighters, first aid workers, home nursing workers, demolition workers and workers for all other types of service in the case of disaster were organized. Following the organization of these groups, the Colored Civilian Defense Committee organized the colored farmers of the state into groups for growing food for victory.

There are 50,000 Negro farms growing foodstuffs to an extent that gives promise of producing more food in Georgia this year, than any other year in the history of the state.

Doctor Holley in discussing the work said:

"The colored people who constitute nearly 40 per cent of the population of the state are anxious to make a full contribution to the state's and nation's war efforts. These people realize that while they do not have as much democracy as their white friends, they do have more democracy than any other 14,000,000 Negroes in the world. Not only that, the Negro realizes that what democracy he has is tied so completely with the white man's democracy, that if the white man loses his, the Negro will lose his also. The 14,000,000 Negroes in the United States are going to be a tremendous force for good in this world - wide struggle and it is the hope of the Colored Civilian Defense Comittee, that the Negroes of Georgia may be in the vanguard."

The following exact copy of the minutes of the meeting of the State Civilian Defense Committee held in Atlanta, March 10, 1942, containing the resolution presented by the Colored Civilian Committee and unanimously adopted by the State Council, shows how fully is the work organized in this state.

"Chairman Troutman next called on Dr. J. W. Holley, chairman of the Colored Division of the State Civilian Defense Work.

"Doctor Holly reported that his work had been organized, in cooperation with Chairman Troutman, along the lines of the white committee, and that they were organized better than the Negroes had ever been organized in the state in 100 counties over the state, and that the committees were orientated into tpe white committees and under their direction getting the training. He reported a registration of 50,000 so far, and felt sure that there would be 75,000. He said in Albany there were over 700 women clamoring for nutrition classes. He said as to air raid warden classes among the registrants of the Colored Division, they were awaiting direction from the state committee, organization being complete in 60 counties. He said they were aiming for complete organization in 100 counties. He added that in the counties each Negro school district was organized with a chairman, and that all the farmers and farm families in the 'Black Belt' were organized. He said that through Doctor Collins of the State Department of Education and industrial workers of that department, families were being trained for their own protection and conservation of food.

"Doctor Holley emphasized his belief that the war would be won largely on 'food' and that the Negroes, forty per cent of the population of Georgia, would prove a great factor in providing this. He added, however, at present, there were 51,000 colored farmers in Georgia without a pig, 49,000 without a cow, and 29,000 without chickens, and therefore, there was much to be done.

"Doctor Holley read the following resolution and asked that the state committee consider its adoption:

"'It is the belief of the State Executive Committee of the Citizens' Defense Committee, that the Colored Citizens' Defense Committee under the leadership of its chairman, has worked out and put into effect a functioning and an effective defense program. This program promises to aid greatly, not only in defending the lives and property of their own people, but will go a long way toward producing food for war purposes as well as for the country's civilian population. This program will involve the training of Negro farmers and their wives in food production on a larger scale than ever before. In this way they will be contributing much to the efforts of the nation in winning the most disastrous war ever thrust upon it.

"'Therefore this committee recommends that the Board of Regents of the University System of of Georgia, adopt the plans as worked out by the Colored Citizens' Defense Committee, and the chairman of said committee be permitted to direct the program with the co-operation of the Chancellor of the University System. Said units shall be authorized to put into effect a wartime program of education in order that the full resources of the colored population, shall be at the earliest possible date, brought to bear on the problem of winning this war. The committee understands that all the dictators of vocational education for the Negroes of the state are thoroughly in sympathy with this program, and are giving it their cordial and enthusiastic support. The committee further recommends that, in order that these plans may become effective, that the chairman of the Colored Citizens' Committee be appointed by the regents to direct this program at least for the duration of the war.'

"Doctor Holley mentioned that this resolution referred to the Georgia State College at Savannah, the Fort Valley State College, and the Georgia Normal College at Albany, and had been discussed with and approved by Doctor Collins of the Department of Education, Mr. M. D. Mobley, vocation director of the Department of Education, Dean Paul V. Chapman of the University of Georgia, College of Agriculture, Miss Elizabeth Mayes, supervisor of the Home Economics Division, Dr. Walter S. Brown, director of farm demonstration and Mr. Robert L. Cousins, state director of Negro education.

"On motion of Judge Fortson seconded by Mr. McDonald, the committee unanimously adopted the resolution."

Landis Wants Negroes Accepted As Auxiliaries

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Addressing the Conference of Law Enforcement Officers of the Southeast in Wartime Problems, in Jacksonville, Fla., James M. Landis, director of the Office of Civilian Defense, urged last week that Negro volunteers be accepted and trained as auxiliary policemen in their areas.

In a speech delivered to the luncheon meeting of the conference on Wednesday, August 19, 1942, Director Landis outlined the additional and unique problems placed on law enforcement officers by wartime conditions.

"Our police have the knowledge and technique to deal with these various wartime crimes and problems," Mr. Landis declared, "But the emergencies that face us threaten us with a want of manpower, for the demands placed upon communities in target areas are such that the present force must be increased from two to four times.

"In the face of actual depletion of police ranks by the draft, enlistment, and calls to other employment, how are law enforcement officers to huddle, triple and even in some instances quadruple their numbers?

There is only one answer that is 'volunteers'. It is the duty of everybody of law enforcement officers today to enlist volunteers, to train them, and have them ready for use as auxiliary policemen.

"Negro volunteers should be accepted and trained to help in their areas. Negro auxiliaries are already serving with excellent results here in Jacksonville and there are others in Laurel County, Mississippi, and in other areas.

"Naturally you will choose your volunteers as you choose your regular officers—for qualities of courage, fidelity and steady common sense. Remember also that the best auxiliary will be the one who knows his community best. Let your volunteers serve as much as possible in the precincts where they live.

"If you have a Chinese community, include some Chinese volunteers to serve in this neighborhood. One of the best auxiliary groups in the city of Washington is the Chinese detail which patrols Washington's Chinese community. Including a captain, lieutenant and two sergeants, there are twelve in all, and they are protecting the lives of a populous area by explaining to their compatriots in their own language why it is necessary to blackout and to stay off the streets when the air raid sirens blow . . .

"We can no longer take breezily and casually the fact of war. Daily and hourly it has been growing grimmer and more deadly, and it will continue to do so. We dare not think that, of course, victory is ours; but we must think that nothing else than victory dare be ours. To think boldly is to act boldly, and to act boldly is to make each effort count in this war with spiritual death."

Medical Division Of OCD Launches Nation-Wide Courses For Women

(From Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Nurse's aide training under the auspices of the American Red Cross and the medical division of the U. S. Office of Civilian Defense is moving forward rapidly among Negroes throughout the country, according to the national office of the Red Cross.

Because many of the classes conducted in nurse's aide training are mixed classes, the Red Cross is unable to estimate the total number of Negroes in training.

Many Negroes are included, however, in the 38,000 aides now enrolled, and in the 23,000 who have completed their 80 hours of training.

SEP 5

Separate all-Negro classes are conducted in Tuskegee, Ala.; Savannah, Ga.; Columbus, Ga.; Louisville, Ky.; Detroit; Raleigh, N. C.; Pittsburgh, Pa.; Nashville, Tenn.; Chattanooga, Tenn.; Richmond, Va.; Petersburgh, Va.; Newport News, Va., and New York City.

Reports of Negroes included in mixed classes have been received by the Red Cross from Hartford, Conn.; Boston; Cambridge, Mass.; Lowell, Mass.; Newark, N. J.; Buffalo, N. Y.; Cleveland, Ohio, and Youngstown, Ohio.

No report has been received at the national office of the Red Cross of any Negroes in training in Chicago. In Washington, D. C., a class has been approved for Freedmen's hospital and it is expected to get started in the near future.

The entire program is one of volunteer service. The nurses aides are given 80 hours of training, and then expected to volunteer 150 hours a year to the hospitals.

Communities where there are sufficient leisure women to make up a class and where there are adequate hospital training facilities may apply for classes to their local Red Cross chapters.

The applicants must be between 18 and 50, American citizens or carefully selected friendly aliens, have a high school education or its equivalent, and meet certain physical requirements.

Upon completion of the course, the aides become a part of the civilian defense unit of their communities.

Negro Civilian Defense Office To Be Opened

Planned to Facilitate Placement of Thousands of Patriotic Citizens.

A civilian defense volunteer office for negroes soon will be established here, F. P. Fleming, chairman of the Duval County-Jacksonville Defense Council, announced yesterday.

Plans for the new establishment were formulated at a recent meeting in Mr. Fleming's office in the Barnett Building. The meeting was attended by leaders of both the white and negro divisions of the Council, including Chairman Fleming, Comdr. A. E. Brown of the Citizens Defense Corps, Mrs. Lee C. Burgman, Mrs. Herbert E. Williams and Mrs. Robert M. Angas of the white Civilian Defense Volunteer Office, and Co-chairman A. L. Lewis, Florence Dickson and Nellie Lewis of the negro division.

Set up to facilitate the enrollment and placement of the thousands of patriotic negro citizens of Jacksonville and the county, the new volunteer office will be under the supervision of Co-chairmen Lewis and J. E. Ford.

Selection of staff personnel is now under way by Nellie Lewis and Florence Dickson, who will serve as co-chairmen of the office. Commander Brown is at present selecting office space and equipment for the establishment, it being planned to place the volunteer office near the negro council headquarters, in the vicinity of Duval and Broad Streets.

Much of the office equipment will be furnished by the Works Projects Administration. Additional equipment and supplies will be provided by the Defense Council.

A survey of the many opportunities for negroes to serve in the war effort here is being conducted by Mrs. Angas, who will act as liaison officer between the white and negro volunteer offices. A training course for the new office personnel also is being prepared. The training will be conducted by Mrs. Clifford T. Inglis. Mrs. Williams, vice chairman of the white volunteer office, will serve in an advisory capacity.

Pointing out that the negro division of the Council has held more than 300 meetings to promote home-defense activities, and that more than 3000 negroes are enrolled here in defense work, Mr. Fleming recently declared that they were to be highly complimented on the magnificent record they were making in Jacksonville and Duval County.

"In addition to the many now serving in various units devoted to the protection of homes and lives of all citizens, there are thousands more who wish to contribute time and effort to this service here," he said. "The new volunteer office will provide the means of placing them in active participation in defense work, and thus fulfill this most commendable and unselfish desire to serve."

Negroes For Defense

One of the bright spots in the Hillsborough county civilian defense program is the commendable organization established by Tampa negroes and negro schools. The County Defense Council has given it high praise, pointing out that the set-up compares favorably with any in the city.

Right down the line, from civil protection to home and community service, the negroes of the community are organized on a balanced basis. First aid practices are being taught by trained teachers, groups of air raid wardens already are trained and qualified, and regular weekly meetings are being held to increase the efficiency of volunteers in other branches of the civilian defense program.

Enemy air attacks, if they come in this area, will hit all citizens alike. The enemy will not differentiate between class, color or creed. It is reassuring to Tampans, therefore, to know that all men, women and children in this area will have the best protection possible in case we are attacked.

Colored Defense Rally Held Thurs.

Ten Negroes Volunteer For Service As Air Raid Wardens Here

The Town Hall was filled to capacity last Thursday night in response to a call from Dr. E. Molnar, Chairman of Civilian Defense and the colored people seemed eager and willing to undertake some of the required work.

Dr. Molnar explained just what was expected of each and everyone in this time of stress and in answer to a call for volunteer Air Raid Wardens there were ten volunteers. They were: Willie Smith, Sr., Willie Wynn, John Boyd, W. H. Geahan, L. J. Styles, Richard Williams, H. Leslie, Alex Council, C. E. Lion and Willie Smith Jr. These men will receive a preliminary course of special training and one of the experienced white Air Raid Wardens will then take charge of their work.

Olin McLendon was elected by the group to arrange future meetings and another Rally will be held on Thursday night, Oct. 22nd at the Bethel Baptist church at 8 PM. At this time Dr. Molnar will try to stimulate further interest and hopes that enough active colored people will be found to take care of the two large colored districts in the event of any emergency.

Landis Deplores Lack of Negro Auxiliary Police And Firemen in Houston

Director of Civilian Defense Tells Members of Negro APD That Their Training Should Be Continued.

OCT 24 1942

By JOHN H. THOMPSON

James M. Landis, national director of Civilian Defense, in an exclusive interview Monday night told this reporter, following his speech to thousands of Civilian Defense workers at Sam Houston Coliseum, that "Negro auxiliary policemen and firemen should be trained for emergency duties in Houston as they are being trained in other parts of the South and the nation."

Accompanying this reporter in the interview was W. L. Davis, principal of Harper Junior High School and also a member of the almost forgotten unit of the local auxiliary police department.

OCT 24 1942

Chinese Division Mentioned

Citing the Chinese Civilian Defense units in Miami, Florida, as an example, Dean Landis stated that it was one of the finest units in the country and would be able to do more for the Chinese people in an emergency than any other group could possibly do. "The same applies to Negroes of Houston," he said.

The interview took place backstage and Dean Landis was answering the question of "why the training class of Negro auxiliary police had been discontinued, and if it was not true that they would be definitely needed when and if a war emergency arose."

It will be remembered that more than 50 Negroes, chosen for their intelligence and moral character, had been fingerprinted, investigated and given some 40 or more hours of theoretical training as auxiliary policemen earlier this year. When the time came to take the practical side of the training, for some unaccountable reason, the classes were abruptly discontinued and have never been resumed.

No Negro Firemen

There has never been a class of Negro firemen, it being reliably reported that the chief of the fire department had flatly refused to train Negroes although other Texas cities are using them to advantage.

Dean Landis was introduced to the reporter and W. L. Davis by Col. Ike Ashburn, director of Civilian Defense of Houston. Dean Landis told the two Negro men that "something should be done" about the discontinuance of police classes for Negroes."

100 Negroes Civilian Defense Workers Present

Among the several thousand defense workers present at the Coliseum were some 100 or more Negro civilian defense workers.

Dean Landis urged that the community be organized "block by block" and said that it was a lack of continued training of block and civilian defense units in the early stages of the war in England which caused such widespread damage.

"Had each section and block of London been as thoroughly and efficiently trained as you are now being trained," he told the civilian defense workers, "the suffering and damage would not have been as great."

Dean Landis was introduced by Mayor Pickett. Among others on the speaker platform were Col. Ike Ahburn, R. E. Smith, Eighth Regional director for Civilian Defense; and County Judge Roy Hofheinz.

Addresses over the loud speaking system furnished by Joe Smoak, were delivered by Mayor A. C. Walker, Mr. Whetsell, Fire Chief Fisher, and M. F. Whittaker, president of South Carolina State College. Chief Fisher's explanations and contributions along with his assistants were valuable in putting over the program.

Control Center

Mr. Whetsell discussed the operation of a control center. Chief Fisher was directly responsible for the lighting and loud speaking system.

A parade of all the units in the demonstration was held with the units arranged in the following order: State College band, United States and South Carolina flags, air raid wardens, auxiliary police, auxiliary firemen, fire watchers, first aid units, messengers, rescue squad, motor corps nurses and nurses' aids, ambulance, fire truck, demolition truck, and loud speaker system.

Bombs were thrown and anti-aircraft fire simulated by F. M. Sherfield, C. R. Clagget, Mondell Coger, and J. H. Pearson. The program lasted for an hour and a half. All of the units worked with ease and knowledge of the jobs they were putting over.

See Effort To Remove Civilian Defense Heads

NOV 1 - 1942

What Negroes conclude is another in several recent moves to remove the Negro Division of the Atlanta Civilian Defense organization from Negro leadership and place it in the hands of whites, is a meeting which has been called for Tuesday night, Nov. 3 for workers of Zone 2 Precinct F-36. The meeting is to be at 461 Stonewall Street, northwest.

NOV 1 - 1942

A notice sent to the Atlanta Daily WORLD office from the Atlanta Civilian Defense office in the Municipal Auditorium Saturday asserted that the meeting had been called by the "Director of Zone Two."

However, Attorney A. T. Walden, who is serving as director of Zone 2, denied that he had called the meeting or knew anything about it.

NOV 1 - 1942

Negro leaders have been expressing indignation over the manner the Atlanta Civilian Defense setup had been, without any notice, taken from W. H. "Chief" Aiken, through whose efforts it had been built up into one of the most efficient in the city.

Several weeks ago officials of the newly combined Fulton-Dekalb counties setup, ordered the telephone of the Auburn Avenue branch disconnected and some equipment removed. Mr. Aiken, however, is taking the position that he is still functioning, although financial support of his office has been withdrawn.

Although no formal announcement has been made, it has been rumored that the leadership of the Negro division has been placed in the hands of a white man, who is conducting the work from his residence on Kennedy Street.

Negro wardens in a protest meeting held recently voted to support their Negro leadership, which had done such a marvelous job in organizing them.

Officials of the central body, it is believed, were irritated with leaders of the Negro division, who had been pressing for representation on the policy-making council, as well as for training of Negroes who had registered as auxiliary firemen and policemen. Although more than a year has passed and hundreds of whites have been trained, not a single Negro has been given training for these volunteer positions.

NOV 1 - 1942

Formal protest of the changes are being made by the Fulton county Negro Civilian Defense committee of which the Rev. M. L. King is chairman. J. H. Hanley is chairman of District Five.

The Georgia State executive committee, which met at the State Capitol last Tuesday, appointed a special committee headed by Earl Cocke, white, to investigate the matter of Negroes in Civilian Defense all over the state. This investigation will include a probe of the Atlanta dispute.

Forty Negro Auxiliary Policemen Appointed in Homewood

The whole of Homewood's Leading Negro Citizens, Mayor Bloom, the Chief of Police and Civilian Defense Officials, Boy Scouts and Mr. and Mrs. John Q. Public by the hundred met in the largest church in Homewood Tuesday night, to install the forty odd Negro Auxiliary Police. These Negro police and other civilian defense officials and co-workers are to serve in case of an air raid.

Editor Durr in his remarks to the group expressed the hope that the Negro police would be ever aware of the great responsibility placed upon the Negro police and urged that the citizenship respect them in the discharge of their duties.

Mr. John Lewis pledged Mayor Bloom that the citizens of Homewood would receive all the protection possible from the Negro police. And that they hoped to do such a good job that Mayor Bloom might see fit to appoint a Negro police to take care of law and order in Negro sections of that municipality. Mayor Bloom made it clear that he felt that there should be regular Negro police to serve in Negro business and residential sections.

In Birmingham proper no police of the Negro race has been appointed. Quite a bit of effort has been made to get officials to make such appointments, but to no avail.

Homewood (or Rosedale as it is called) is a municipality in itself and not a part of Birmingham proper, although it is that part of greater Birmingham between and beyond Vulcan and the Shades Valley residential section.

Some of the finest Negro and white citizens of Greater Birmingham live in Rosedale. There is real unity in Rosedale, too.

Office Of Civilian Defense Seeks To Make U. S. Virile, Healthy Nation Via Physical Fitness Idea, "Hale America"

PRESENT PLANS call for this column to be in New York City Friday night, March 27, for the Joe Louis-Abe Simon fight and in Philadelphia, Saturday morning, March 28, for the national pow-wow of the National Advisory Board for the Office of Civilian Defense, Division of Physical Fitness.

The Office of Civilian Defense, commonly known as the "OCD," has a duel national set-up and the National Director of Activities for Negroes in its much-discussed "HALE AMERICA" program is Jesse Owens, the famous quadruple Olympic champion. Also in the colored unit is Miss Charlotte Moton, who is heading up women's activities. She gave up her post as director of Physical Hampton Institute in order to Education for Women at take up the present assignment.

The "HALE AMERICA" idea is outgrowth of radio forums originating from the Town Meeting of the Air program where reactions were voiced as to the war and its effect on the nerves of the American people.

It was agreed the American people travelled at high tension and that every day is a nerve-wracking experience for them, because of the fatigued state of of their collective mind.

The opinion grew that if a national program of physical fitness could be effected among civilians, healthy minds, virile hearts, and high morale would result.

Ultimately, Congress puts its stamp of approval on such a national program and the idea quickly got the hearty endorsement of President Franklin Delano Roosevelt. Later came a huge federal appropriation to carry on the physical fitness activities.

The "HALE AMERICA" program emphasizes the need for systematic daily exercises and exertions of a body-building nature. The program calls for such daily routines among civilians in all American communities in the near future. In charge of this nation-wide social welfare movement will be the OCD.

To form a board of strategy for and to surround the Division of Physical Fitness with expert supervision and administration, Jesse Owens created the so-called National Advisory Board shortly after he journeyed to Washington, D.C., to take the federal oath.

The NAB of the OCD is made up of outstanding writers from the leading Negro newspapers for the purpose of supervision and administration on a national scope.

Under the plan calling for physical fitness for civilian, as a class, adults will be directed through regular and motivated but not too strenuous games with definite body-building value. Adolescents will continue their usual highly enervating outdoor and indoor games.

Heading the list of games this column will recommend for civilian adults when it attends the National Advisory Board conclave will be walking, softball, bowling, golf, volley ball, tennis, hiking, swiming, hunting and fishing, and home or YMCA gymnastics and calisthenics of the dumb-bell, barbell, wrestling mat and trapeze bar variety.

Civilian youth may adopt the full program of adult athletics, but at the same time, this column's recommendation for this more active class will be football, baseball, softball, basketball, track, tennis, swimming and the other basic games calling for the most extreme qualities of stamina, speed and natural ability. Tumbling, pyramid-building, and calisthenics would, of course, be included.

For volume participation, the tournament idea, wherever possible, would be carried out.

The motivation and continuity of process, this column would also invoke the "feeder" system is started 12 years ago with its so-called Adelphi Junior club.

There would be a "midget" class, ranging from 8 to 14 in age; an "immediate" division made up of those between 15 and 18 years of age; and a "senior" grouping of persons above 18, but definietly identified as youth rather than adult.

The process would be continuous, just as has been the case in the Adelphi Junior Club of Atlanta for years.

Concrete examples of how the "feeder" system works might be Henry (Coot) Warner, sophomore of Benedict College in Columbia, S. C., and James F. (Bud) Carter, freshman at Morris Brown college in Atlanta, or any one of countless other Adelphi boys who made their mark in grammar and high school days and are now doing the same thing in collegiate circles.

Coot started at the age of ten in the midget division and just as he graduated to intermediate rank Bud came along in the midget group. Coot starred for six years with Adelphi, the last three also with Booker T. Washington High School, twice being rated All-Prep guard. He was the No. 1 scorer for both outfits, bagging more than 1,000 points in three years for each.

Now Coot, as a sophomore, is captain of the Benedict quintet and has also made the varsity "B" in football at left end. This year, he made All-SIAC and All-Tournament guard.

His scoring record for 1942 is 311 points in 20 games for an average of 15.50 points per contest.

Bud, starting at the age of ten himself, has spent all of his time but 1942, his freshman year at Morris Brown, with Adelphi. Like Coot, he has had triple identification during his Purple and Gold career, being first a "midget," next an "intermediate," and ultimately a "senior."

Adelphi has done her best the past 12 years, but I have the strange feeling her best years lie in the near future when all the boys developed by the pioneer organization may be included in the mammoth, nation-wide "HALE AMERICA" program promoting physical training for civilians.

Historic Part Of Negroes Cited At Rally For Defense Funds

APR 22 1942

Dean William Pickens, nationally known Negro leader, who has been loaned to the U. S. Treasury Department by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, called upon Negro residents of Alabama here Monday night to purchase war savings stamps and bonds as "patriotic American citizens."

Dean Pickens was one of the principal speakers at a patriotic rally at Sixteenth Street Baptist Church by organizations of the city and county.

"There is no domestic problem that can be more than secondary to the international problem," Dean Pickens asserted in urging members of his race to support the stamp and bond sale movement.

He told the more than 300 persons attending the meeting that in addition to aiding the immediate war effort, investment in the bonds would help keep down inflation.

Negroes Are Patriotic

Calling members of his race "patriotic Americans," he reviewed the part the Negro has played in the nation's history during the last 323 years.

Pickens was introduced by Dr. E. W. Taggart, Birmingham Negro leader. A. D. Shores, Birmingham Negro attorney, presided.

Aged Negro Buys $1,000 War Bond

Special to THE CONSTITUTION.

BARNESVILLE, Ga., April 23.—"Aunt" Louise Fleming Merritt, 93-year-old Lamar county Negro woman, doesn't approve of "old Hitler," so she went to the First National Bank here and withdrew enough of her savings account to purchase a $1,000 War Savings Bond. She says she hopes the bomb her money pays for will "be the very one to hit Hitler."

"Aunt" Louise was born in the Liberty Hill section of this county in 1849. She was a slave in the family of the Morgan Bloodworths, and remembers all about the Confederate war, and that she and another Negro girl ran away to Atlanta while the Yankees were there. But her "pappy" went to Atlanta and brought her back home.

She saw plenty of hard labor in her day, the aged Negro says, and she plowed the fields and worked all day, but they had lots of good times sitting around the bonfires and singing such songs as "The Devil in My Old Shoe Sole." She rode galloping horses, and was "skeered of haints," she says, and still doesn't want to "get mixed up with them."

"Aunt" Louise had a grandson in France during the first World War.

Negroes Buying Bonds

MAY 6 - 1942

Dr. F. D. Patterson, president of Tuskegee Institute, is heading an organization of Negroes who will endeavor to increase the purchase of War Bonds and Stamps by Alabama's Negroes. This is the first organization of this type in the country.

A number of prominent Alabama Negroes are assisting in the work. It is expected that the organization will grow into a network of county and local committees.

Negroes are behind the war effort. There is every reason to believe that when this war is over Americans generally will gratefully realize that without the courageous effort of our Negro citizens, our battle would have been far more difficult.

"Every penny of the money you invest in war bonds fights for you at the front. Your war bond pledge is the way for a free people to finance their fight for freedom. JUN 6 1942 your Ch[illegible]

"Moments of Meditation"—a weekly radio program presented here by a Negro mixed ensemble—has been asked to sell $50,000 in War Bonds within the next 60 days. The Treasury Department made the request. And this is but another evidence of the willingness of our Negro citizens to cooperate in every way they can.

NEGROES BUYING BONDS, STAMPS

Lauderdale County Rally Held Thursday Night

The negroes of Lauderdale county are contributing much to the war drive to help Uncle Sam wipe out the Axis by buying war savings stamps and bonds, according to reports at a war bond and stamp rally held Thursday night at the St. Paul A. M. E. church, Florence, W. H. Lewis, principal of Burrell negro high school, said this morning.

J. Morton Southall, chairman of the Lauderdale county war savings staff, gave an informative talk on the bond sales machinery and introduced Judge George Bliss Jones, who aroused the audience to cheers with outstanding points for suport of the war effort. Judge Jones touched on the menace of inflation and the sound judgment of investing surplus money by buying war bonds and stamps which will be one means of countering the sudden slump in financial affairs after the war. Everyone present enjoyed his address.

The program included two selections by the Burrel negro high chorus—"America I Love You" and "Praise the Lord and Pass the Ammunition"; a playlet, "All Out for Victory," presented by second grade pupils of Slater negro school under the guidance of Carolyn Winfield, teacher; "A Resume of War Savings Among Negroes in Lauderdale County" by Rev. Why Buy Bonds?

THE purchase of war bonds and stamps is the safest investment a citizen of this nation can make. It is as safe as the sacred pledge of the United States.

The purchase of war bonds and stamps is one of the best contributions a citizen can make to the preservation of our country.

The purchase of war bonds and stamps is the patriotic duty of every citizen in this democracy.

From the point of view of investing today for tomorrow's financial woes we know of nothing as commendable, as secure, as advisable as the purchase of war bonds and stamps.

One day in the future the war will end. The grinding roar of the tank will be silenced. The smoke from the battlefield will clear away. The undersea craft will emerge to the surface of the oceans and their crews will return to civilian life to plunder the seas no more. The millions of soldiers throughout the world will return to their homes and store their military uniforms in moth balls. The wheels in the defense plants will cease to turn and the millions of employees will be forced to seek jobs for civilian production with salaries and wages, in all probability, considerably less than they had previously enjoyed. In the interval the citizen will have to rely upon his savings to bridge the gap between the receipt of his defense plant check and his private industry paycheck; and between the receipt of his military check and his pay for the first week's work as a civilian. No one now can predict just what the economic circumstances will be. But one thing is true: those who will have invested their money wisely in war bonds and stamps will have a nest egg to bridge any reasonable span of time that might be their fate when peace is declared.

It is necessary for the wage earner to make hay while the sun shines so that when the rainy season begins he will be able to provide for his sustenance.

We can predict nothing better for the wage earner's future than to buy war bonds now that some degree of future security may be his by a safe and sane investment.

State Leaders Praise A&I Bond Drive

Tennessee Agricultural and Industrial State College faculty members, students, and President W. J. Hale received praise from War Savings Staff officials, Tennessee educators, and other speakers for high achievement in the sale of war bonds and stamps, and for the successful completion of a half million dollar improvement program, at the college auditorium last night.

The evening program completed a rally and dedication ceremony which began yesterday afternoon with a parade in uptown Nashville and continued with a dinner for out-of-town guests in the college cafeteria.

Within the last year, students and faculty of A&I have purchased $40,000 in bonds and stamps, and for this major war project, President Hale and his school were lauded in addresses by Rep. J. Percy Priest, and Jo Gibson, Jr., state director of the war savings staff.

Representative Priest spoke of the unity of the races in the fight against the Axis, and Mr. Gibson pointed out the importance of the war savings program in financing the war. Mr. Gibson also said that the parade, which included 500 cars and four bands, was the largest bond and stamp parade to be staged in Tennessee.

It was reported that Negroes in Hamilton County are now purchasing $25,000 in bonds and stamps monthly under the 10 per cent pay roll deduction plan.

State Commissioner of Education B. O. Duggan stressed the importance of education in gaining peace and told the students to intensify their educational efforts.

Among the other educational leaders heard were George Brooks, former president of the Tennessee Negro Educational Association, W. E. Turner, coordinator of Negro education in Tennessee, and Clyde Kincaid, director of Negro Education for TVA in Kentucky.

Several new buildings, included in the large improvement program, recently completed at A&I were dedicated during the Thursday activities.

DOLLAR A YEAR NEGRO BOOMS SALE OF BONDS

Maj. C. Udell Turpin Is World War Vet.

DEC 20 1942

Proud of his claim of being the first Negro "dollar a year" man in the federal government, Maj. C. Udell Turpin is prouder still of having sold more than $800,000 in bonds and stamps. As director of the Negro division of the Illinois war savings staff of the treasury department, he has sold this much to the Negroes of Chicago by direct sale, bond rallies, corporation purchases, and the establishment of pay roll savings plans.

Maj. Turpin.

Tho responsible for the sale of bonds and war stamps to all of Illinois' 387,446 Negro citizens, most of his preliminary efforts have been limited to those who live within the district bounded by streets 2600 north and 6700 south, 200 east and 200 west. How much he has sold indirectly thru booth sales at stores, motion picture houses, and public buildings he finds difficult to estimate.

$100 a Plate Dinner.

Rallies, organized by him with the assistance of south side business leaders, have been conspicuously successful. Several months ago, when James Cagney appeared on behalf of the war bond drive, in a meeting at 47th street and South Park way more than $43,000 in bonds were sold. At an Armistice day $100 war bond a plate dinner at the Du Sable hotel, 764 East Oakwood boulevard, 125 guests bought almost $75,000 in bonds.

Encouraged by the sales at these rallies, Maj. Turpin is now organizing another $100 a plate dinner. It is to be held at the Park Way ballroom, 45th street and South Park way, the night of Jan. 22. Six hundred to eight hundred guests are expected and the quota for bond sales during the evening is $1,000,000.

Served in World War I.

Maj. Turpin was born in St. Louis, Mo. He attended public school and high school there, graduating from Sumner school in 1914. He was a student at the University of Illinois until January, 1918, when he volunteered for military service. Completing officer candidate school at Camp Grant first in a class of 300, he left for France in June of that year; was made a second lieutenant and regimental intelligence officer of the 365th infantry in the following August. He served in the Metz and Argonne sectors before the armistice and was discharged in the fall of 1919.

Returning to civilian life, he entered Columbia university in 1919; graduated with the B. S. degree in 1920, and the M. S. degree in 1921. Since then he has been, at various times, engaged in insurance, banking, and real estate.

Took Law Degree.

Only in 1931 did he leave private business long enough to return to study. Then he undertook the law course at Northwestern university, from which he was graduated as doctor of jurisprudence in 1933. Since that time and until he accepted last June the position he now holds, he was assocated in an administrative capacity with the Illinois National Guard, rising from lieutenant to major.

A member of the board of directors of the Chicago Urban League, the Wabash branch of the Young Men's Christian association, and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Turpin lives at 420 East 45th place with his wife, Mrs. Swersie M. Negro Farmer Tells Why He Purchases War Bonds

Typical of the attitude of one section of North Carolina farm life toward the war, says Dean I. O. Schaub, director of the State College Extension Service, is a letter written by Junius C. Cole, a Negro farmer of Jonesboro, Route 2, in Lee County. He replied to an appeal by J. Paul Kiser, Extension agent in Lee County, for rural people to buy more War Savings Bonds and Stamps.

The letter from the Negro:

"I buy United States stamps and bonds because, in order to win this war, it is necessary for everyone to take part. Every boy and girl, man and woman, has a duty to fulfill.

"Great crises in human affairs call for extraordinary response to appeals for united effort and action. We are not only fighting for the very life of our nation—the American way of life—but for something that concerns more than Americans, something that concerns all the peoples of the earth.

"The stamps and bonds I buy are more than an investment. They will hurl an avalanche of fighting tanks, ships, guns, and planes against those who seek to destroy all we hold dear—freedom of speech and expression, freedom to worship God in our own way, freedom from want, and freedom from fear everywhere in the world.

"Today and every day, from the moment I wake to the end of each day, I shall direct every effort and will exhaust my capacity in doing all I can to bring about final victory for us in America, for the United Nations, and for peoples all over the world. Yes, I am buying United States stamps and bonds, and I shall continue. These words echoing in my heart will spur me on: 'Then conquer we must, for our cause it is just'."

Alabama Leads In War Bond Sales

MAY 4 - 1942

TUSKEGEE, Ala.—(SNS)—What may seem as a paradox resulted from an all-day conference of Negro leaders over the State of Alabama of local, federal officials and representatives of the United States Treasury of Washington, D. C. here Monday.

Contributing to the paradox was the fact that Alabama was the last of the forty-eight states to be organized among the white citizens for a systematic campaign for the sale of bonds and stamps in the United States. As a result of the meeting called at Tuskegee, Alabama becomes the first state to set up an intergrating Negro campaign committee representing every county in the state with as many as one thousand Negroes.

Dr. Frederick Douglass Patterson is a member of the state committee and coordinator of Negro activities in the War Bond Campaign in the state.

In 63 of the 67 counties of Alabama there are more than one thousand Negroes. In each of these 63 counties there will be selected a Negro chairman. These Negro chairmen will be notified of their appointment by the state administrator, and will become a member of the state committee.

MAY 4 - 1942

Participating in this conference at Tuskegee on Monday were, in addition to leaders from strategic points of Alabama, Jesse O. Thomas, staff assistant, defense savings division, United States Treasury; Charles Dobbins and M. J. Clement, deputy administrators of Alabama, and Dr. Frederick Douglass Patterson, member of the state committee and president of Tuskegee Institute.

Negroes Buying Bonds

Dr. F. D. Patterson, president of Tuskegee Institute, is heading an organization of Negroes who will endeavor to increase the purchase of War Bonds and Stamps by Alabama's Negroes. This is the first organization of this type in the country.

A number of prominent Alabama Negroes are assisting in the work. It is expected that the organization will grow into a network of county and local committees.

Negroes are behind the war effort. There is every reason to believe that when this war is over Americans generally will gratefully realize that without the courageous effort of our Negro citizens, our battle would have been far more difficult.

Gunter's Negro Soldiers Subscribe For War Bonds

To date the honors in the War Bond drive at Gunter Field go exclusively to the Quartermaster Detachment. Answering the cry of "Any Bonds Today," every man in the negro Quartermaster Detachment and all the civilian employes of QM have authorized monthly pay reservations for the purchase of War Bonds.

In recognition of the outstanding achievement of the negro detachment, Lieut. Col. R. E. L. Choate, commanding officer of Gunter Field in the absence of Col. A. Hornsby, commended the unit as a whole for its loyal and patriotic cooperation in the War Bond drive. And the QM personnel weren't stingy. When the totals are averaged, each negro soldier is allotting from his pay check and the civilian employes are allotting more than $8 each.

A large part of the credit for the 100 per cent participation of the negro detachment goes to First Sergt. Benjamin Randolph, of Birmingham. When asked how he managed to get every man to subscribe, he explained his simple and straight forward sales technique in these words: "I just waited until all the men in my outfit had returned from furlough, came off special duties and were completely present in the mess hall. Then I got up and gave a little speech about how necessary the sale of War Bonds is to our army. I pointed out that our wholehearted participation in this drive would be a life-saver to some of our boys at the front. Besides the bonds would prove to be a convenient nest egg for a soldier when the war is over. After I stepped into the orderly room and made a pay reservation for a $25 bond. Before I knew what was happening, the whole company had followed suit and made a 100 per cent showing. They're a fine bunch of boys."

Maj. Edward A. Fabert, War Bond Officer for Gunter Field, stated that $6,726 in monthly pay reservations have been made by civilian and military personnel to date at Gunter and that that figure would rise considerably during the next 30 days as the men became more familiar with the system of allotting a certain amount from their pay each month.

War Bond Race Speeds On

THE WAR BOND RACE goes merrily on in Georgia. Editorials in The Journal praising the spirit and patriotism of Georgia counties for their remarkable sales of War Bonds during the month of May have brought heartening reports to us from still other counties. We are proud to record them.

Already reported in our letters column but worthy of mention here is the fine record of Jones County in the purchase of $6,941.45 of Bonds and Stamps up to May 22 against a quota of $2,300. This county with a population of 300 white and 500 Negroes and described by Chairman W. E. Knox as "a very poor county" is surely rich in civic zeal and patriotism. "A pretty good record for a poor county," writes Chairman Knox, and no one will dispute him.

From William B. Freeman, county chairman, we learn that Monroe County with a May quota of $11,500 sold Bonds and Stamps to the amount of $40,035.95. He reminds us, too, that "this was the purchase price, not the redemption." And that this amount "did not have anything to do with whatever amount may have been pledged during our recent campaign." In addition, Chairman Freeman tells us, some $2,000 in Bonds have been purchased by citizens of Monroe through Macon banks.

Taylor County enters the race with a challenging burst of speed. A letter from J. R. Lunsford, ordinary and chairman of Taylor County War Savings Committee, informs us that between May 1 and May 14, sales of War Bonds in the county totaled $25,603.35 against the month's quota of $3,000. "I am proud of this record," writes Mr. Lunsford, "and proud of those good men and women who made it possible." So are we, Mr. Lunsford.

Congratulations to all these fine counties. Let others come forward with their records. The field is wide open. The goal is victory.

Farmers Set Record In Aiding Defense

HILLSBORO, NC.—A few weeks ago a Negro farmer walked into the Hillsboro branch of the Durham Bank and Trust Company, shoved an old carboard box thru the teller's window and said dryly: "Give me $966 worth of war bonds.'

That farmer was B. C. Corbett, owner of a 1-000-acre farm at Cedar Grove, NC, and the $966 in the old box was raised by the farmers in his community during the last three years by holding box suppers, and selling ice cream. They had planned to buy furnishings for the consolidated school which the county board had promised to build. But with wartime restrictions on construction, the new school will have to wait for the duration. So the farmers decided to lend their money to Uncle Sam to help speed the day of victory.

Corbett, who led the campaign for raising the money, bought $1,900 worth of liberty bonds during the first World War. He is a neighborhood leader in the farm program. He spoke on the Blue Network's Farm and Home Hour Wednesday, September 2, and told his liteners what Negro farmers in his community are doing to help win the war.

New Policy for Defense Housing Hit

FEB 14 1942

WASHINGTON

A new policy to be followed by federal agencies in the selection of sites for the housing of colored war workers violates public policy and tends to perpetuate black ghettoes, Charles H. Houston, prominent lawyer, declared on Monday.

The policy was announced last week by Charles F. Palmer, coordinator of defense housing, because selection of such sites has "become a major problem" due to the scarcity of open areas in so-called colored neighborhoods and opposition encountered when sites in other neighborhoods are proposed.

Civic Groups Must O.K.

It requires the federal agencies selecting sites for homes for colored war workers "to secure the opinions, approval and co-operation of the local housing authorities or other responsible public and civic groups, including responsible colored leadership, before final decision and public announcement is made of the site."

"While due consideration should be given to the opinions of local groups," Mr. Houston declared, "if housing for colored people is to be limited only to such sites as responsible local groups approve, the Federal Government will be party to perpetuating black ghettos."

Violates U.S. Policy

Mr. Houston pointed out that in all cities having large colored populations "the real estate boards have marked out all desirable unoccupied residential sites for exclusively white residential developments."

"In my opinion," he added, "it violates the public policy of the United States to be a party to such restrictions against citizens. No such restrictions are made when it comes to bearing responsibility and loyalty to the country."

HOMES PROJECT DELAYED BY WAR

Acipco Housing Plan Is Postponed To Save Materials

Construction of a $1,034,000 low-cost Negro housing project in Acipco has been postponed by the Housing Authority of the Birmingham District until after the war, Chairman Frank E. Spain announced Monday. Postponement was decided the patriotic course in view of materials shortages, although priorities had been obtained, Spain said.

In a resolution by the authority, it was resolved that "the officers of the authority endeavor to keep earmarked for Birmingham all funds heretofore arranged for, to be expended after the war."

The authority said it was willing to act as governmental agent for housing war workers, "whether by billeting such workers in homes willing to receive them or in constructing temporary dormitories for their shelter," and the government was to be notified to that effect.

HOUSING DEMANDED FOR NEGRO LABOR

OCT 2 3 1942

NHA Urged to See That There Is No Lag in War Production Due to Prejudice

FIVE PRINCIPLES OFFERED

OCT 2 3 1942

One Would Bar Projects in Communities Where There Are Idle Negroes

The National Committee on the Housing Emergency, in a statement issued yesterday through its subcommittee on inter-racial problems, urged the National Housing Agency to take "appropriate and adequate steps immediately" to see that there was no lag in war production in any part of the country because of the lack of housing facilities for Negro workers.

"With current experience clearly indicating that housing for all workers regardless of color is essential to the success of the war industrial program, this is no time to let past prejudices result in hindrances to our war effort," the committee reported.

The statement called attention to the "progressive steps" already taken by the Federal Government, individual employers and the governing bodies of many labor unions to increase the opportunities for employment of Negroes in war plants, but warned that the housing problem must receive attention "to insure that this huge reservoir of manpower is used to its fullest extent."

OCT 2 3 1942

Would Penalize Some Places

The committee suggested further that governmental authorities adopt a policy against construction of any new housing in communities whera e supply of unemployed Negro labor was found available for war work.

To achieve these aims, the Committee recommended the following five principles as the basis for official policy:

"Construction of war housing for in-migrants should not be programmed by the NHA in any locality where the War Manpower Commission has certified that there is an unused reserve of resident Negro labor, capable of filling the available jobs, or who can be quickly trained for the work to be done.

"NHA and its subordinate agencies should supply war housing for in-migrant Negro workers on the same basis, quantitatively and qualitatively, as is supplied for the in-migrant white workers.

Wants All Races Eligible

"All workers should be eligible for tenancy in war housing projects regardless of race or color.

"In every locality where an immigration of Negro workers is anticipated, certain sites should be selected so that the housing can be used by and/or Negro tenants.

"The policy followed by the Federal Housing Administration on the insurance of mortgages on war housing built by private industry should be the same for Negro as for white families."

OCT 2 3 1942

The committee added that although every consideration should be given to local attitudes and customs, no compromise should be made with "fundamental principles," and that local decisions should be based on "the most enlightened public opinion."

Mrs. Samuel I. Rosenman is chairman of the National Committee on the Housing Emergency, and Miss Louis D. Lasker is head of its sub-committee on inter-racial problems.

Predict Training For Thousands

JUN 9 - 1942

NEW YORK—(SNS)—That the Federal Government is preparing to take immediate steps to train and employ thousands of Negroes in war industries was indicated this week following a conference between General Frank McSherry, labor aide to Donald M. Nelson, chief of the War Production Board and Ferdinand Smith, national secretary of the National Maritime Union, CIO, and Charles Collins, business agent of Local 6, Hotel and Club Employees Union, AFL. Smith and Collins are co-chairmen of the Negro Labor Victory Committee of Greater New York, which represents over one hundred Negro and white trade union officials.

According to Smith, the conference was held in order to discuss what action the War Production Board has taken on the "Negro Peoples Victory plan to win the war." The plan, which calls for training and placement of fifty thousand Negro workers in war industries over a three month period, was presented to Donald Nelson early in April by Smith and Earl B. Dickerson, Chicago Alderman, and member of the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee.

Describing the conference as a "heart-to-heart talk" between Negro trade unionists and officials of the Government in an attempt to break the bottleneck that has prevented Negro workers from wartime employment, Smith declared that Victory in 1942 demands utilization of Negro workers in industry now.

"General McSherry," he said, "gave every indication of understanding fully the problems that the Government has got to meet in connection with opening up mass war-employment opportunities for Negroes. And, to get down to brass tacks, he read to us a ten-point program which the Government has prepared, and is now ready to act on."

Smith stated that he was not at liberty to divulge details of the plan, but pointed out that it embodied some of the proposals outlined in the plan which he and Dickerson presented to Nelson last April. General McSherry, he said, told the conference group that the plan will probably be announced officially by the Government during the next few days.

Urges Job Training For Negroes, Women

(Special to the Daily Worker)

BALTIMORE, June 18.—Negro and women workers must receive immediate training for production if Maryland is to have the 50,000 additional workers needed by the end of the year, John Corson, director of the U. S. Employment Service, said at a meeting of the Maryland Labor Victory Board here yesterday.

JUN 19 1942

Discrimination based on race, color, creed and sex, must be abolished immediately, if America is to have the manpower for victory, he said.

Representatives of women's trade union, Negro, church, civic and professional organizations from all parts of the state jammed the War Memorial Building to map plans for the utilization of Negroes and women in war work.

Mr. Corson also urged the registration of all available workers, the transfer of skilled workers from less essential war industries and accelerated upgrading in all war plants.

Sidney R. Katz, secretary-treasurer of the District of Columbia Industrial Union Council, who was introduced by Gov. Herbert R. O'Connor, chairman, told the meeting that the CIO was wholeheartedly behind the effort to train Negro and women war workers.

The opening of a Western front, he said, will make women's participation in war plants vital.

Other speakers included L. B. Fringer, state director of the Employment Service; Mrs. Gertrude Aircraft Co.; Prof. Edna B. McSeif, a worker at the Glenn-Martin Naughton of Maryland University and R. L. Buxbaum, president of the Maryland and District of Columbia Federation of Labor.

At the end of the meeting, the governor announced that another meeting was being planned to carry out the work mapped out yesterday.

Tuskegee Defense Plan Be Aided By Capstone, Auburn

Montgomery, Ala., June 11—(AP)—The University of Alabama and Auburn will sponsor engineering, scientific and management courses under the nation's defense training program at Tuskegee Institute and the State Agricultural and Mechanical Institute at Normal, Gov. Frank M. Dixon said here Wednesday.

Representatives of the four institutions, meeting here Tuesday, worked out plans for the courses, and the setup will be presented to the U. S. Office of Education for approval in Washington Monday.

Since neither Tuskegee, a private institution, nor A. & M. gave engineering degrees in 1940 41, they could not themselves qualify to give defense training courses, but both Auburn and Alabama could meet federal requirements.

Negroes living north of a line running from Geiger to Heflin will receive training at A. & M., under Alabama sponsorship. Those south [illegible]he line will go to Tuskegee, [illegible]re Auburn will sponsor the [illegible]asses.

S. Office of Education, in Washington.

It developed that Tuskegee Institute could not qualify to give the courses, since it did not grant degrees in engineering, chemistry, physics or production in 1940-41, a requirement provided by Federal regulations. Decision was reached, it was announced, to have Alabama and Auburn sponsor the courses, with classes to be held at Tuskegee and the State A. & M., at Normal. Under the plan, negroes living north of a line drawn across the State from Geiger to Heflin would receive training at the Normal A. & M. Institute under Alabama sponsorship, and those from south of the line at Tuskegee, where Auburn will sponsor the classes.

A coordinator for the program will be selected by President F. D. Patterson of Tuskegee and President J. F. Drake of State A. & M., for approval by authorities of Auburn and Alabama, and final Federal approval.

Attending the conference at which the plan was worked out were Prof. J. E. McDaniel, regional adviser of the negro defense training program, from Atlanta; Dr. W. Harold Taylor of the University of Alabama; Dr. J. E. Hannum, of Auburn; J. Miller Bonner, legal adviser to Gov. Dixon, who presided; and President Patterson of Tuskegee.

Negro Institutions Will Be Aided By Alabama, Auburn

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 10—(AP)—The University of Alabama and Auburn will sponsor engineering, scientific and management courses under the nation's defense training program at Tuskegee Institute and the State Agricultural and Mechanical Institute at Normal, Gov. Frank M. Dixon said here Wednesday.

Representatives of the four institutions, meeting here Tuesday, worked out plans for the courses, and the setup will be presented to the U. S. Office of Education for approval in Washington Monday.

Since neither Tuskegee, a private institution, nor A. & M. gave engineering degrees in 1940-41, they could not themselves qualify to give defense training courses, but both Auburn and Alabama could meet federal requirements.

Negroes living north of a line running from Geiger to Heflin will receive training at A. & M., under Alabama sponsorship. Those south of the line will go to Tuskegee, where Auburn will sponsor the classes.

A coordinator, to be agreed upon by the four institutions, will be chosen, and J. Miller Bonner, who represented the governor at Tuesday's conference, said courses might be inaugurated at other Negro institutions over the state under sponsorship of the major colleges.

LACK OF NEGRO USO BUILDING HANDICAP

Program For Colored Soldiers Requires Space

R Clarence Williams, council chairman, presided at the regular monthly meeting of the Anniston USO Council which was held in the USO Club operated by the YWCA on Leighton Avenue Tuesday evening. Routine business was conducted and reports were made of several cooperative programs.

The report of "Veteran's Visiting Day" pointed out that members of local veterans groups, General Philoon, Colonel Jenkins, and other officers of Fort McClellan, and the press cooperated to make this a successful venture. A country place on Little Hillabee Creek made available by S. T. Huger is being used by the several USO agencies in cooperation. Staff workers of the agencies have joined other social workers in forming the Anniston Council for Social Planning. Plans are under way for a joint USO program for soldiers for July 4. Details concerning this program are to be announced later.

Through the efforts of local USO Council members there was established last January a USO Club for colored soldiers. The quarters available were quite inadequate and with the increase in the number of colored troops at Fort McClellan there is a crying need for larger quarters, the council finds. At the time the temporary club quarters were opened it was indicated that with federal funds available there would be erected a community recreation building for the leisure time use of colored soldiers.

Although the city of Anniston has done everything necessary to secure this facility for colored troops and has made available to the federal government the land for the building, no construction has been started. The USO program for colored soldiers is greatly handicapped because of lack of space. This need was pointed out in the council meeting last evening.

Anniston USO Council members are Mrs. Joseph B. Brown, Mrs. Roy M. Woolf, Mrs. Paul Porch, Mrs. Fred O. Tyler, Mrs. Clarence R. Bell, Mrs. William H. Deyo, Mrs. Thomas E. Kilby, Sr., Miss Grace Sewell, Miss Jane Darland, R. Clarence Williams, Mortimer C. Sterne, Lee Freibaum, S. A. Rund, Morris D. Kronenfeld, James J. Cassidy, Marvin Jones, John B. McCloskey, Julius P. Hagerty, Victor A. Tidman, Gordon Mallory, William H. Deyo, James C. Weatherly, W. Paul Alexander, George Syme, Jr., and J. Fred Gurley.

USO WILL ESTABLISH LOUNGE FOR NEGROES

New Facilities To Be Handled By Travelers' Aid

The Memphis USO Council yesterday allocated funds for the establishment of a lounge in Union Station for the use of negro service men passing through Memphis.

The decision to set up negro lounge facilities was reached at a meeting of USO officials at 4 o'clock in the Bank of Commerce. J. Sedden Allen, chairman of the Memphis USO, presided.

Part of the regular troops and transit service of the USO, the lounge will be under the direction of the local Travelers' Aid Society, of which John Thomas is president and Mrs. Eva Sims, secretary. It will be located near the negro waiting room. Space for the lounge was given the USO by the Union Railway.

The lounge will have comfortable furnishings, ice water and shower facilities and a negro hostess.

Training Negro Workers

Plans for the training of Negroes for jobs in war industries as outlined Wednesday at a conference in Montgomery between Alabama education officials and representatives of the U. S. Office of Education and Tuskegee Institute should be widely acclaimed by every citizen of Alabama, both white and black, for such a program will prove that this state is willing to do its part in breaking down the walls of undue discrimination.

Under the program as outlined at the Montgomery conference, the University of Alabama and the Alabama Polytechnic Institute will sponsor courses in engineering, science and management to be given at Tuskegee, Huntsville A. and M. and any other state schools that have facilities to handle such courses. The course will last for either eight or 16 weeks.

We are proud to see our state institutions of learning taking a leading part in this campaign, which is but another step toward helping the Negro race as a whole. Its benefits will go far beyond the actual training given these students, for it is tangible evidence that the state is not attempting to hold the black man down and is perfectly willing to grant him privileges as he earns them.

Throughout its long history The Anniston Star has contended that the Negro is entitled to every consideration of which he proves himself worthy. The Negro himself does not want pity; he wants merely the chance to earn his own way, make his own place in the world, and we believe that the courses of training contemplated at the state institutions cited above will give him another chance to move upward.

Not only will it give the Negro the chance to contribute to his own uplifting, but will give him the opportunity to contribute to the victory effort of this country in a new war.

Defense Trades Shops At Booker T. To Open April 6

MAR 28 1942

NORFOLK—Monday, April 6th, has been set as the date for the opening of the Defense Trades shops at Booker T. Washington High School.

Three of the shops—sheet metal, electrical and plumbing—are equipped and ready for work. Order has been placed for equipment for the welding shop, and this is expected to be on hand shortly.

Instructors are available for the three shops that will open on April 6th, if present plans are carried out.

On Wednesday of this week the Virginia Electric and Power Company had not been able to make the power installations. This work is expected to be completed by April 6th, however.

Principal Winston Douglas, of Washington High School, said that approximately 50 students would avail themselves of the day classes, and would be able to get in about 150 hours training before close of the term. They may continue their courses through the summer, he said.

A committee of 15 citizens called on City Manager Borland on Monday, February 23, and asked that he, as Civilian Defense Director, hasten the opening of the shops. The committee consisted of J. Eugene Diggs, the Rev. R. H. Bowling, Dr. G. Hamilton Francis, Dr. E. W. Murray, H. C. Young, Winston Douglas, the Rev. C. D. Ellis, Horace C. Christopher, the Rev. J. Jasper Freeman, the Rev. E. B. Watson, H. C. Wright, the Rev. B. W. Harris, G. W. C. Brown, Rev. D. Y. Campbell and P. B. Young.

Manpower In The South

BY CARROLL KILPATRICK
Washington Bureau, The Birmingham Age-Herald-News

Ask any good student of modern warfare what are the requirements for ultimate victory and his answer will be "an adequate steel supply and an adequate manpower supply." The United States, fortunately, has a good supply of both, but there's little of either to spare for non-war use and absolutely none to waste.

Wealth in warfare, in fact, is measured in terms of steel production and manpower.

Next to recruiting men for the armed forces the most important task is recruiting and training a labor force. The administration has recognized the pressing nature of this problem and is acting to meet it. It was not until September, 1918, that President Wilson established a Labor Priorities Section in the War Industries Board.

In the Southern states, where an enormous amount of war work is being done, particularly in the shipyards at Norfolk, Wilmington, Charleston, Mobile and New Orleans, the labor shortage already has been felt, in some places acutely.

Officials in the War Production Board say that this must not continue. The South, these officials say, has a surplus labor supply in its large Negro population; it must overcome its prejudices and tap this supply.

* * *

One of the chief problems is in prevailing upon the AFL and the CIO to admit Negro workers to their ranks. And because the trade union domination of the state vocational schools the second problem is in requiring these schools to admit Negroes for training. "There is no doubt," according to one high WPB official, "that the indifference on the part of the vocational education people is holding up the war program."

Most of the money for state vocation schools is supplied through the United States Office of Education, which is criticized for not having brought more pressure upon local authorities who balked at establishing schools for Negroes. In Mobile, for example, there's a terrific housing shortage because of the importation of white ship workers. Yet Negroes already in the town cannot be taught to work because Alabama vocational leaders have not admitted Negroes to the trade schools.

"This war will not be won without the use on a large scale of Negro labor, and the training of Negroes has not yet begun," the WPB official said this week.

One shipbuilding firm in New Orleans requires 40,000 workmen. The head of the company has realized that all these men cannot be recruited from the ranks of whites. So he has started two schools; one will teach 5,000 whites and the other 5,000 Negroes. Contrast this record with that of another New Orleans shipbuilder who was recently reprimanded publicly by the Maritime Commission for falling behind in his production schedule, and whose defense was that there was an inadequate local labor supply.

"Unless a really comprehensive program of Negro training is launched," reports a field worker for the president's Committee on Fair Employment Practice, "many Southern defense plants will soon find themselves so short of skilled labor that they will be unable to meet their production schedules."

* * *

As a result of this condition a meeting has been called in Birmingham the last of May at which time employers and employes and representatives of government will discuss the manpower problem. Persons from all the Southern states are expected to attend the meetings.

In Alabama today there are 205 Negroes enrolled in national defense training classes. In Birmingham seven Negroes are reported receiving training in blue print reading, and they were all.

Most of the Alabama training is at Tuskegee Institute, where 44 Negroes are receiving instruction in aero mechanics and 27 in arc welding, and at the Huntsville Chemical Warfare Arsenal where 82 are doing chemical work. Twenty-five Negroes are enrolled in an automobile mechanics course in Selma.

In Mobile, where the need for training is greatest, no vocational education for Negroes has been undertaken. Now, however, the Mobile Central Trades Council has strongly recommended such a program. It has the backing of the executive council of the Alabama State Federation of Labor.

Fail To Provide Defense Training For Ga. Workers

MAY 2 - 1942

By MOSS MYLES KENDRIX

ATLANTA.—Flagrant discrimination in the training of Negro war workers has been charged against Georgia Vocational Education Director M. D. Mobley, by members of the Council on Defense training for Negroes, who point to the setting up with federal funds of nine big training centers for white workers, while not a single one is being planned for the thousands of Negro workers in this city.

The training centers are to fill the demand for more than 40,000 workers needed to man the huge Bell Bomber plant now being erected near Marietta, an Atlanta suburb.

MAY 2 - 1942

The neglect of local authorities to plan training centers for Negro workers caused much dissatisfaction in Atlanta where the race constitutes 42 per cent of the total population. This omission has become even more provoking since developments tend to prove that plans are on foot to import "outside" labor while no plan has been designed to exhaust the vast reservoir of local workers.

HELPING NEGROES TO HELP WIN THE WAR

There is a fine and commendable spirit in the action of the presidents of the University and of Auburn in seeking to get authorization for Tuskegee Institute to sponsor defense training courses.

Failure to set up courses for Negroes under the Engineering, Science, Management Defense Training program of the U. S. Office of Education has been due to a technical regulation which restricts sponsorship of such courses to colleges which have accredited departments in specific fields.

Dr. Duncan and Dr. Denny have joined in giving support to Tuskegee's application to participate in the program.

To fail to make it possible for one-third of Alabama's population make its maximum contribution to the war effort would be folly. The war will be won only by making the most effective use of all our human and natural resources. It is also important to remember that the more productive Alabama becomes in war-time the more productive it will be during the peace that is to come.

Given the opportunity to go all-out in the war program Alabama's Negro population can be depended upon to do its utmost.

Should the present effort get authorization for Tuskegee fail, the next step should be to work out an arrangement for that institution to use the authorization of the University of Alabama and the Alabama Polytechnic Institute. Such an arrangement has worked out successfully for twenty-five years in Extension Service work among Alabama Negro farm families. While funds come to the State through the State Extension Service, a portion is allotted for Negro work with headquarters at Tuskegee.

A similar arrangement, with A. P. I. and the University acting as technical sponsors and with Tuskegee assuming responsibility for developing a program, should be worked out if it is impossible to get direct authorization. Such arrangement certainly would have the wholehearted approval of the State.

Governor Dixon, Dr. Duncan, Dr. Denny and other educational officials who are aiding in this matter are performing a service for all of Alabama. The spirit they have shown is one which should be followed in all problems of similar nature.

State Plans Program For Negroes

A statewide training program for Negroes will be started between June 10-15, with courses in engineering, science and management offered at three Negro colleges in Tennessee, it was announced yesterday by the University of Tennessee.

The courses are made available through the University of Tennessee College of Engineering, under the auspices of the U. S. Office of Education. They are the first such courses offered for Negroes.

Fisk University and the Tennessee Agricultural and Industrial State College, both at Nashville, and Knoxville College will participate in the program. Courses in personnel supervision and radio technology will be offered at Fisk and at Knoxville. Engineering drawing will be offered at Tennessee A. and I.

Applications to enroll should be made with Dean H. Liston of Knoxville, Dean Harold F. Smith of Fisk, or Dean George W. Gore of A. and I. A high school education is required for all courses and an additional two years of college for the course in personnel supervision. Two years of high school mathematics is essential in the radio and engineering courses, and one year of physics in the radio course.

Negro Defense Training Shaped

Alabama and Auburn To Sponsor Courses

The University of Alabama and Auburn will sponsor engineering, scientific and management courses under the nation's defense training program at Tuskegee Institute and the State Agricultural and Mechanical Institute at Normal, it was announced today by Governor Dixon.

Representatives of the four institutions, meeting here Tuesday, worked out plans for the courses, and the proposed set-up will be presented the U. S. Office of Education for approval in Washington Monday.

Since neither Tuskegee, a private institution, and A. & M. neither gave engineering degrees in 1940-41 they could not themselves qualify to give the defense training courses, but Auburn and Alabama are able to meet federal requirements.

Negroes living north of a line running from Geiger to Heflin will receive training at A. & M. under Alabama sponsorship. Those south of the line will go to Tuskegee, where Auburn will sponsor the classes.

A co-ordinator, to be agreed upon by the four institutions, will be chosen, and J. Miller Bonner, who represented the governor at the conference Tuesday said courses might be inaugurated at other negro institutions over the state under sponsorship of the major colleges.

Defense Course Registration Is Gaining Daily

MAR 11 1942

Drive Underway To Secure More Jobs for Negroes

The city-wide registration of technically-minded men and women interested in taking defense courses is gaining momentum daily, it was announced Tuesday by W. Y. Bell, chairman of the Council for Defense Training, which is sponsoring the local drive.

It was predicted that more than 2,000 would be registered for this training before the drive ends on March 22.

Large two-colored placards are being distributed all over the city calling attention to the necessity of becoming trained to qualify for positions in industries now holding defense contracts.

This training is now being offered in many white Atlanta schools, and at present two courses are offered at Washington High School. Plans of the council call for a petition to the Atlanta School Board to increase the number of courses at Washington High School and to transform the old Clark College site into a full-fledged vocational high school.

Funds for all defense training are provided by the federal government under a Congressional appropriation act which makes it unlawful for any school board to discriminate on the grounds of race in the allotment of the courses.

The Council for Defense Training has pointed out to the school board that the offering of more than forty varied technical courses to white students, while restricting the opportunity of Negroes to only two, is a clear case of discrimination.

BOMBER PLANT

The council, it was announced also is working on the possibility of integrating Negro workers in both skilled and semi-skilled positions in the proposed new Bell Aircraft Bomber plant. It has been announced that more than 40,000 would be given jobs but thus far no provisions have been made.

The first step in the drive the council is making for securing additional vocational training opportunities is the registration, it was explained.

Cards which are to be filled out by those interested in becoming trained for these skilled and good-paying jobs that are to be opened can be secured at several key spots throughout the city. It is important it was said, that this registration be done as hurriedly, through completely, as possible.

Place where cards may be filled out include the Butler St. YMCA, the Atlanta Daily WORLD office, the Grady Homes, the University Homes and the John Eagan Homes, the management offices of the Henry Phyllis Wheatley YWCA, the Community Employment Service and the council's office, Room 401, Herndon Building, 239 Auburn Avenue.

Instructor In Plumbing Not Available

MAR 14 1942

Equipment Except Welding Machines Installed

NORFOLK — Bottlenecks encountered in the opening and operation of newly constructed defense training shops at the Booker T. Washington High School this week appeared to be nearing a solution with the announcement that all equipment, with the exception of the welding machines, has been installed.

Director T. S. Rydingsvard of the Norfolk Public Schools trades division, told the Journal and Guide Wednesday that he anticipated no difficulty in finding suitable instructors for electrical trades, sheet metal and arc welding, and that he has applications from several men who want to teach welding.

Difficulties are being experienced in finding an instructor in plumbing, Mr. Rydingsvard said. All of the colored technical schools have been contacted without results, it was stated. Instructors in the defense training courses will be employed at salaries ranging from $200 to $240 per month for day classes, plus two dollars per hour for night classes.

POWER INSTALLATIONS DELAYED

Power installations for electric current is delayed while the Virginia Electric and Power Company awaits a priority order to make the installations, Mr. Rydingsvard explained. This was in line with a report made by City Manager Charles B. Borland, to a citizens committee which called on him on February 23 in an effort to straighten out the situation.

Col. Borland in a report to Chairman A. H. Foreman, of the School Board explained that the necessary installation by the VEP Company will cost $500 and for installations of this amount approval of Richmond must be secured and request for approval must be accompanied by a priority certificate. Efforts are being made to secure this certificate, Mr. Foreman said.

A priority rating on arc welders was received on February 20, and the order has been placed, it was stated. With all equipment for the cheet metal and plumbing shops already on hand, a teacher for the sheet metal shop is already in prospect. A priority rating on electric testing equipment was received early this week, Mr. Foreman told the City Manager.

McNutt's Challenge

MAR 10 1942

Paul V. McNutt, federal security administrator, speaking to the opening session of the Alabama Conference of Social Work, graphically described the great activity of our state in the war effort. And of particular interest, was his enumeration of situations which must be met, war or no war. It is important that we examine our status with respect to his challenges.

Mr. McNutt stressed the necessity of training men to man machines. How do we stand with respect to this need? We have some training schools, but not nearly enough. And with a crying labor shortage, we have no school in Birmingham—a heart of industry—for training Negroes for skilled work.

"Last Fall," the FSA director said, "a third of a million youngsters were 'school children' only by courtesy. Overcrowded defense towns had no schools for them." This situation is bad in certain parts of Alabama where new plants have sprung up out of the ground. Even here in Birmingham. though we have had no great influx, our school situation demands attention.

"There are towns," Mr. McNutt declared, "that think they cannot afford good schools, cannot afford recreation facilities but let honky-tonks serve as a substitute; towns that will not establish decent jails and which throw first offenders, hardened prostitutes and habitual criminals together in the same cell."

Mr. McNutt praised what we in Alabama have done, what we are doing. But he said some things to which we need to pay attention.

280 Persons Registered For Defense Training Located At Douglass High School

By PINKIE HUDSON

According to Mr. Paul Evans, manager of the U. S. Employment Office at East Second and Central streets, 280 applications have been filed for training in the new vocational training school, to be started at Douglass high school, 600 North High street. This number includes twenty-two women, although women cannot receive training through this program but it is anticipated that within a few months classes will be open to them.

The pre-employment training program is offering courses in acetylene welding, aircraft riveting, electric motor repair, auto mechanics and aircraft sheet metal. These courses will each run eight hours daily, six days a week for twelve weeks. As students drop out or complete their training, other trainees are notified by mail to begin their training.

Shifts totaling two, will begin at 4 p. m. to 12 midnight, from 12 midnight to 8 a. m.

Trainees are selected from the U. S. Employment Service and the WPA, where registration is continuing until further notice. A person who is now employed working eight hours a day cannot enter one of these classes, but he may enter a supplementary class, if qualified.

A class in actylene welding was started January 26, the beginning of the second semester of night school, according to Prof. Moon, principal of Douglass high school. "This class is equipped with the finest material in the state," said Mr. J. H. Hendricks, instructor, and the students are progressing rapidly. Beginning on their eight-hour schedule, the class of twenty students was very enthusiastic, when interviewed by a Black Dispatch reporter.

Materials are now available and are being moved in for other courses which will be in operation within a few days, according to Mr. M. L. Curtis, director of the defense school at 916 North Broadway. Mr. Curtis says, up to date, an instructor for aircraft metal has not been found for Negroes.

Curtis also said that all Negroes should receive defense training at Douglass high school, and that none would be trained at the North Broadway Training school. Defense training equipment costing $173,000 will be installed in the white training school, while only $3,000 worth of the same type of equipment has been purchased by the city school board for the Douglass high school manual training department.

The North Broadway training head also said that he though W. G. Lay and Vincent Levison, city separate school instructors, would be placed in charge of defense training classes at Douglass.

This war effort is to train men and women for jobs at the air depot and the Douglass plane plant.

The school located at Douglass high school, is under the direction of the federal government, and directed by Mr. Curtis, director of the Oklahoma Trade school, at 916-918 North Broadway.

100,000 To Be Trained For War Jobs By Army

MAR 2 2 1942

10,000 Will Be Negroes Is War Department Announcement

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(SNS)—About 100,000 men and women, about 10,000 of whom will be Negroes, will be trained in the course of the next year for War Department civilian jobs, the War Department announced Saturday.

This program is under the supervision of William H. Kushnick, Director of Civilian Training of the War Department. The 10,000 figure represents ten per cent, the proportionate Negro population.

Trainees for War Department civilian jobs will be qualifying for duties as overhaul and repair mechanics, production workers, and inspectors at government-owned factories, arsenals and depots.

MUST BE OVER 44

Men receiving training under the program must be over 44 years of age or between the ages of 17 and 20, so as to be outside the limits for selective service, or not eligible for military service for some other reason. In most instances the only other qualification is ability to pass a mechanical aptitude test which requires no technical knowledge, and is designed to weed out those who are obviously unfit.

For those who are eager to serve in the war effort but are not qualified for military service, a variety of opportunities is provided by this program. Applications for training under it may be made to any local office of the United States Civil Service Commission.

Students for mechanical jobs, known as "mechanic learners," are paid at rates ranging from $900 to $1020 per year while in training. The training courses vary in length from 15 weeks to 4 months.

MUST BE GRADUATES

Men and women accepted for training as procurement inspectors will be paid at the rate of $1440 per year while learning. For these, however, the minimum requirement is a high school education, and preference will be given to those who have had at least one year of college.

Mechanic learners after completion of their courses are placed in active employment as mechanics' helpers at increased rates of pay, and then begin what is known as "in service" training. Those showing general ability are rotated in various jobs to round out their knowledge, and have good opportunities for promotions.

A wealth of mechanical aptitude has already been uncovered by the Civilian Training program. Not only are such adaptations being made as the re-education of auto mechanics for aircraft work, but men who used to earn their living as insurance salesmen and clerks have become crack mechanics and supervisors. Women have shown a high degree of adaptability.

AIDED BY AGENCIES

In working out its program, the Office of Civilian Training had the assistance of the United States Office of Education, the Training Within Industry Division of the War Production Board, the apprenticeship Division of the U. S. Department of Labor, the Training Division of the U. S. Civil Service Commission, the National Youth Administration, and the Civilian Conservation Corps.

Training is given in government and state-owned schools, scattered throughout the country. In some instances, the United States Office of Education has rented for War Department trainees the entire facilities of private technical schools.

One of the most pressing of present-day needs which the Civilian Training organization is seeking to fill is for procurement inspectors. The training of these has so far been carried out only for the Ordnance Department of the Army, but is being extended to the Signal Corps, and plans are under discussion for its application to the Air Corps as well.

VARIETY OF JOBS

As an instance of the tremendous range of jobs for which civilian training is being given, in the Ordanance Department alone, one of the Army's many branches, men and women are being trained for the following assignments: junior optical workers, junior instrument makers, junior lense grinders; apprentic machinist and tool makers; machine operators; senior clerks, auto mechanics; inspectors of gages cannons and etc.. storekeepers; engineering aids; armament machinists. In addition, inspectors are being trained for eight different types of Ordnance equipment.

The Air Corps now has more than 80,000 civilian employees, in 250 different occupations. Most of these employees are in large depots scattered through the country.

The Quartermaster Corps has more than 10,000 civilian employees at its Philadelphia depot alone. Its total number of civilian employees was over 106,000 on January 1, and is steadily expanding.

The Chemical Warfare Service, which had over 9,600 civilian employees on January 1, will require 10,000 additional chemical plant workers for two new arsenals.

NEW PERSONNEL NEEDED

The Signal Corps, which employed over 20,000 civilians on January 1, constantly requires new personnel in radio, telephone communication, maintenance and repair work at field establishments throughout the country.

In all its branches, the Army of the United States now has under its administration a civilian army of over 500,000 men and women. As the military forces grow, this force too must expand. As as result of the Civilian Training Program, men and women throughout the country who thought they would have to play a spectator role in America's struggle are now in the front lines of the battle of production, and playing a vital part.

ALABAMANS RESPOND TO UNITY PLEA

Mobile Council To Help Open Training Doors To Negroes

MOBILE, Ala. — Promising 100 per cent cooperation in the effort to open essential defense training to Negroes in this area, the Mobile Central Trades Council of the A. F. of L. has selected a committee to meet with officials of the southern regional and local National Association for the purpose of devising effective ways and means to bring about adequate training courses for colored workers.

MAR 2 8 1942

The committee was selected after J. L. LeFlore, chairman of the Southern N.A.A.C.P., had appeared before a meeting of the Council and made a strong plea for unity of white and black workers against fascist-like policies of management of industry, federal, state and local vocational education set-ups, and labor itself, which have, through numerous subterfuges, kept Negroes out of training and employment in the defense program.

LeFlore also warned that the Negro's morale toward the war effort may be lowered if discrimination against him continues and he is looked upon as some sort of contaminating creature unfit for human society.

At the conclusion of the speaker's address A. F. of L. officials promised an all out effort to see that Negroes are integrated into the defense training schemes providing skilled workers for Mobile's gigantic $273,000,000 defense program of extensive shipbuilding and other vitally important work.

As far back as last December the old OPM, now the War Production Board, promised definitely that training for Negroes would be established in the Mobile area, but only recently has tangible proof begun to appear on the horizon.

School Closes Defense Course

APR 2 2 1942

Boys Entertained At Closing Party

EUFAULA, April 21.—The Defense Course in electricity that has been conducted for several months at the County Vocational School has closed. Through this course all buildings on the school campus were wired. Instructor was Arthur Banks, an outstanding contractor of Clayton, Ala.

As an expression of appreciation, Prof. and Mrs. L. W. Bonner entertained the young men of the class, Mr. and Mrs. Banks recently for the fine spirit and good work done on the school campus.

Mr. and Mrs. Banks also entertained the boys elaborately on the last night of the class. Mrs. Banks was assisted by Miss Annie M. Clarke, county nurse, and Mrs. I. W. Bonner.

These young men have been highly benefited through this course and they are ready to do work wherever needed.

N. F. A. boys under the supervision of Prof. L. W. Bonner are constructing lamp brooders to be used by F. S. A. clients in Old Spring Hill Community.

A demonstration of what home grown feed will do for livestock when properly prepared was carried out on a white-faced Hereford at the school for a period of three months. This calf weighed 400 pounds at the beginning of the period and the end of the three months it weighed 645 pounds. The calf was fed on home grown feed consisting of oats, corn, velvet beans and peanut vine hay ground together. A nice profit was realized for the school when this animal was sold after all expenses were taken out. Valuable lessons in the selection, care and feeding of livestock were taught the boys and adult farmers.

Recent visitors to the school were missionaries from China and India, who are making a study of the agricultural program carried out in Alabama. They were highly impressed with the type of work the girls in the home economic classes and the boys in the vocational agricultural classes are doing. Accompanying these friends were Miss Brown, Barbour County Home Extension agent; J. T. Jamor, county agent, and Miss Annie M. Clark, county nurse. Other visitors were Mrs. Turner and A. Floyd, of Tuskegee Institute.

Over 10,000 File Cards In Defense Training Job

MAR 23 1942

The defense training registration campaign sponsored by the Council for Defense Training for Negroes was brought to a close Sunday night after more than ten thousand of the city's Negroes had filled out the questionnaire card blank distributed throughout the city.

The next steps in the drive to secure equal training facilities for defense work as provided by federal law were being mapped out by members of the council, who promised that an announcement would be made within a short time.

REGISTER DOWN TOWN

W. Y. Bell, who served as chairman of the Council for Defense Training for Negroes, re-emphasized the importance of all persons, who had filled out the registration cards, also getting their names on the registration rolls of the United States Employment Office, 191 1-2 Marietta street.

Though hundreds, under the stimulation of the council's drive for jobs, had added their names to the employmet office registry within the past week, it was believed that not half of the more than 10,000, who had signed the council's card, had also gone to the Marietta street address.

No deadline has been fixed for registration at that office, which is to serve as the actual clearing house for he jobs in the Bell Bombing Plant, to be allotted those who finish the defense course.

REGISTRANTS POUR IN

It was pointed out the greater number of Negroes, whose names are on the U. E. Employment Office rolls, the greater the possibility of securing good paying jobs in the defense industries to be started in Atlanta and vicinity.

All six of the key registration points which continued to sign up applicants for the courses Sunday were literally swamped throughout the day by an ever increasing avalanche of Atlantans.

Many of these places ran out of registration cards before sundown, and no more were available. The Atlanta Daily WORLD office, which was used as one of the registration places, was visited by more than 600, many of whom went away disappointed, because there were only about 400 blanks available.

The same situation was repeated at other registration points.

TABULATION TO BEGIN

The cards will be collected today by the council and the long and tedious, though important job, of tabulation of the information they contain, will be started.

The unprecedented response to the appeal of those interested in vocational education to register, graphically revealed how badly a first class vocational high school is needed in Atlanta.

This fact is expected to be pointed out to the Atlanta Board of Education by council representatives at the board's next session.

The results of the council's registration drive will be made public within the next two or three days after time has been allowed to collect all the cards which have not yet been turned in, and a tabulation complete.

RESPONSE CITY-WIDE

The response to the registration drive was city-wide and touched all classes of the city's population. The amazing point disclosed was that the large majority of those who registered were jobless, although authorities contend a marked shortage of manpower is developing.

The city, the state and the federal government to effectively prosecute the all-out, total war must of a necessity include this huge reservoir of manpower in planning any job any vocational program, it was pointed out.

McNutt's Challenge

Paul V. McNutt, federal security administrator, speaking to the opening session of the Alabama Conference of Social Work, graphically described the great activity of our state in the war effort. And of particular interest, was his enumeration of situations which must be met, war or no war. It is important that we examine our status with respect to his challenges.

Mr. McNutt stressed the necessity of training men to man machines. How do we stand with respect to this need? We have some training schools, but not nearly enough. And with a crying labor shortage, we have no school in Birmingham—a heart of industry—for training Negroes for skilled work.

"Last Fall," the FSA director said, "a third of a million youngsters were 'school children' only by courtesy. Overcrowded defense towns had no schools for them." This situation is bad in certain parts of Alabama where new plants have sprung up out of the ground. Even here in Birmingham, though we have had no great influx, our school situation demands attention.

"There are towns," Mr. McNutt declared, "that think they cannot afford good schools, cannot afford recreation facilities but let honky-tonks serve as a substitute; towns that will not establish decent jails and which throw first offenders, hardened prostitutes and habitual criminals together in the same cell."

Mr. McNutt praised what we in Alabama have done, what we are doing. But he said some things to which we need to pay attention.

Defense Training Council Meets This Afternoon

The intense interest which Atlanta's Negro citizens have in securing vocational defense training kept a stream of registrants pouring into the key centers setup by the Council for Defense Training.

Two new centers setup in the Pittsburg section at Champs Grill, 621 McDaniel Street and Spence's Pharmacy, 951 McDaniel Street enjoyed a heavy registration Thursday, a checkup revealed.

Tabulation of the returned filled-out registration cards disclosed that those signing up represent a cross-section of the more than 100,000 Negroes, who compose one-third of the city' population.

MAR 20 1942

Heavy registration was noted particularly in the Auburn Avenue area, where the four centers in this district, the Atlanta Daily WORLD, the Butler Street YMCA, the Community Employment Service office and the council's headquarters at Room 400, Herndon building were besieged all day by hundreds of persons anxious to get signed up before the campaign is brought to a close on Sunday, March 22.

HEAVY FLOW

The Summerhill registration center at Pollard's Funeral Home, which started off with a heavy flow of registrants, continues to maintain its pace, according to E. A. Pollard, manager of this center.

The iimportance of all persons signing the cards being distributed by the Council for Defense Training to also register with the United States Employment Office. 191 1-2 Marietta Street was again emphasized by Chairman W. Y. Bell.

A special meeting of the council is to be held this afternoon at five o'clock in the Herndon building was also announced by the chairman.

Starting out with a goal of only 2,000, the chairman jubilantly disclosed that more than 7,000 are expected to be on the rolls when the drive ends Sunday night.

Negro Trainee Program To Be Started In Ala.

Decision Follows Oxley's Visit And Conferences

MAR 24 1942

By EFFIE MOTEN GOODE

MOBILE, Ala.—(A N P)—Lt. Lawrence A. Oxley, senior specialist with the Social Security board at Washington, has been in Alabama for the past two weeks endeavoring to stimulate equitable participation of qualified Negroes in defense training and employment. From various reports, Lt. Oxley has met with a degree of success.

After a three-day visit in Mobile where he interviewed several key people and held conferences with employment bureau officials, Oxley was successful in securing approval of Mobile defense authorities for a $10,000 defense training program to fit Negro trainees for the job openings anticipated in defense ship building here. Approximately one-half million dollars in defense contracts have been awarded in the Mobile area for the construction of light destroyers and cargo ships.

Prior to coming to Mobile, Lt. Oxley held conferences at the regional office of the Social Security board at Birmingham and the office of Defense Training of Alabama at Montgomery.

Lt. Oxley is performing a similar mission in regard to Negro participation in the states of Mississippi, Tennessee, Georgia, Florida and South Carolina.

Dr. Weaver Speaks

DR. ROBERT WEAVER, chief of the Negro Branch of training of the War Production Board, declared, in an address before the Pobla club Saturday night, "that unless we get real integration into American industries our economic future is not only dismal but it is very dark." In the course of his lecture he pointed out that the colored people of this country are hardly on the periphery of industrial employment. Despite all of the claims that are being made, which cannot be wholly disregarded, the American Negro has not put a "big toe" in the door of industry. Despite the fact that the navy yards have increased the number of Negro workers more than 100% during the present war effort; that the Winchester company is hiring 1100 Negroes in its New Haven plant; that a cartridge manufacturing company will hire 4,000 Negroes; and other companies, including aircraft industries, are hiring colored workers in large numbers we are just scratching the surface. We are just beginning to get a part of the jobs we deserve.

MAR 29 1942

Dr. Weaver is both an idealist and a pragmatist. He mixes theory with practice. His experience over the years coupled with his intimate knowledge with matters concerning Negroes make him one of the foremost authorities on the problems concerning their plight in the country. Therefore, when he tells us that in order to secure ourselves from the approaching shock which will be the inevitable outcome of this mad world we must train and train and train; that we must tell the white people of this country how we feel about this war and why we feel that way; that we are only going to get what we are powerful enough to get when we get it"; that we ought to get into organized labor despite its practice of discrimination; that if we do not get into industrial occupations now we won't get into them we are forced to view his admonitions as the words coming from a prophet and tempered with the wisdom of a sage.

Weaver knows that the militancy of the Negro is his only salvation. He knows that the time for compromising principles has died long ago. He knows that the colored people of America must fight now as never before to become integrated into the democratic process.

Dr. Weaver knows, and he said, that in order for the colored worker to become integrated in the industries he must train. This is a war in which 75% of the labor must be skilled. The percentage of trained Negroes going into defense industries is small. It is obvious that if one is unskilled his chances for getting placed in a job is considerably less where there is such a great need for skilled labor.

We agree with Dr. Weaver that the Negro must continue his militancy in his efforts to attain the rights as American citizens lest he assumes the status of a slave.

War Department Official Told Of Training Barrier

APR 3 - 1942

Judge Hastie Reveals Concern Of Washington Over Bell Program

The concern of the United States War Department over the failure to make any provision whatsoever for the training of Negroes as prospective workers in the Bell Bomber Plant, was disclosed Thursday night with the arrival of Judge William H. Hastie, Negro advisor to Secretary of War Stimson.

Judge Hastie shortly after his arrival by Eastern Airline Plane Thursday afternoon was closeted with members of the Council on Defense Training for Negroes in a lengthy conference.

During the conference the council members, headed by William Y. Bell, executive secretary of the Atlanta Urban League, who also serves as chairman, outlined the lengthy campaign that has been conducted in an effort to secure fair and proportionate training opportunities for Negro defense workers.

APR 3 - 1942

It was disclosed that under the program set up by the Georgia Vocational Defense Training Director, M. D. Mobley, nine training centers will open on April 20 for white persons while not a single one has been planned for Negroes.

The whole agenda of discriminatory practices being carried out by local officials in defiance of the state federal policy prohibiting such practices was pictured to the war department official, who said that he would detail the plight of Atlanta's Negro workers to Secretary Stimson upon his arrival back in Washington. He is scheduled to leave at eight o'clock this morning.

Present at the Thursday evening conference with Judge Hastie beside Chairman Bell were A. G. Moron, J. T. Henderson, William Shaw, Dr. William Dean and Cliff Mackay.

Judge Hastie in explaining the interest of the War Department in the Bell plant situation, pointed out that all the work done at the plant during the crisis would be war contracts.

He admitted he was puzzled how local officials who set up the "white only" training program could so blindly overlook the training of a segment of the population comprising 42 per cent of the available local labor supply, in view of the clearly stated federal policy to first exhaust the local labor market, before bringing in migrant workers.

A report of his findings in the Atlanta case, in addition to reaching the desk of Secretary Stimson, will also be placed in the hands of Donald M. Nelson, chairman of the War Production Board.

Training For Negroes

A step toward justice for Negroes in regard to training for industrial jobs in defense industries was worked out at Montgomery this week at a conference of educational representatives of the state and nation. The step provides for training at Negro institutions under the sponsorship of the University of Alabama, Auburn and the U. S. Office of Education.

When the question of Negro training came up, it was found that neither Tuskegee nor any other Negro institution in Alabama was qualified to give the courses in engineering, science or industrial management which were called for. The plan calls for the University and Auburn to assist with the instruction, which will be given at Tuskegee and the State Agricultural and Mechanical Institute at Normal, near Huntsville.

Here is concrete evidence that white men and Negro men can get together and work out arrangements that will lessen all feelings of discrimination and injustice. Far better is something like this than laws passed in the heat of prejudice or inflammatory agitation.

These leaders, representatives of the colleges involved, white and Negro, of the state government and the federal government, met around a conference table with one thought in mind, how to give the Negro a better chance to make his full contribution to the country's war effort. There were no fears of social implication and all the dangers that some persons see when simple justice for the Negro is at stake.

The justice this group sought and toward which its decision aims was merely that of giving the Negro opportunity to demonstrate his worth and his patriotism. Deny that opportunity to the Negro, and the nation not only denies the elemental truths of human dignity and human freedom upon which it is based, but it also breeds discontent and strife and weakens the cause for which it fights abroad.

The Loyal Negro

To the Editor of The Courier-Journal.

What does the loyal American Negro, who wants to see the United Nations win the war and the peace, request? He asks for a chance to give his all to this end in all branches of the armed forces of the Nation, combat as well as non-combat divisions, on the assembly lines in the factories, in the shipyards, not just as porter and menial but as mechanic, electrician, engineer, steamfitter and in any other capacities for which he has both ability and training.

He asks for a chance to study in defense classes. Take Richmond as an example. Over three months ago 500 Negro men signed up for courses in welding and sheet metal work in this city. Up to this day there has not been a single defense course offered in the city of Richmond for Negroes, despite the fact that the shipyards are crying for workers and despite the fact that Congress stipulated in the legislation providing funds for such courses that "no trainee under the foregoing appropriation shall be discriminated against because of sex, race or color."

There are evidently some people in this country who still feel we can win this war and maintain exclusion policies as far as the Negro is concerned. They evidently think that a "united effort" can be achieved with one-tenth of the American people left out of the picture. It cannot be done, and no one knows it better than Hitler and Hirohito. Every time a Negro is restricted from serving his country fully, the person doing the restricting is consciously or unconsciously helping Hitler.

Let us wake up now before it is too late. Let us wipe the cobwebs of a dismal past from our eyes. Let us shake off the shackles that keep white and black from making their maximum contributions to victory. Unless we do this it has been correctly pointed out that we may lose. If we do not do this we cannot win.

Alabama Negroes To Be Trained For Defense

Courses In Management Engineering, Science To Be Taught In State

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 11.—(UP)—A program under which Alabama Negroes will be trained for defense jobs was formulated at a conference here yesterday.

Courses in engineering, science and management will be taught at Tuskegee Institute, Huntsville A. & M. College and possibly other institutions.

Because these schools cannot qualify directly under the federal law, the courses will be sponsored nominally by the University of Alabama and Alabma Polytechnic Institute.

Federal law requires that courses to sponsored only by schools which awarded degrees in engineering in 1940-41.

In attendance at yesterday's conference were J. E. McDaniel, regional advisor for Engineering, Science and Management Defense Training of the U. S. office of education; F. D. Patterson, president of Tuskegee Institute; J. E. Hannum, assistant dean of engineering at Auburn, and Dr. W. Harold Taylor, of the University of Alabama engineering 2 department. Governor Dixon was represented by J. M. Bonner, his legal adviser.

Bonner said the courses would be started "at once". From eight to 16 weeks will be required for completion.

War Training Program Offered For Negro Race

A state-wide training program for Negroes will be started between June 10-15, with courses in engineering, science and management offered at three Negro colleges in Tennessee.

The courses are made available through the University of Tennessee College of Engineering, under the auspices of the U. S. Office of Education. They are the first such courses offered for Negroes.

Fisk University and the Tennessee Agricultural and Industrial State College, both at Nashville, and Knoxville College will participate in the program. Courses in personnel supervision and radio technology will be offered at Fisk and at Knoxville. Engineering drawing will be offered at Tennessee A. and I.

Applications to enroll should be made with Dean H. Liston of Knoxville, Dean Harold F. Smith of Fisk, or Dean George W. Gore of A. and I. A high school education is required for all courses and an additional two years of college for the course in personnel supervision. Two years of high school mathematics is essential in the radio and engineering courses, and one year of physics in the radio course.

Negro Girls Win End To Jim Crow Training

OCT 4 - 1942

The Worker
N.Y., N.Y.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Sept. 26.—Four Negro women in St. Paul were admitted to defense training classes this month. Their assignment was hailed as a victory by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, which has exposed former Jim Crow policies of the industrial defense program here.

Last spring, women WPA workers, including Negro women, were notified by letter from the WPA office to report for tests in finger dexterity, adaptability, etc. Nearly all those who were called—both Negro and white—reported and took the tests.

All the white women—and only two Negro women—were sent to train.

One of the two Negro women has since been hired, as a wood worker, in a war plant. The other is still unemployed.

At the August meeting of the NAACP, a committee was chosen to investigate the situation.

Committee spokesmen announced this week that both WPA officials and administrators of the defense training schools, when questioned, admitted discrimination. There had been an "understanding," they said, that there was no use giving training to Negro women because of "placement problems" after the training was completed.

The NAACP Committee offered to deal with discrimination in industry and get Negro women hired, if the defense set-up will give them the training they are entitled to.

Four Negro women—one of whom was tested nearly five months ago—have been assigned to the training schools, it was announced last week at the September meeting of the NAACP.

Signal Corps Has Openings For Negroes

Radio Learners And Repairmen May Take Courses

The U. S. Signal Corps approved radio school for Negroes, only one in the country, at the Florida Normal and Industrial Institute west of the city, has a number of vacancies and will be able to place some local men in the school. Vernon Bronson of the State Department of Vocational Education, who directs the installations for the school which opens September 29th, lists some of the information pertaining to the school as follows:

The faculty will be mostly Florida men, who have been employed in industry, and are competent in the field, many of them holding degrees. The course will include daily classroom study, and laboratory work with the radio equipment being installed. Salaries of teachers, rental and equipment are taken care of by the State Department of Education, Vocational Training for War Production Workers of which Robert D. Dolley, of Tallahassee, is director.

The enrollees in the radio course will be paid while learning by the U. S. Signal Corps, mechanical learners being able to draw $85 a month, and junior repairmen, $120. The courses average three months each, and may be taken for a minimum of 30 hours, maximum of 48 hours a week. The training is free, and for a small personal expenditure, those from out-of-town will live at the college under campus conditions, paying for board and room.

Requirements of entrance for learners is education that is equivalent of a high school graduate; requirements for repairman entering the class are as follows:

Two years work experience as a radio technician, or one year electrical laboratory instruction of a college level, or six months work in a recognized school, or holding of a radio operator's license, or three months in a standard mechanical learner's (radio) class, or one year's employment with a communications company, (telephone, etc.) in the communications department.

Tests are given applicants on achievement, intelligence and aptitude, the Civil Service specialized test being used. Additional information on the radio school shops may be had by contacting Mr. Bronson at the Florida Normal School, or by asking at the nearest Civil Service office.

Aircraft Sheet Metal Popular Among Women At Langston University

OCT 24 1942

By Pinkie E. Hudson

LANGSTON, Okla. — Aircraft sheet metal is the most popular course with women in Langston university's war training school, which is now enrolling women trainees. According to L. Gude, local supervisor, the number is double that of all other courses.

Women are also enrolled in auto mechanics, radio and are welding. These women are from all sections of the state.

The first woman to enroll in arc welding was Mary Crim, of Oklahoma City. Miss Crim is developing the technique of handling the arc welding equipment as readily as the men trainees. More women are expected to enroll in arc welding as well as other phases of the foundry and machine shop practice.

The defense class in foundry is turning out production work for defense schools in the state. They have 110 machine vices to make the coming week.

Two hundred hours are required to finish a course in arc welding. Other courses require eight weeks, except radio, which requires ten weeks for completion.

Persons interested may direct their correspondence to Mr. Gude, at Langston university.

Defense Training Classes Started

37 Students Begin Eight-Week Course at Washington High School

NOV. 24, 1942

The result of a long and arduous campaign waged by the Atlanta Negro Defense Training Council of which W. Y. Bell is chairman, the first training program ever opened in the deep South for prospective aircraft workers got underway Monday morning at Washington high school.

Thirty-seven students, certified by the United States Employment Service, began an week's course that will qualify them as skilled workers for the Bell Bomber plant which is to open within a few months near Marietta.

Teaching the airplane sheet metal, fabrication, sub-assembly, riveting and final assembly skills are four instructors, James Redd, William Pullin, R. H. Harrison and P. C. Collins.

Although a total of $10,000 had been appropriated by the government for training tools, the course got underway with only about half of the ordered material on hand. Priorities, it was explained, had held up many pieces of the essential machinery.

A large proportion of the first students reporting for the first class were women, it was learned. A call has been issued by Mr. Bell for men to register immediately with the United States Employment Service for this training, which would qualify them for high-paying jobs at the Bell plant.

It was explained that enrollees must be between the ages of 18 and 65, suffer from no chronic diseases, have had at least a sixth grade education and if they are men hold at least a 3-A draft classification.

It was definitely assured, Mr. Bell asserted that men and women who complete the courses being offered at the new aircraft workers school, would receive employment at the local plant. Plans call for the hiring of between 4,000 and 5,000 Negro men and women, it was disclosed.

The school is being operated by the Atlanta Board of Education, with funds supplied by the federal government.

Persons who registered with the U. S. Employment Service, 191 1-2 Walton Street, and are certified by that office will be eligible for the next class, it was announced.

The school was opened in one of the buildings, which formerly housed equipment of the Works Progress Administration.

Preparatory to helping keep the Nation's fighting cars in shape, five youths began a three-month course in automobile mechanics yesterday at the newly opened N.Y.A. training center, 633 S. Campbell.

Supervisor Virgil T. Wood, 1405 S. 3d, hopes to enlist fifteen additional trainees—ages 17 to 24—for the forty-hour a week course which will consist of a minimum of lecturing and a maximum of practical demonstrations and hard, dirty work. After becoming proficient at repairing cars, the boys will try their skill on overhauling Government cars—u n d e r close supervision, of course. Then they will be placed in war industries.

To Learn AUG 18 1942

Clad in overalls, the five registrants—including three Negroes—heard a brief lecture by Mr. Wood before starting their first day's work.

"We'll first learn the use of the right tools," he said. "A good mechanic who always knows what tools he needs on a job saves hours of precious time." Mr. Wood predicted that at the end of two months, "you boys will be pretty good mechanics."

Each of the boys appeared enthusiastic about opportunities offered by the course. Two Negro students said they liked "the good living made by mechanics." Another student was happy because "I won't ever have to work in an office now."

Members of the class are Bernard Shaughnessy, 18, of 2212 Garland; Eugene Becht, 18, of 1129 E. St. Catherine; Orfravel Miller, 18, Negro, of 1420 Esquire; James Dallas, 19, Negro, of 1625 Congress, and Andrew Jackson, Jr., 18, Negro, of 1469 Levering.

Instructors include Mr. Woods, Superintendent Birger O. Berg and Marvin L. Catlett. Persons between 17 and 24 interested in joining the class may apply at the training center.

Action Taken By Federal Agencies

NOV 14 1942

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Nov. 12—The Alabama State Council of Administrators, composed of representatives of the State Board of Education, NYA, in Alabama, and the United States Employment Service ordered last week that defense training for Negroes be immediately discontinued. This in the face of a serious manpower shortage in this vital Southern area.

Alabama vocational authorities have stubbornly refused to comply with the President's Executive Order No. 8802, and it was only after the recent FECP hearing there that a few defense training classes were opened for Negroes in Mobile and this city.

Although the local WPA director declared there are over 800 race men on the rolls who are able and eager to receive defense training, the Birmingham USES has exhibited a cynical attitude toward placing Negro trainees and says, "it has no responsibility in the matter."

The State director of vocational training contends that guidance is not necessary since war industries refuse to hire Negro trainees anyway.

THOUSANDS TO BE HIRED

In the meantime, calls have been sent out by the Birmingham Chamber of Commerce for white women to enroll in training courses for welders, pattern-makers, and other classes. In a letter sent out by V. J. Douglass, Birmingham vocational training director, there is a statement that three big war plants in the area were prepared to hire thousands in the next few weeks.

Immediate reopening of the Negro training program has been demanded by Louis E. Burnham, of the Southern Youth congress, in a letter to Dr. Bowman F. Ashe, War Manpower Commision regional director.

WHITE AIRCRAFT SCHOOL OPENS DOOR TO NEGROES

The Texas Aircraft School at Caroline and Polk streets will open its doors to Negro students Monday morning, November 16. Once a training school in the aircraft industry for white studtnts, it has turned out more than 1,000 students, 98 per cent of whom have secured jobs in the industry.

Nov. 14, 1942

One of the best equipped and first Negro aircraft training schools in the South, it is believed to be the largest school in the nation training Negroes in aircraft work. There is more than 10,000 square feet of floor space in a modern, daylight building, equipped with the latest in machinery and tools for the training of aircraft workers.

Factory traned instructors, using factory approved methods and recommended tools, will assist all students in doing their work on sheet alumnium, the metal from which airplanes are made. The course is open to women from 17 up and men from ... 70. All students are given from ... to six weeks training. There will be three classes daily.

Sponsored an dendorsed by the Houston Negro Chamber of Commerce, the public is invited to inspect the school prior to its opening. A special representative will be on hand all day Sunday, November 14, to show visitors about the school.

Those not able to pay for the course in one payment may still be trained. Easy time payment plans have been worked out by the management. A low down payment will enable any one to enroll.

Instructions are simple and easy to learn. "There is nothing hard about learning aircraft construction," Mr. Manroe, director stated. "And it is a splendid chance for colored people to get out of the low pay rut and start earning from $40 to $65 per week in aircraft construction. There is a definite need for Negro workers in this industry. Doors in many plants are being opened daily to trained workers."

The school is conveniently located and easy to reach from any of the Negro wards. There are several buses which pass the doors of the school.

Actual training of students will start on November 18. Those wishing to enroll in the first classes may do so at any time before that date.

Enrollments will be taken at the school at Caroline and Polk or at the Houston Negro Chamber of Commerce on West Dallas street.

Lack Of Funds Forces Closing Of Training Classes For Negroes

Discontinuance Of 20 Of State's 30 Units Follows Scarcity Of Placements

With war industries in Alabama and over the South hungry for skilled workers, approximately 20 of this state's 30 training classes for Negro war workers will be forced to close between now and Jan. 15—their graduates unable to obtain jobs.

E. R. Plowden, state supervisor of vocational training for war production workers, has released this information to The Birmingham News to clear up a situation already confused by many rumors.

In Alabama now, approximately 6,000 white men and women and 600 Negroes are being trained for various types of skilled and semi-skilled war work.

With closing down of the 20 classes, following completion of their present training periods, only approximately 200 Negroes in Alabama will continue to train for war industry.

Classes to be discontinued include those in Dothan, Opelika, Selma, Mobile, Tuskegee, Huntsville, Fairfield and other cities of the state.

* * *

"IN VIEW OF THE FACT that trainees are not being placed from some of our Negro classes," stated Director Plowden, "these classes will not be renewed upon termination of the training period.

"To do so would be a waste of public funds, as well as time and effort, and would lead the trainees themselves to disappointment.

"The State Department of Education, however, wishes it distinctly understood that classes will be organized for Negroes at any time and at any place when it is reasonably clear that the product of such classes will be utilized in the war effort."

In Birmingham, center of war industry in the South, 60 Negroes are being trained at present for various shipbuilding trades, according to Vernon J. Douglass, local director of vocational education.

Though placement of Negroes is uncertain, Douglass said, these classes—in riveting, bucking, rivet catching, caulking and other phases of shipyard work—will be continued on request of those now enrolled.

Negroes in the other classes, to be continued in the state, are being placed, according to Plowden, in local industries, in the Navy Seabees division, in aero-mechanic work at Tuskegee and in other war occupations.

No white classes are being closed at this time, Plowden said, as there is a constant demand from Mobile shipyards and other industries for trained, white workers.

* * *

NEW TRAINING CLASSES are organized, either for Negroes or whites, whenever the U. S. Employment Service certifies a need for workers in nearby industries, according to Director Plowden.

Plowden's statement of the situation is as follows:

"The State Department of Education has exerted every effort over the years to promote vocational training for Negroes, but arbitarily to set up training for Negroes or whites or anyone, without regard for placement possibilities of such persons, would be to ignore the primary purpose of vocational education, which is to enable an individual to get and hold a specific job."

More than 100 Negroes, trained in Birmingham during the Summer, in answer to requests from Mobile shipyards, were not placed there, Douglass reported. Shipyard heads said an expected supply of steel did not arrive, therefore additional workers were not needed, and that Mobile housing facilities could not take care of an increased number of Negro workers.

The Vocational Training for War Production Workers program is a federal program, administered in cooperation with state and city boards of education.

TUSKEGEE, Ala., July 9—Dr. F. D. Patterson, president, Tuskegee Institute, has announced that Timothy W. Jones, head of the electrical department at Tuskegee Institute, has recently been appointed coordinator for engineering, science and management defense training courses for Negroes for the state of Alabama.

E. S. M. W. T., as these courses are popularly called, is provided for under the labor federal security appropriation act. The courses are designed to train men to meet the wartime shortage of engineers, chemists, physicists and production supervisors in fields essential to the national defense effort. Both industrial and civil service positions are included in this definition. E. S. M. W. T. training in Alabama will be jointly sponsored by the University of Alabama and Alabama Polytechnic Institute. Actual training will be offered by Tuskegee Institute, F. D. Patterson, president; Miles Memorial College, Birmingham, W. A. Bell, president; A. & M. College, Huntsville, J. F. Drake, president, and Alabama State Teachers College, Montgomery, H. C. Trenholm, president.

Headquarters At Tuskegee

The coordinator, with headquarters at Tuskegee Institute, is empowered, by the sponsoring institutions, to set up other training centers when necessary and practical.

E. S. M. W. T. training will consist of in-service courses, designed to permit individuals already employed to advance to positions of more responsibility and higher pay, and pre-service courses, designed to train unemployed youth. In all cases the industry in question must be essential to the war effort.

Of particular interest to Negro youth is the fact that E. S. M. W. T. courses will enable him to qualify for certain civil service positions previously out of his reach because of requirements in experience. Among the civil service positions for which E. S. M. W. T. may be substituted for experience are: (1) Radio-mechanic technician, $1,440 to $2,300; (2) technical and scientific aides, specific fields; radio, explosives, chemistry, physics and fuels, $1,440 to $2,000; (2) inspector of powder and explosives, $1,620 to $2,600; (4) engineering aids, photogrammetric or topographic, $1,440 to $2,600.

The only requirement for admission to an E. S. M. W. T. course is a high school education. Young women, as well as young men, are eligible. Tuition is free. Students must defray their own living expenses. It is hoped that courses will begin during the latter part of July, it was announced.

Instructors for E. S. M. W. T. courses must hold college degrees in their field of specialization.

T. W. Jones, the recently-appointed coordinator for E. S. M. W. T. in Alabama, is on leave from his position as head of the electrical department for the duration of the war.

Before taking over his duties at Tuskegee Institute he was head of the physics department at Prairie View State College, Tex. Previous to this he was engaged in electrical contracting in the city of Chicago and as electrician for a steel company at Gary, Ind.

Jones completed his high school and basic training in electricity at Tuskegee Institute. He also holds his B.S. and M.S. degrees in electrical engineering from Iowa State College.

Getting More Trainees Object of Conference With Manpower Official

SEP 18 1942

Everybody Not in Arms Will Be Needed in Industry; Available Labor Supply Soon Will Be Gone

Training is still the most vital phase of Kansas City's war effort, and should be the Negro's first concern, it was brought out in a conference Wednesday afternoon in the office of Ed McDonald, newly appointed regional director of the War Manpower commission, in the Dierks Bldg.

This is a war not primarily of troops, it was emphasized, but it is a war of production. Negro and white leaders interested in preparing as many persons as possible for war industry sat around a conference table and discussed ways and means of getting more and more trainees.

To Absorb All

47c

Persons already trained for war industry soon will be absorbed and there will be a shortage of vital workers. The shortage will be so great that every elderly man and one out of every three women will be on the production line.

SEP 18 1942

With service either in arms or in production facing everybody, the choice to be made is not what one will do, but when he will start. By appeals and by pay the government is trying to get trainees for war crafts and for technical posts in the armed forces.

Both men and women, youth and adults are wanted. Since first come, first served, the cream of these places will be gone before those who delay wake up to the opportunity.

Boys under draft age and girls as well as older people will be sucked up by industry. Young men will be drafted into the armed forces and their fathers and mothers will take their places in war production.

McDonald said that under present and future conditions, training is fundamental. He pledged the active support of his office in seeing that the program operates without discrimination.

McDonald said that he would recommend that a Negro training supervisor be added to the War Manpower regional staff to organize new training classes, to secure trainees and to assist them in employment following training.

McDonald said that steps will be taken immediately to secure for Negroes training not now available to them. It was brought out at the conference that there is no arc welding class open to Negroes in Kansas City, Mo. McDonald said that his office would attempt to secure the necessary equipment for such a class. The only arc welding class in this area is in Kansas City, Kas.

Training classes now open to Negroes are:

At R. T. COLES: Engine mechanics, taught by Ernest L. Gayden, supervisor; Metal finishing, taught by Owen Kitchen; acetylyne welding, airplane and commercial, taught by Burnett Bailey.

SEP 18 1942

LATHROP WAR TRAINING CENTER: Aircraft sheet metal for men and women.

NYA METAL SHOP: Arc and gas welding, machine shop, radio, aircraft woodworking, motor mechanics and sheet metal.

Persons Attending

Persons attending the conference Wednesday, were: Thomas A. Webster, executive secretary, Urban League; C. A. Franklin, editor of The Call; James L. Russell, NYA personnel assistant; Mrs. Frances Hayden, industrial secretary, Y.W.C.A.; Dr. A. Porter Davis, Miss Byrdie Jackson, and R. B. Brown, all of Kansas City, Kas.; Maryland Shirley, annealing furnace foreman at the Lake City Ordnance plant, and Lucile Bluford of The Call.

Other officials present besides McDonald were Charles Wilson, regional director of the Bureau of Employment Security; Merle Alden and E. J. Giblin, assistant regional representatives of the Employment Security Bureau; and Lewis W. Clymer, regional representative of Dr. Robert C. Weaver's division of the Negro Manpower Service directed by Dr. Robert C. Weaver.

The North American Aviation company is beginning to hire Negro women trained in aircraft sheet metal. Most of the employes will come from the training classes at the Lathrop War Training Center.

Girls trained at the NYA Metal shop probably will not be hired immediately, North American officials said this week, because they received their training on heavy metal, rather than on the light aluminum from which airplanes are built.

J. L. Russell, NYA will attempt to revise its program to meet the specifications of North American. Priorities on aluminum have made it impossible for the NYA center to obtain this material for training purposes.

WPA BOWS TO JIM CROW BY EMPLOYERS

Claim Negroes Can't Find Jobs Anyway, Protest To President

Nov. 28, 1942

BIRMINGHAM—All Negro defense training programs in Alabama were ended this week because trainees are barred in southern industries, D. V. Plowden, state director of vocational education, announced.

While the program at best was no more than a gesture, only 100 Negroes being trained to date compared to 4,000 whites, regret was expressed that Plowden had surrendered to the Jim Crow attitude of Dixie employers.

The Negro training centers shut down were in Tuscaloosa, Mobile, Huntsville, Gadsen, Dothan, Tuskegee and in this city.

Typical of the treatment given skilled colored workers was the action of Birmingham officials of the U. S. Employment Service who offered qualified riveters, chippers and caulkers jobs as cooks on sugar cane plantations in Panama City, Fla. Affidavits have been filed with Bowman F. Ashe, regional director of the War Manpower Commission in Atlanta, citing these facts.

It is estimated some 800 Negroes eligible for training will lose opportunity to learn a trade, according to Lee R. Head, director of the WPA division of training and re-employment.

Protests against junking of the program have been sent or Governor-elect Chauncey Sparks, Paul V. McNutt and President Roosevelt by the Negro Citizens Committee on Training and Re-Employment.

Alabama Slams Door Of Defense Training In Face Of Negroes On November 21

Nov. 23, 1942

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—(SNS)—Defense training for Negroes, in face of the anticipated opening in Birmingham of a war plant that will need thousands of trained workers was scheduled to end all over the State of Alabama Saturday, November 21, according to information presented Wednesday night to a group of leaders meeting in the Masonic Temple.

A few weeks ago a movement was afoot to cancel all defense training for Negroes, but it was spiked with the provision that it would continue provided jobs could be secured for those trained.

Dr. James Jackson, of the Southern Negro Youth Congress, who has kept a close watch on defense training for Negroes, released the following information for publication Wednesday:

State Director of Vocation Education Plowden (of Montfomery, Ala.) has ordered the closing down of all "Vocational Training for Defense Workers" classes for Negroes in Alabama. Twelve courses will be discontinued Nov. 21, and the remainder within the next ten days.

Mr. Plowden alleged that suspension of all job training for Negroes was ordered solely because jobs could not be found for Negroes.

C. F. Anderson, state supervisor of the (United States Employment Service) U. E. E. S. and a Mr. Jones, assistant supervisor of the Birmingham U. S. E. S., contended that the U. S. E. S. has received no request from any plant for skilled or semi-skilled workmen which could be filled by Negroes who had completed training courses. According to Mr. Plowden, only 606 Negroes have received job training under the "Vocational Training for Defense Workers Plan." This is a Federal training program administered in cooperation with State and City Boards of Vocational Education. Courses of training in the metal trades have been open to Negroes for the past six months in Birmingham, Huntsville, Tuscaloosa, Mobile, Tuskegee and a few other cities of the State.

V. J. Douglass, director of Vocational Defense Training for Birmingham, stated that about 100 Negroes had received training in Birmingham in riveting, chipping and allied crafts. About one-half of this number was referred from the WPA rolls. Attempts to place these workers in jobs for which they were trained have proved fruitles, Mr. Douglass claimed. During the past year, however, Mr. Douglass reported 4,000 white men have received defense training and 1,400 rave been placed in jobs for which they were trained.

L. R. Head, Birmingham director of WPA department of training and re-employment, revealed that there were approximately 800 Negro men on WPA rolls who are capable and anxious to receive training for war industry. Mr. Head pointed out that this is a higher figure than for the white workers on WPA because most of the white workmen have already been absorbed in industry.

While job training opportunities for Negroes in the State are being terminated, the manpower needs of industry are becoming more acute. Within ten days construction will begin on the huge Airplance Modification plant of Bechtel-McCone-Parson Corp, which will employ an initial force of from 12,000 to 15,000 workers. In anticipating this new demand on the local labor supply, end courses are being opened and for women to enter the labor forces. However it seems apparent that in view of the fact Negroes constitute about one-third of the available force their training and their economic utilization is essential, if a serious manpower shortage or a mass immigration of outside workers in this area is to be averted.

Louis E. Burnham, organizational secretary of SYNC said Wednesday night that he had wired vice-president, Henry Wallace, chairman of the War Planning and Resource Board; Paul V. McNutt, chairman of the War Manpower Commission; Doctor Robert C. Weaver, of the War Manpower Commission; Dr Malcolm McLean, chairman of the CoFEP; Frank Cramer, executive secretary of the CoFEP; William Green president of the AFL; Walter White, secretary of the NAACP; Phillip Murray, president of the CIO; John P. Atlanta, Ga., Urban League Wins Fight; Aided By FEPC, NMS

ATLANTA, Ga., Dec. 3—The result of a hard-nine-month fight by the Atlanta Urban League and the Atlanta Negro Defense Training Council finally resulted, this week, in the opening of the first defense training program ever statred in the Deep South for prospective Negro aircraft workers.

Thirty-seven students certified by the U.S. Employment Service began an eight-week course to fit them for skilled employment at the Bell Bomber plant which will begin production a few months from now in Marietta, Ga., a suburb of Atlanta.

Dec. 5, 1942

TO GET BASIC TRAINING

Students will learn airplane, sheet metal, fabrication, sub assembly and riveting as part of a basic aircraft training course on which other skills may be added.

In February, 1941, Negroes had only four out of 45 defense training in Atlanta, although they are one-third of the population. These were in unimportant occupations and were discontinued before completion.

When the Bell Aircraft Corporation of Buffalo announced plans, last February, for a bomber plant near Marietta which would hire between 30 and 40 thousand workers, the Atlanta Urban League immediately swung into action to make sure that Negroes would have a fighting chance for some of these jobs.

Dec. 5, 1942

COUNCIL ORGANIZED

A Council on Defense Training for Negroes was organized by William Y. Bell, executive secretary of the League, to help in a pressure campaign to get defense training. A private registration conducted by the Council and the League brought in 5,000 men and women to sign up for defense training which was flatly denied them by local, State and federal officials. These officials were contacted and vigorous protest lodged by letters, telegrams and personal conferences over the plan to deny vital war industrial training to Negro American citizens.

As a result of the terrific pressure campaign launched by the Urban League and the work of the FEPC and Dr. Weaver's Negro Manpower Service, the school is now open and League officials have begun to dork on the Bell Aircraft Corporation to secure a large share of the jobs in the factory when it is completed sometime near Easter.

First Aircraft Training For Negroes in South

12/4/42

ATLANTA. — (ANP) — The result of a hard, nine-month fight by the Atlanta Urban league and the Atlanta Negro Defense Training council finally resulted, this week, in the opening of the first defense training program ever started in the deep South for prospective Negro aircraft workers.

Thirty-seven students certified by the U. S. Employment service began an eight-week course to fit them for skilled employment at the Bell Bomber plant which will begin production a few months from now in Marietta, Ga., a suburb of Atlanta.

12/4/42

Students will learn airplane, sheet metal, fabrication, sub assembly and riveting as part of a basic aircraft training course on which other skills may be added.

Although all of the $10,000 in equipment ordered for the training program has not yet been received, instructors stated that they have enough to begin the training course and look forward to more before the course ends.

Long, Hard Fight

12/4/42

In February, 1941, Negroes had only four out of 55 defense training courses being offered in Atlanta, although they are one-third of the population. These were unimportant occupations and were discontinued before completion.

When the Bell Aircraft corporation of Buffalo announced plans, last February, for a bomber plant near Marietta which would hire between 30 and 40 thousand workers, the Atlanta Urban league immediately swung into action to make sure that Negroes would have a fighting chance for some of these jobs.

Council Organized

A council on defense training for Negroes was organized by William Y. Bell, executive secretary of the league, to help in a pressure campaign to get defense training. A private registration conducted by the council and the league brought in 5,000 Negro men and women to sign up for defense training which was flatly denied them by local, state and federal officials. These officials were contacted and vigorous protest lodged by letters, telegrams and personal conferences over the plan to deny vital war industrial training to Negro American citizens.

Meanwhile, the training of white workers proceeded rapidly with training authorities getting permission from Washington to spend 60,000 in equipment for white schools but none for Negro schools. The white training program started in May and in July nearly 800 men and women were enrolled in the classes.

Appeal to Weaver, FEPC

The league appealed to the Negro manpower service and the FEPC. Following an investigation of the U. S. Office of Education by the committee, Commissioner John Studebaker and state training officials finally agreed to set up defense training for Negroes.

12/4/42

When they did nothing to actually get the program started, however, council members traveled to Birmingham for the FEPC hearings from June 18-20. Testimony was given by Bell, listing 10 charges of discrimination with documentary evidence to back up the complaints.

As a result of the terrific pressure campaign launched by the Urban league and the work of the FEPC and Dr. Weaver's Negro manpower service, the school is now open and league officials have begun to work on the Bell Aircraft corporation to secure a large schare of the jobs in the factory when it is completed sometime next Easter.

Birmingham Training Schools Lift Negro Ban

Dec. 8, 1942

(Special to the Daily Worker)

BIRMINGHAM, Dec. 7.—A victory over Jim Crow of far-reaching significance was recorded here this week when the Birmingham Council on Vocational Defense Training rescinded an order closing war production training classes for Negroes.

Only limited facilities had existed for Negroes despite the fact that booming war industries urgently require manpower and unemployment is widespread in the large Negro population.

While a campaign was under way to extend those facilities, authorities suddenly announced a decision to slam the door shut on such Negro schools as did exist, citing as reason that employers didn't give jobs to Negroes after they had been trained.

Reversal of this decision, just announced by Vocational Training Director V. J. Douglas, came after united pressure by CIO and AFL labor, Negro organizations and community groups.

As a result, the training schools for Negroes, which offer training only in riveting, chipping and caulking, will continue.

Prime movers in the campaign, which won the victory, were the Southern Negro Youth Congress, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and the National Urban League, which worked with CIO and AFL unions in causing reversal of the shut-down order.

They wired protests to all government agencies, pointing out that a grave manpower problem in Birmingham accentuated the need for maintaining and increasing all facilities for training Negro men and women.

With the schools scheduled to remain open, a drive has now been undertaken to get the facilities extended. Only about 100 Negroes have been trained so far and the courses offered to them are limited in comparison to the 12 special crafts offered white trainees.

George M. Johnson, assistant secretary of the President's Fair Employment Practices Committee, wrote the Southern Negro Youth Congress that Alabama's training program is being studied and that the committee is making a complete canvass looking toward a "permanent adjustment."

ATLANTA, Ga.—The result of a hard, nine-month fight by the Atlanta Urban League and the Atlanta Negro Defense Training Council finally resulted last week, in the opening at Washington High School of a war training program for prospective Negro aircraft workers.

The league appealed to the Negro Manpower Service and the President's Committee on Fair Empolyment Practice. Following an investigation of the U. S. When they did nothing to actually get the program started, however, council members travelled to Birmingham for the FEPC hearings from June 18 to 20. Testimony was given by Bell, listing ten charges of discrimination with documentary evidence to back up the complaints.

South's First Aircraft Training Class Open

Dec. 5, 1942

ATLANTA, Ga. — (ANP) — A nine-month fight by the Atlanta Urban League and the Atlanta Defense Training Council resulted this week in the opening of the first defense training program in the deep South for prospective coolred aircraft workers.

Thirty-seven students, certified by the U.S. Employment Service, began an eight-week course at the Washington High School to fit them for skilled employment at the Bell Bomber plant which will begin production soon in Marietta, Ga., a suburb of Atlanta.

Fight Begun in 1940

While the fight for the opening of aviation defense training classes dates from February, 1942, when Bell Aircraft announced plans to open a bomber plant near Marietta, the battle for defense training classes began on July 30, 1940.

At that time the superintendent of schools gave an unsatisfactory reply to the Urban League when it inquired about defense training plans for colored citizens. The history of the case follows:

Four Courses Offered

February 1941 — Four courses, out of fifty-five given in the city and county, were being offered for colored, but they were discontinued before students completed them.

March 1941—E. G. Ludtke, of the U.S. Office of Education, promised to investigate the situation. Meanwhile two of the courses being offered were dropped.

September 30—The school system recommended additional classes for colored, such as tailoring, laundry work, but they were rejected as not vital war industrial courses.

Representation Requested

October 6—The league suggested appointment of colored persons on the local defense training advisory committee.

January 16, 1942—A. F. Scogins, manager of the local Public Employment Service, agreed with William Bell, league secretary, that equipment for courses could be secured through the Federal Government.

February 17—During a conference Bell was advised by the assistant superintendent, Dr. H. R. Hunter, to find out whether the school system could use NYA equipment at the old Clark College.

Given Run Around

February 26—A subcommittee of the Defense Training Council discussed the training problem with the local advisory committee chairman.

March 17—The subcommittee visited Frank Dolan, manager of the Atlanta Office of the USES and was referred to Major Leonard Kline, Bell Aircraft director of training.

March 23—M. D. Mobley, State director of vocational education, told the council he would secure a statement from Bell Aircraft of its plan about colored workers on the basis of which local courses would be set up.

Following the investigation of the U.S. Office of Education by the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee, Commissioner Studebaker said that the State Department would begin to set up training shortly.

Case Taken to FEPC

May 1—The assistant superintendent of schools outlined details of the training program for colored to representatives of the council.

June 18—Bell testified at the FEPC hearings in Birmingham, listing ten charges of discrimination with documentary evidence to back up his complaints.

Daniels Quits After Power Is Stripped Away

SEP 17 1942

Mrs. Fausett Is Reported at Odds With Authorities

SEP 17 1942

By ALVIN E. WHITE

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(ANP)—That all is not well with the Office of Civilian Defense is indicated through the resignation of Jonathan Daniels, North Carolina liberal, who has often been referred to as a champion of the rights of minority groups.

Mr. Daniels suddenly tendered his resignation to Dean Landis, director of OCD, under circumstances which have not been fully explained.

STRIPPED OF POWER

It was reported last week that Mr. Daniels contemplated resigning. He submitted his resignation to his superior last Monday. It is reported further that Mr. Daniels' couldn't get results and was stripped of most of his authority several weeks ago. However, the White House is said to have offered Daniels an important post on the President's staff.

SEP 17 1942

On the other hand, all is not well with the colored personnel at OCD. Apparently, Negroes were never wanted in the setup, for most of those who were there during the Roosevelt-LaGuardia regime are assigned to other agencies and are not on the OCD payroll. First of these was Will Alexander, who was shunted to OFF and later to the Office of War Information. Then Miss Thelma Tabb was knocked out and sent to the personnel division, Office of Emergency Management.

Now there is talk that there is a wide difference of opinion between Mrs. Crystal Byrd Fauset, a competent administrator, and the powers that be. It is known that Mrs. Fauset is seldom in her office in the building which houses OCD although her secretary makes appointments there for her.

ALL ARE SILENT

What has transpired, no one knows for all concerned are strangely silent or the matter.

There has been talk that Lt. Col. Howard McQueen, a Washingtonian now assigned to the 368th infantry in Massachusetts, is to be brought into the Office of Civilian Defense in some capacity. Mrs. Fauset is racial relations adviser and has held this post for sometime. Her relations with Mr. Daniels and others who have left the OCD were most cordial.

On the other hand, there is a strong report current to the effect that OCD is planning a system of education for certain persons selected in various cities to do civilian defense work exclusively. Federal funds are to be provided for this instruction which will take place at four colleges. Tuskegee has been mentioned as one of the four and the only Negro institution.

The courses are to be conducted by military officers under immediate supervision of the war department. This would lend some credence to the calling on of Lt. Col. McQueen, who is greatly admired by Dean Landis.

TAUGHT BY ARMY

Officials are loathe to discuss the problems since OCD has been a sore spot for a number of months with no one seeming to know just what is going on as far as its program is concerned.

Negroes have not been wide awake to the possibilities of the OCD and there has always been a color question raised whenever the problems of war were discussed. This has been the topic of many discussions by groups coming to Washington, none of which ever received any satisfactory explanation of the workings of the organization.

SEP 17 1942

There is a general feeling that OCD should stand a little investigation as far as its treatment of Negroes is concerned and that the public is entitled to know some of the things it plans to do and how it plans to do them.

Parade And Rally For Negro OCD Workers Set

Certificates To Be Given Sunday To 150 Completing Work

A parade and rally for local Negro volunteer Civilian Defense workers who have completed training courses will be held Sunday afternoon, W. H. Turner, Jr., chairman of the Troup County Civilian Defense council, said today.

Arrangements for the parade and rally are being made under the leadership of Hubert T. Quillian, who is co-operating with local Negro Civilian Defense leaders.

The parade will form on Court Square at 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon and will be led by a band from Fort Benning. The parade will proceed down Main street from Main to Whitesville street to McGregor street school where the rally will be held.

Certificates for completion of training courses and insignia will be presented approximately 150 local Negroes who are giving splendid co-operation in the civilian protection program sponsored by the Troup County Civilian Defense council.

B. W. Whorton, commander of the local Civilian Defense Corps, will present the certificates and insignia.

The address of the afternoon will be delivered by W. H. Aiken, chairman of the Negro division of the Fulton County Civilian Defense Corps and another feature of the program will be musical selections by the Glee club of East Depot street school.

SEGREGATION POLICY OF OCD IS REPEATED

Protest To WPB Personnel Director Brings Sign Removal

12/5/42

By HARRY McALPIN
(From Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON— Employees of the War Production Board are still smarting from the flagrant affront which met their gaze on their bulletin boards and on their desks in the Social Security building last week.

Announcements of the WPB Employees Recreation association dance at the Wardman-Park hotel on Thanksgiving night carried a warning line at the bottom reading "THIS IS NOT A MIXED DANCE." The reference was to race, not sex.

The Employees Recreation association, whereas not an official government organization, is sponsored by the government, and a salaried recreation adviser is maintained on the government payroll in the Office of Emergency Management.

The announcements of the dance were placed on the bulletin boards in the halls of the Social Security building and in the cafeteria, and were also distributed in the morning to the desks of all employees, regardless of race, before the working day started.

Scratched Out

12/5/42

Negro WPB employees resented the last line of the announcement. One employee wrote on the bottom of the announcement on the cafeteria bulletin board, "Is this what we are fighting for?" The line was later scratched out, but the announcement was permitted to remain on the board.

A delegation of United Federal Workers of America union members took the matter up with the Director of Personnel of the WPB, Carlton Hayward, who said he would issue an order forbidding anyone putting up signs or passing handbills that were objectionable to any workers.

The delegation also called on Miss Eddy, government's paid director of war workers' recreational activities in the OEM.

The entire incident recalled a similar occurrence in the OCD some months ago when the OCD Employees announced a dance at the same Wardman Park hotel. Tickets were offered to all employees, but when the hotel management heard this, immediate assurance was sought that no Negroes would attend. The hotel threatened to cancel the dance contract if such assurance was not given.

12/5/42

Goes To First Lady

Pauline Redmond Coggs, now executive secretary of the Washington Urban League, who at that time was a member of the staff of the race relations division of OCD had already bought a ticket. She was asked to give up the ticket and accept a refund. She refused on the basis that she was an OCD employee. The matter was taken to the OCD Director, James Landis, his then assistant, Johnathan Daniels, and eventually to Mrs. Roosevelt.

Mrs. Roosevelt called Mrs. Coggs and Mordecai Johnson, president of Howard university, into a conference on the matter. After a discussion, both Mrs. Roosevelt and Dr. Johnson left the decision to Mrs. Coggs without suggesting what she should do. After a further discussion with Daniels and Landis, who appealed to Mrs. Coggs on the grounds that the OCD's appropriation was then pending in Congress and that certain reactionary interests would delight to get hold of such an incident to curtain OCD, Mrs. Coggs agreed not to attend the dance—but only after she had been assured that a similar occurrence would not again arise.

This assurance came through Wayne Coy, regarded as the President's trouble-shooter, who was then serving in OEM, under whom came Miss Eddy, the paid director of recreation activities.

12/5/42

Repetition Again

With Mrs. Coggs now out of the government service, these assurances were apparently kicked out the window. The same hotel, having the same discriminatory policy, was selected for the WPB employees dance.

This same Miss Eddy, when she first entered upon her job of working out recreation programs for war workers, dismissed a committee meeting of white and Negro workers when it appeared a majority favored mixed recreational programs. She reorganized a new committee which was more favorable to her own ideas of segregation.

Prices To Be Discussed At Butler St. 'Y'

Under the joint sponsorship of The Atlanta Negro Chamber of Commerce and The Atlanta Daily World there will be held a meeting at the Butler Street YMCA Friday evening, September 11, at the hour of eight o'clock. Mr. R. W. Florrid, Price Specialist for the State of Georgia OPA, has agreed to be present and discuss matters concerning price ceilings and other matters which concern every dealer who sells anything.

A recently published comparative study of food prices in New York City by The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, reveals wide discrepancies between the prices on staple articles for housewives in Harlem and other shopping areas covered by the study. These conditions very probably obtain in most urban centers. It is urgently important, therefore, that all merchants and other business men and women attend this meeting.

The Chamber and the World are cooperating with the OPA office in this attempt to get colored merchants and other business men and women acquainted with this subject which so vitally affects their everyday operations.

The matter of getting some Negroes affiliated with the OPA in this area will also be discussed at this meeting.

Mr. Menelik Jackson, vice-president of the Chamber of Commerce, and Mr. V. W. Hodges of The Atlanta Daily World, will be in charge of the meeting.

Race Bias Gets Senate Backing

OCT 1 - 1942

PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, Oct. 1.—The Senate voted twice yesterday, in effect, to approve race discrimination in selection of personnel for rent, price, and rationing boards.

Two attempts to add amendments to the Price Control Bill to prevent such discrimination were rejected without record votes with a chorus of "NO" coming from the Southern Democratic section of the chamber.

Rarely has the Senate witnessed such flagrant disregard of the Constitution and the rights of democratic citizens.

Both amendments were sought by the National Negro Council, which protested to the Senate Banking Committee that Negroes were not being given representation, particularly in the South.

The first amendment, offered by Sen. Alexander Wiley (R., Wis.), provided that:

"There shall be no discrimination in the administration of the benefits of the Emergency Price Control Act on account of race, creed, or color and in the membership of rent, price, and rationing boards."

Knowing that the Southerners would kill the proposal if possible, Wiley asked for a record vote, so that Senators would have to show how they were voting. Only a half dozen Senators supported him, and the try for a record vote failed. Among those raising their hands with Wiley were Sens. Norris (Ind., Neb.), LaFollette (Prog., Wis.) and Francis Maloney (D., Conn.). Maloney was the only Democrat.

On the voice vote, Wiley was defeated. He asked for a standing vote, but Sen. Berkeley L. Bunker (D., Nev.), presiding, ruled his request had come too late. Uusually such technicalities are not observed in the House. If a Senator wants a standing vote, he gets it.

A few minutes later the same thing happened on a similar amendment offered by Sen. James M. Tunnell (D., Del.). So officials have been given a go-ahead signal from the Senate to practice race discrimination.

All-Negro Ration Board Protested in Richmond

OCT 30 1942

Richmond, Va., Oct. 29 (AP).—Richmond Negroes have protested to the State OPA Organization against the establishment here of an all-Negro rationing board on the ground that it is "an extension" of "Jim-crowism."

A committee called upon Brig. Gen. J. Fulmer Bright, State OPA director, to express objections. The group represented Negro Masonic Organizations, ministerial associations and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The new board, which was the first of its kind in Virginia, was set up by the OPA in what was described as a move to serve Negroes better by establishing a board in their own community and by relieving congestion in the original Richmond office.

OPA To Study Living Costs Differentials

NOV 7 - 1942

WASHINGTON, D. C.—In response to the urging of the NAACP that the OPA devise feasible means for wiping out price inequalities in Negro communities, Leon Henderson, O. P. A. administrator this week told the association that the Office of Price Administration was "anxious to have these problems given full consideration in the conduct of its war work."

Henderson said that his office did not possess any extensive evidence of the problems raised by the NAACP concerning price differentials in Negro neighborhoods.

The NAACP had pointed out that if higher prices are found in New York City as their survey "Food Costs More in Harlem" indicates such price differentials must exist in comparable segregated Negro areas throughout the nation. Plans are underway for similar NAACP survey in all major American cities.

"We anticipate," Mr. Henderson's letter continued, "that during the following months actions will be taken which will have the effect of leveling off ceiling prices of particular commodities for all retail stores within any given class of outlets.

Such action would of course automatically eliminate any price ceiling differentials which previously existed in Negro areas for the same commodities sold in the same types of retail outlets.

Leaders Protest OPA Race Board

NOV 7 - 1942

RICHMOND, Va., Nov. 5—Terming formation of an all-colored War Price and Rationing board here as an extension of the program of separation of races generally, regarded as "jim-crowism," a committee of Negro leaders Monday called on Brigadier General J. Fulmer Bright, state Office of Price Administration director, to register formal protest on the grounds that the board is a federal organization and the federal government doesn't recognize any separation of races.

Dr. Leon Reid, of 1727-A East Main street, a spokesman for the group, asserted:

"The customs of a local community shouldn't be injected. It's just like setting up two post offices here." The petition of protest, filed with General Bright, was as follows:

LIST OF OBJECTIONS

"We set forth herewith the basis for establishing of an all-Negro rationing board, as proposed, should be voided because—

(1) It extends the jim-crow policy of separation of the races.

(2) It disrupts the morale of colored citizens.

(3) It creates a division among the people in support of the country's war effort.

(4) It places the U. S. government in the position of setting up discrimination against its citizens and dividing them into special groups in the operation of a federal program.

(5) It is illegal.

(6) It creates unnecessary expense and a waste of the people's money.

(7) It can create but ill-will and confusion."

NOV 7 - 1942

The protest was signed by Chairman A. W. Brown of a committee representing the Interdenominational Ministers' Association with Drs. J. E. Fountain, J. A. Brown, S. L. Pacham and S. W. Thompson; the NAACP, Drs. J. M Tinley and W. J. Ransome; Mrs. J. E. Harris and J. Byron Hopkins Jr.

FIRST VA. BOARD

The board, first of its kind in Virginia, was set up by the OPA in what was described as a move to serve colored people better by establishing such a unit within their own community, thus cutting down congestion at the original Richmond board office.

The new board was scheduled to open its office for the first time Monday in the Southern Aid Society building at Third and Clay streets.

Richmond's Cause Celebre

NOV 7 - 1942

RICHMOND, the Old Dominion's second city, is in the midst of a problem, in the solution of which we have no intention of obtruding, as we know pretty well that Richmonders can settle their own problems.

Still the problem is one that has much significance for the race throughout the South, and upon the way it is adjusted in Richmond will hinge its adjustment elsewhere.

State Price Administrator Bright appointed an all-Negro rationing board of three members, which was to have its own office in the Negro section of the city, and its own Negro clerical personnel. No sooner had the appointment been made than Richmonders objected. The board was an "extension" of Jim-Crowism. That tells the whole story.

NOV 7 - 1942

First a committee waited upon General Bright, who, it seems, advised the committee to wait upon the members of the board and ask them to resign. This was done but the board refused—quite positively and politely—to resign. Next move was a mass meeting, attended—so the daily papers say—by about 300 persons, who concluded to make further representations to General Bright, to Washington, and to boycott the all-Negro rationing board. That is as far as matters had gone up to this writing.

Without particular reference to the merits of the Richmond cause celebre, which we have no desire to enter, except as a commentator, we have here the components of the tragic situation confronting the Negro in the South. (1) The present administration at Washington, advised by certain hand-picked white men such as Dr. Will Alexander, is yielding to the South's wishes on the disposition of the Negro's part in this war effort. (2) The Southern whites can "divide and rule" the Southern Negroes any time they wish to do so, as exemplified in the Richmond case, where, on the one hand, representative Negroes resent Jim Crowism and oppose it, and on the other hand representative Negroes accept it when it is handed out officially.

NOV 7 - 1942

Above the clamor at Richmond can be heard the wishful thinking of the OPA officials and the newspapers that the protestants do not represent the masses of the Negroes. But in this they are deceiving themselves. There never was a time in the history of the United States when the masses of the Negroes were more distressed and more united concerning the impact of segregation upon their lives. There never was a time when they were farther ahead of their leaders on this question than they are at the present time.

Protest Made Over Forming Negro Board

State OPA Action Is in Disfavor

Terming the formation of an all-Negro War Price and Rationing Board in Richmond as "an extension of the program of separation of races generally regarded as 'jim-crowism,'" a committee of Negroes yesterday called on Brigadier-General J. Fulmer Bright, State OPA director, to register their protest.

"The ration board is a Federal organization and the Federal government doesn't recognize any separation of races," Dr. Leon A. Reid, of 1727-A East Main St., a spokesman for the group, declared. "The customs of a local community shouldn't be injected. It's just like setting up two post offices here."

Organizations represented by the Negroes who visited the State Opa office are the Interdenominational Ministerial Association, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the Negro Masonic organization and the Baptist Ministers' Conference. Dr. Reid told General Bright and Henry L. Caravati, State OPA organization officer, that the committee members were named to protest the establishment of "this Jim Crow board."

To Hold Meeting

Following the conference, it was announced that a meeting of Negro citizens will be held at 7 o'clock Friday night at 402½ North Second St. to discuss formation of the Negro board. Mr. Caravati will represent General Bright at the meeting, and also attending will be the three members of the new board, C. L. Townes, chairman; W. St. Elmo Reede, and Roscoe C. Mitchell.

The Negro board, the first of its kind in Virginia, was set up by the OPA in what was described as a move to serve Negroes better by establishing a board in their own community, thus cutting down congestion at the original Richmond board office. The new board is scheduled to open its office for the first time today, in the Southern Aid Society Building at Third and Clay Streets.

General Bright explained to the committee yesterday that members of all local rationing boards are nominated by the local Offices of Civilian Defense and approved by the State OPA director.

Petition Given

The petition of protest filed with General Bright yesterday was as follows:

"We set forth herewith the basis for our objection to the establishing of an all-Negro rationing board, as has been proposed for the city of Richmond.

"(1) It is an extension of the program of separation of the races generally regarded as 'jim-crowism.'

"(2) It disrupts the morale of the colored citizens of Richmond.

"(3) It creates a diversion among the people in the support of the country's war effort.

"(4) It places the United States government in the position of setting up discrimination against its citizens and dividing them into special groups in the operation of a Federal program.

"(5) It is illegal.

"(6) It creates unnecessary expense and a waste of the people's money.

"(7) It can create but ill-will and confusion.

The protest was signed by A. W. Brown, chairman of the committee. Representing the Interdenominational Ministerial Association were Dr. C. S. McCall and Rev. E. A. Hewlett; the Baptist Ministers Conference, Dr. J. E. Fountan, Dr. J. A. Brown, Dr. S. L. Pacham and Dr. S. W. Thompson; the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Dr. J. M. Tinley, Dr. W. J. Ransome; the Afro American Newspapers, Mrs. J. E. Harris. Attorney for the group is J. Byron Hopkins, Jr.

Citizens Divided On Issue

Some Want It And Some Call It 'Jim-Crow'

Nov. 13, 1942

RICHMOND, Va. — (ANP) —A question which is giving rise to more than ordinary discussion here in Richmond is whether Negroes do or do not want a rationing board composed entirely of Negroes serving them under the Office of Price Administration.

Brig. Gen. J. Fulmer Bright, state OPA director, appointed such a board in setting up his state organization. On it he named three prominent Richmonders; C. L. Towne, secretary of the Virginia Mutual Insurance Co.; Roscoe Mitchell, former newspaperman, and St. Elmo Reeds.

The board, which was equal in size to a similar white group set up in the downtown district, opened its separate offices in the Southern Aid building Monday.

A considerable segment of the population disapproves the setting up of the all-Negro board. They call the board "an extension of the program of separation of the races generall regarded as jim-crowism."

Among those holding this point of view are the N. A. A. C. P., the Interdenominational Ministerial association, the Masons and the Baptist Ministers' conference.

A committee from these organizations called upon General Bright to protest the all-Negro board.

"The war price and ration board is a federal organization and the federal government doesn't recognize any separation of the races," Dr. Leon A. Reid, spokesman for the group, said. "The customs of a local community shouldn't be injected. It's just like setting up two postoffices here."

Dr. J. M. Tinsley, president of the Richmond branch of the N. A. A. C. P., sent a formal letter of opposition and a petition to Leon Henderson, OPA administrator, last week. Dr. Tinsley called the appointment of a Negro board "an action in keeping with southern jim-crow policies."

The letter followed a formal protest to the state administrator, Brig. Gen. J. Fulmer Bright, which was unavailing in its effort toward a changed situation. Gen. Bright, who declared that he believed in racial separation, said that the establishment of an all-Negro ration board for Richmond, however, had nothing to do with racial segregation.

Dr. Tinsley's letter predicted that the establishment and operation of this type of board will create disunity and ill-wind at a time when complete unity and good-will of all Americans is essential to the successful prosecution of the war effort. His communication to Mr. Henderson read in part:

"The act of the state administrator in setting up the segregated or jim crow board has created great apprehension among the Negroes of Richmond, and is undermining their morale, the maintenance of which is so necessary in this time of war. It is creating disunity and a feeling among them that this act is a procursor of a governmental policy of segregation or jim crowism. They object to an agency of the Federal government establishing a policy of Jim Crowism."

A group of eight men and women named to formulate plans for non-cooperation with the all-Negro ration board, it it persists, include Oliver W. Hill, attorney; Mrs. Sonora B. Lawson, John M. Moore, Dr. C. C. Scott, H. H. Scott, Dr. J. M. Newman, Mrs. Ophelia H Brown, and Mrs. W. L. Ransome.

After a mass meeting, with more than 150 Negro organizations represented(Dr. Reid, member of the original protesting group, said:

"We want to get the reaction from headquarters in Washington." Gen. Bright had previously declared:

"As far as the OPA here is concerned the matter is closed. The board has been named and will operate."

Townes, chairman of the ration board, said: "I am trying to get to the bottom of this discussion. So far I believe the sentiment of the Negro people is divided on the issue but that as many or more favor the separate board as oppose it."

Chairman Townes indicated that the members of the Negro board would sit tight and refuse to resign until some further action was taken in the matter. The board is being kept busy, Townes said, although facilities for business have not been completed.

No white residents of the city yet have patronized the new board, Townes said, but he expects white persons living near the board to make use of it.

Ration Board Employees Must Be Segregated" Goodman Rules

LOUISVILLE, KY.—(SNS)—

"It will be either a segregated office or no jobs for Negroes in local ration boards," George Goodman, State Administrator, told a committee—representatives of the NAACP, Urban League, and two members of local boards. This conclusion was stated after a two-hour conference arranged by J. A. Thomas, Urban League Executive, in order to clear the air of the confusion that has existed for the past two months over the matter of jobs for Negroes.

Acting on information furnished by Leon Henderson's office of the National Urban League and its local branches, Mr. Thomas said he wrote Mr. Goodman early in June when he was appointed State Administrator and informed him that Negroes were expecting paid employment as well as voluntary work in connection with the OPA program. Executive Order 8802, Mr. Goodman was told, applies to Federal agencies as well as private industries. Following a discussion of the local situation in the State Director's office in July, assurance was given by him that Negro workers would be employed as soon as the organization program got under way. In reply to inquiry made by S. A. Burnley, president of the local branch of the NAACP, Mr. Goodman again said that it was his intention to employ Negroes.

INQUIRIES GET RUN-AROUND

Since August various assistants in the OPA office have discovered many reasons for not employing Negroes—Lack of funds for additional workers and difficulty in getting white employees to work with Negroes—were mentioned most freely. Several weeks ago, it was reported to the NAACP that the OPA planned to set up an all Negro board with complete staff. Objections to this procedure followed the NAACP and efforts were made to discuss it with Mr. Goodman. Failing to arrange the conference, correspondence was directed to Leon Henderson's office and other Federal offices charging the State and local administration with discrimination.

A thorough and sometimes heated discussion of the whole matter preceded Mr. Goodman's statement of policy on the question of employment for Negroes. Members of the joint committee which included S. A. Burnley, I. Willie Cole, Dr. J. H. Walls, C. H. Parrish, J. A. Thomas, and the two members of Ration Boards—S. O. Johnson and the Rev. George Farish—plainly stated that they could see no necessity for the segregated office. Louisville, it was pointed out, is accustomed to public activities which Negroes and whites work together. It was further explained to Mr. Goodman that there is no segregation of persons served by the Boards and there should be none of persons working on the Boards. Mr. Goodman said he was sure that white workers would object to working with Negroes. A separate office, he explained, seemed to him to be the best solution and this opinion was shared by several persons with whom he had discussed it.

Temporarily, at least, the possibility of jobs for Negroes is stalemated on the question of segregation although the matter was not considered a close one. Mr. Goodman explained that it was up to local Boards to select employees and they could do as they pleased. Members of the Boards in the meeting stated that the names of Negro applicants were never submitted, although more than a dozen persons had applied for work. Representatives of the two organizations declared they would ask for conferences with local Boards on the issue and report the present situation to the Regional and National offices of the OPA.

Negro Recreational Facilities

News that the USO agencies of Anniston are acutely aware of the need for recreational facilities for Negro soldiers at Fort McClellan and that the USO Council plans to provide them is a source of much gratification, inasmuch as this is a problem that has vexed both civilian and military officials here.

This problem will grow more vexing when the Replacement Training Center at Fort McClellan gets into full swing, for there will be in the neighborhood of 4,000 colored troops stationed at the Fort then and some provision must be made for recreation in Anniston. The various USO centers are doing a good job in providing for white troops, but must increase the scope of their activities to include the colored service men also.

Responsible Negro leaders of the city will assume a share of the responsibility in this undertaking just as have the white citizens for their own race. The Negro troops stationed at the Fort have been exceptionally well-behaved, and this is a record of which they can be especially proud. This record was established under the most trying conditions when little or no recreation facilities were provided, and disorders of some minor nature might have been expected as a natural result.

But the very opposite was true. However, Anniston owes something to the colored soldiers, as they are defenders of our country also and adequate recreation facilities should be provided for them as quickly as possible. It is to be hoped that speedy action is taken to provide them.

Need Emphasized

Anniston's need for a recreation center for Negro soldiers stationed at Fort McClellan was emphasized Friday night by a shooting which resulted in the serious wounding of one Negro soldier.

Had Anniston possessed a recreational center for these colored soldiers it is probable that this tragedy would not have occurred. Press association bureaus in other cities heard rumors that a race riot had broken out here and the offices of The Star were kept busy Saturday morning denying these rumors. Such occurrences are something that the city can well do without.

Unless some provision is made for the off duty time of the Negro soldiers, the situation may become steadily worse and might result in serious trouble. The incident last Friday night was the first involving any Negro soldiers from Fort McClellan, and outside of this one occurrence, their conduct has been above reproach.

However, some recreational facilities must be provided for these men or Anniston will have more and more incidents similar to Friday night's and some probably a great deal more serious. The USO Council has recognized this pressing need and with increased numbers of Negro troops scheduled to be quartered at Fort McClellan when the Replacement Center gets well underway, immediate action is necessary.

Dr. Sadie Alexander Heads Philadelphia U. S. O. Group

JAN 17 1942

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.—In what is believed to be the first of its kind in the country, Theodore Voorhees, chairman of Philadelphia's USO Committee this week named Dr. Sadie T. M. Alexander chairman of the Citizens Committee of Philadelphia to extend hospitality to all service men, regardless of race, creed or color who visit the City of Brotherly Love.

Some forty prominent Philadelphians of both races comprise the membership of the committee.

JAN 17 1942

Arthur U. Crosby (white), prominent Philadelphian from the Chestnut Hill section of the city, will head up the executive committee. Other members of the executive committee are: Lester C. Haworth, Dr. Walter F. Jerrick, Ida W. Sarvay, Arthur Huff Fauset, Lewis M. Stevens, Mamie E. Davis, Dr. Ferdinand Upshur, Bishop David H. Sims, Donald C. Rubel, Herbert T. Miller, Rev. Marshall L. Shepard, Theodore Voorhees, Theodore O. Spaulding.

REFUSED SEGREGATED HOSPITALITY CENTERS

Philadelphians created a nationwide sensation when they refused the Defense Council's request that a segregated hospitality center be set up for Negro soldiers. Turning their backs on the Defense Council, the committee headed by Herbert T. Miller, local "Y" executive, appealed to the USO Committee for a hearing. It was from this committee that the request for complete integration of Negro soldiers in all USO clubs in Philadelphia was granted.

The 76th Coast Artillery, formerly stationed at Fort Bragg, is at present in Philadelphia protecting that city of two million inhabitants, its ship yards, and its defense plants.

Because of her dynamic personality Dr. Alexander was voted the logical person to head the work of the USO Committee. Besides being the first Negro woman in Amercia to receive the Ph.D. degree (University of Pennsylvania), she is also the first and only Negro woman to be admitted to the practice of law in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and also to serve two terms as assistant city solicitor of Philadelphia.

Station Hospital Lists Program for Its Convalescents

Highlights of next week's entertainment program for convalescent soldiers in Fort Jackson's station hospital in the Red Cross recreation building at the hospital will be a program of Negro spirituals on Sunday afternoon; the monthly Gray Lady party on Tuesday night; and the USO-Camp show, "Keep Shufflin," on Friday afternoon.

The spirituals will be sung from 6:30 until 7:30 Sunday evening by a group of Negro soldiers from one of the detachments stationed at the post. A community sing program will be held at 6:30 p. m. Monday.

The Gray Lady parties are one of the outstanding events held for the patients every month, according to the Red Cross workers. This party will be held, commencing at 6:30 Tuesday night, and it is expected that 500 soldier-patients will attend. On Wednesday night, the movie, "Stardust of the Sage," will feature the singing cowboy who recently entered the army, Gene Autry.

Thursday's schedule calls for a bingo party in the afternoon; the Noble Sissle USO unit, "Keep Shufflin," will send some of its best performers up for a special performance at 3 Friday afternoon, and game night will be observed that night.

On Saturday night, the movie, "My Gal Sal," with Rita Hayworth, Vic Mature and James Gleason, will be shown. Immediately following the movie, the regularly weekly broadcast, "Fort Jackson on the Air" will emanate from the auditorium with the patients as special guests. This program is a weekly feature of the radio division of the post public relations office.

Group To Plan Negro Program

Recreation For Troops In This Area Will Be Discussed

To provide further for the extensive social and recreational program being launched for Negro troops in training at Fort Jackson, the Columbia Army Air Base and other nearby training centers, an important organization meeting will be held at the Old Howard community center, Hampton and Lincoln streets, at 8:30 tonight.

Numerous Columbians as well as representatives from service centers will be present at the meeting which is being sponsored by the WPA defense recreation committee for the Columbia area. All interested in assisting this program were urged to attend.

The main purpose of the meeting, according to E. F. Sweat, director of social and recreational activities in the Columbia area, is to present ways in which Columbians and those in charge at the various centers can best cooperate in carrying out the current program. A general committee and various executive committees will be elected.

Representing the troops in training, Capt. James A. Ruffin, chaplain of Fort Jackson Negro troops, will speak on the various social and recreational needs of Negro soldiers, while a disclosure of findings of various committees will indicate what organizations and individuals throughout the Columbia area are prepared to do.

Negro Musical Group To Appear At Fort

The K. P. Comedy Quintest, a unique group of Negro musicians who beat more rhythm and harmony out of a set of G. I. kitchen utensils than the average musician produces from standard instruments, will play at the field house at Fort McClellan tonight at 7:30 o'clock together with the Fisk Jubilee Four, a vocal ensemble who will demonstrate the more traditional aspects of Negro music.

The Fisk Jubilee Four are matched voices from Fisk University at Nashville, Tenn., highly trained in authentic renditions of spirituals and folk melodies, as well as currently popular vocal numbers. They will present Negro folk music of a rural nature representative of the countryside, while the boys of the washboard, the tin basin and the ten-gallon lard can will stress the city's contribution to folk music.

Although the K. P. Quintest include guitars and a banjo-mandolin in their instrumentation, these fugitives from kitchen patrol are so adept at playing their unconventional music-makers that a representative of the Library of Congress in Washington attended a recent rehearsal for the USO-Camp Shows tour to record the group's unorthodox renditions for the Library's permanent files of folk music.

JAN 26 1942

La Guardia Children Also on Tour of Recreation Building for Negro Troops

Mayor La Guardia made yesterday a tour of the Harlem Defense Recreation Center for service men, which took him from the meeting room on the top floor to the kitchen in the basement of the five-story building at 2348 Seventh Avenue. He described the center as "most satisfactory."

The Mayor arrived shortly after 1 P. M., accompanied by his children, Eric and Jean; Mrs. Anna M. Rosenberg, Federal Director of Defense, Health and Related Activities; Mrs. Julius Ochs Adler, co-chairman of the New York City Defense Recreation Committee, and Jay M. Ver Lee, regional recreation representative.

Begins at Top Floor

Samuel Allen, chairman of the Harlem committee of the New York City Defense Recreation Committee, and C. L. Alexander, executive director of the new center, took the party to the top floor, where the Mayor examined with professional aplomb the furnishings and appearance of the room. His apparent satisfaction with the interior was spoiled, however, when he looked from the window into a garbage-cluttered alley adjacent to the building.

"I'm going to have it cleaned tomorrow," he said. "You know that's private property, but I'll have it cleaned. If it isn't kept clean, I'll going to have a summons served on somebody."

The Mayor and his party passed through dormitories, quarters for officers and lounge rooms for the Negro troops stationed in the metropolitan area. Mrs. Rosenberg noted the needs of the individual rooms and told officials of the Harlem committee that WPA pictures, curtains, flags and additional game material soon would be on the way.

JAN 26 1942

Lack of Posted Rules

Mrs. Adler said she found the building had a "feeling of homelike warmth," adding that she was particularly pleased to notice the lack of posted rules and regulations. As she walked through the building she said she could feel an atmosphere reflecting the joint interest of the community and the Army.

The group inspected also the game rooms, the kitchen and the dance hall. When the Mayor was ready to leave he told his audience that he was "well pleased with the diversifications for amusement, rest and recreation, but better yet is the enthusiasm and interest of the local groups in the community."

JAN 26 1942

Since its establishment on Nov. 29, the building has cared for the recreation, welfare and information needs of 12,340 Negro troops. The brick building, a former sanitarium, can accommodate 500 men a day. Two hundred and fifty volunteer workers help staff the center.

RECREATION UNITS TO BE DEDICATED

Three Buildings to Be Put Into Use at Tullahoma in Ceremonies Sunday

Special to The Chattanooga Times.

TULLAHOMA, Tenn., Jan. 23.—Many a Tullahoma lamp post will be without the support of a sad-eyed boy in uniform after Sunday.

Three federal community buildings will be dedicated and put into use at Tullahoma tomorrow. They will be a welcome addition to the small centers operated by the army Y. M. C. A., the war and navy commission of the Luthern church, the Episcopal diocese of Tennessee, the general board of the Methodist church and the Jewish Welfare board.

This will be glad tidings for some 30,000 soldiers at Camp Forrest who visit downtown Tullahoma in search of something to do within the limits of their meager pay.

Construction and furnishings of the buildings were supervised by the federal security agency's office of defense health and welfare services under the community facilities act, it is pointed out by Richard H. Lyle, regional director. After opening of the plants, all of which are centrally located, operation will be in the hands of the United Service Organizations for National Defense with one building staffed by the National Catholic Community service, second by the Y. W. C. A. and the third by the Y. M. C. A. and the Jewish Welfare board in joint occupancy.

Step Towards Needs

"The new federal community buildings in Tullahoma are a substantial step toward meeting the need for clean, wholesome fun," Mr. Lyle said. "This is one of more than 260 similar projects throughout the United States, of which there are fifty-one nearing completion in the six states of Region VII, Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, South Carolina and Tennessee, located near concentrations of armed forces or emergency defense industries."

Sherwood Gates, regional recreation representative, with headquarters in Mr. Lyle's office in Birmingham, has been in direct charge of this $3,000,000 program in the southeast. Raymond A. Hoyer, Mr. Gates' field recreation representative, has been in Tullahoma for the past ten months handling local supervision.

Mr. Hoyer announces that Sunday's dedication program, which is under auspices of the Tullahoma defense recreation committee, with the Rev. Roscoe S. Thompson as chairman, will include:

Opening, "The Star-Spangled Banner," by the Thirty-third division band.

Invocation by the Rev. Peter Dennis, St. Barnabas Episcopal church, Tullahoma.

Welcoming remarks by Chairman Thompson.

Short address by Prentice Cooper, governor of Tennessee.

Federal Works Agency presents keys, W. Frank Soloman.

Federal Security Agency receives keys, R. A. Hoyer.

Address by David M. Robison, chairman Tullahoma U. S. O. council.

Remarks by Maj.-Gen. Samuel T. Lawton, commander Thirty-third division, and by Col. Millard F. Waltz, commanding officer, Camp Forrest.

Closing remarks by Chairman Thompson.

Following these ceremonies which will be held for all three facilities in the auditorium of the building located at South Jackson and Carroll streets, simultaneous reception and open house will be held in the three clubhouses. The two buildings operated by the men's organizations include spacious lobbies and porches, snack bar, reading, writing and club rooms with comfortable facilities for men and women. A large auditorium suitable for entertainment or dancing is provided with a stage upon which many of the top stars of stage, screen and radio will perform in the coming months. Comfortable living quarters adjoin each of these buildings for staff members.

The third building will be operated by the Y. W. C. A. It is a spacious old home which has been renovated to provide home-like facilities for the many girls and women who have come to Tullahoma either for camp employment or to be near relatives stationed at Camp Forrest.

But the role of the federal security agency does not end with the opening of the center.

Basic Task to Aid

"The basic task has been and will continue to be that of helping communities in the organization of all types of native recreational resources for the meeting of defense needs," Mr. Hoyer explained.

"This task concerns industrial workers quite as much as soldiers and sailors. In the past ten months, the field recreation representatives have directed the organization of approximately 150 cities and towns in the southwest. In every instance, effort has been made to establish such organizational machinery as would represent all of the major civic, social educational, religious and service resources of the community. The organization is usually named 'The Defense Recreation committee.' This organization has been broken down into functional sub-committees to plan and execute sundry types of leisure time services."

Among the buildings in Region VII, which will be opened within the next four weeks for use of service men and workers at defence plants, are those listed by states, below, with location, and approximate cost:

Alabama — Anniston, $175,000; Talladega, $60,000; Childersburg, $75,000; Jacksonville, $75,000; Sylacauga, $75,000; Selma, $11,000; Montgomery, $20,000; Phenix City, $75,000.

RECREATION ROOM EQUIPMENT ASKED

FEB 11 1942

Negro organizations of the district pledged themselves to equip 20 recreation rooms for use by about 5,000 Negro soldiers stationed at Ft. McClellan, Monday night at a meeting sponsored by the Negro Citizens' Committee for Army Welfare.

The Rev. Frank Ledford, civilian associate post morale officer, made an appeal for equipment to give soldiers relaxation and wholesome recreation. He stated that though the government provided a recreation room for each company, it did not equip these rooms and that at present they were entirely empty of furnishings.

Requirements for the rooms include a radio, ping pong table lounging chairs, floor and table lamps, victrola and card tables.

A local firm made a donation of 20 radios to the rooms. The Citizens Committee for Army Welfare has made an appeal to all citizens to help. Donations may be made to the Rev. J. Clyde Perry, chairman, or to Emory O. Jackson at the Branch Y. M. C. A.

Negro Recreation Center

An opportunity is presented to Montgomery to make provision for healthful recreation for the hundreds of Negro soldiers stationed at Maxwell Field. It ought to be done not only as a gesture of good will and appreciation of their military services, but as a measure of public safety. Within the week we have had a deplorable tragedy in which a colored soldier in uniform was a participant which might have been avoided if the soldier had had some suitable place to spend the hours he was off duty.

The recreation centers Montgomery has provided for white soldiers are a credit to the city, and they are recognized as performing a fine service in aiding the morale of the thousands of men in uniform.

A center of this kind would perform a needed service among the 700 or more Negroes in uniform at Maxwell Field, but would also serve importantly the increasing number of Negro soldiers who are passing through the city on various missions in connection with their assignments. A center of this kind is hardly possible without the aid of the white friends of the race, and this seems an exceptional opportunity to show that friendship in a practical and helpful way.

More Amazing 'War Efforts'

The country was made indignant a few days ago by receipt of the information that Mrs. Roosevelt had provided a job for one of her proteges with the Office of Civilian Defense as a teacher of rhythmic dancing at a salary of $4,900 a year. The Scripps-Howard newspapers, sensing that much of this same kind of insanity was going on under the guise of "aid the war effort," assigned one of their staff writers, Mr. Bob Ruark, to the job of uncovering what else was being done in this branch of the "war service." We reprint here from the Birmingham Post, some of his findings so the reader may be able properly to gauge the progress of the war effort:

WASHINGTON, March 13.—While Senator Byrd (D., Va.), fulminates at an OCD bowling coordinator away out in Chicago, he might aim a few darts at closer targets. Here in Washington are members of an OCD Sports Board embracing 35 departments.

The horseshoe-pitching chief of the OCD's muscle building program is Harry T. Woodfield. The rifle shooting boss is C. B. Lister, secretary-treasurer of the National Rifle Association. The co-ordinator of Negro sports, Edwin B. Henderson, is recreation adviser for Negro schools here.

Badminton—R. Ward Starrett, Chicago.

Archery—H. A. McCune, Ben Persons, Inc., Pine Bluff, Ark.

Billiards—Charles C. Peterson, Chicago.

Canoeing—Theo Altender, Philadelphia.

Camping—Robert Lechner, Trenton, N. J.

Code ball—William E. Code, Chicago. (Editor's note: What is code ball?)

Miniature golf—Frank Beal, New York.

Paddle ball and paddle tennis—also Mr. Beal.

Weight-lifting—Robert Hoffman, York, Pa.

There's a raft of similar co-ordinators, including skiing and trap-shooting. But that ought to be enough.

Mr. Woodfield, president of the National Horseshoe Pitching Association, is frank to say his association is delighted to join hands with OCD to obtain much-needed publicity.

Working with Jack Kelly's physical fitness unit of OCD, Mr. Woodfield's program is to increase membership and interest in shoe-flinging clubs all over the nation. He answers all questions about staging tournaments, forming clubs, laying out courts, etc.

Mr. Woodfield, a former acrobat, says that "in horseshoe pitching lies the physical salvation of the nation.

"It doesn't cost much. You can get a set of shoes for a couple of dollars. You can set up a court almost anywhere," he says.

Mr. Woodfield hopes eventually to get funds to set up pitching courts around the government buildings.

SMO VOTES NEGRO CENTER

479

The board of governors last night voted unanimously to rent a house in East Tarboro, and to provide $100 in equipment for an SMO Negro canteen.

At the same time the SMO gave the Legion Auxiliary, through their chairman, Mrs. Marion Wall, $50 to complete their payment of improvements, and $10 a month to operate.

Mrs. Wall came before the group and outlined the fact that the $200 granted the Legion Auxiliary in August was $50 short and she asked for an additional appropriation for this work. She got it by unanimous vote. Then she asked for $10 a month for operation money, and she got that too.

Dr. Royster brought out the point that the SMO canteen should be open every day all day, especially over the week-ends, and Mrs. Wall said this point had been brought before the committee on SMO project operation and they had frowned on the idea, believing local people would enter the canteen and do some damage. However, Mrs. Wall said she would go again to the committee and tell them of the insistence of the SMO chairman and board of governors that the place be open all the time.

F. D. Wharton, chairman of the Negro SMO, asked for $100 for equipment of stoves, hot water heater and shower in the Negro SMO canteen. He got it.

At the same time the board of governors authorized the treasurer to contact through Mr. Pembroke Nash for the Rebecca Lloyd house on Lloyd and Wilson streets, as a Negro SMO center.

Those present last night were:

Dr. T. H. Royster, president; Mrs. Haywood Foxhall, vice president; H. Dail Holderness, treasurer, and Aubrey Shackell, secretary.

And Milford Haynes, Mrs. John Varnell, Mrs. Edgar Clark, Mrs. Anna Baker Fenner, W. Robert Worsley, George Earnhart, F. D. Wharton and W. A. Pattillo.

F.W.A. Approves Negroes' Center At Hopkinsville

Courier-Journal, Louisville, Ky.
OCT 13 1942

Hopkinsville, Ky., Oct. 12 (AP)—Approval of $49,500 recreational facilities project here for Negro soldiers at nearby Camp Campbell today by the Federal Works Agency brought a promise from Mayor A. S. Koon to investigate delay in approving a similar project for white service men.

The mayor said the city had appealed to the F.W.A. several times for funds to provide a recreation building for white soldiers, but no action had been taken.

The project for Negroes approved today calls for purchase and remodeling of a building on Sixth Street here, including equipment, for use as a recreation center. Approval was announced by Regional F.W.A. Director Lawrence A. Gillett at Chicago.

Talladega Citizens Unite In Asking For Negro USO Facility

Recreation Program For Negro Soldiers And Workers Sought

A project of major importance to Talladega went into its opening stages Monday morning when a group of citizens white and Negro, met at Talladega college, to ask for USO facilities for the city's Negro soldiers and defense workers.

The meeting was called through Dr W. H. Brothers, who pointed out that Negro troops are to be quartered at the Fourth Service Command Motor school and already have begun to arrive.

The need for a USO for Negroes long has been apparent Dr. Brothers said in his letter of invitation to the meeting.

The population of Talladega has increased vastly because of workers in war industries here, at Childersburg, Eastaboga and Dry Valley.

A sizeable percentage of that increase is composed of Negro citizens, although the approximate number remains to be established.

"There are no recreational facilities for the Negro war workers and troops," Dr. Brother's letter pointed out. "The churches and the college are doing what they can.

"But only a USO club for Negroes can adequately meet the need."

Mr. Zwingle of Atlanta, acting regional director for the USO, attended the session and made it plain that he intends to give every possible bit of co-operation.

A committee composed of Rev. Marshall Seifert, head of the USO obard of directoars; Mayor Walter Baker and Mrs Jane Haag, director of the USO here, was named to appoint another committee, composed of white and Negro citizens, which will make a careful study of the situation.

It was the sense of the meeting, expressed by Dr. Buell Gallager, Talladega college jresdient, that a building is needed.

In the meantime, however, a definite recommendation for a fund alotment sufficient for the employment of a USO worker who will map and direct a comprehensive program, will be sought.

WE NEED IT

The Daily Home was very much impressed Monday morning with the gathering which marked the formal inception of a movement designed to bringto this city a Negro USO club.

It may be that we shall for a time have to be contented with the allotment of funds which will provide a worker and a program, but Dr. Gallagher was correct when he said that we should not fix our sights too low and that we should turn every stone to make the building possible.

The meeting was important for something beyond the fact that itset in motion a program designed to meet a concrete need.

It was important because it gave representatives of both races an opportunity to work together for mutual good. It was helpful to those who attended Monday and it will continue to be helpful.

Every Talladegan owes it to himself and to his city to give the heartiest sort of backing to the movement.

Banneker, used by 500 servicemen every week, is supportd by the Community War Fund

NOV 5 - 1942

More than 500 colored servicemen coming into Washington every week receive guidance, counsel and healthful recreation at Banneker Service Club No. 2, 2500 Georgia Avenue Northwest—a Community War Fund member.

This service club is also a center of activities for hundreds of young women, newcomers to Washington, thus drawn into healthful recreation and supervised club activities.

On Friday and Saturday nights dances for servicemen and young women defense workers are held at Banneker. Every weekday night sees checker games, informal dancing and card games in progress.

Banneker, one of the finest servicemen's clubs in the United States, has facilities for weekend lodging for approximately 100 servicemen on leave. Rows of double-bunk beds in one huge dormitory provide clean up-to-date housing for men in the armed forces.

The Banneker Service Club was renovated and furnished at a cost of $25,000 provided from the Lanham Act, under the supervision of the Federal Works Agency. Its operation comes under the general supervision of Recreation Services. Inc., the operating agency for the War Hospitality Committee. Cooperating in the enterprise are the Welfare Recreational Association and the Recreation Department.

An example of the kind of assistance Banneker offers is the story of the soldier who ran out of funds on the fifth day of a 14-day furlough. The club provided his lodging, recreation and meals for the balance of his holiday, and made arrangements for his transportation back to camp. No AWOL for that soldier.

Colored citizens of the District are proud of this club. Their pride is reflected in their deepened interest in the Community War Fund, which supports this and similar centers for all servicemen. Colored teams in the Metropolitan unit this year expect to raise more than double any amount colored citizens have previously contributed to community welfare, according to Dr. Dorothy Boulding Ferebee, vice chairman of all the teams in this division.

NOV 5 - 1942

War Fund officials, discussing Banneker, declared that the value to the community of any enterprise which provides healthful supervised recreation on such a scale, should be self-evident.

A Fine Selection

The announcement that Ralph Metcalfe, Negro track star and a member of both the 1932 and 1936 American Olympic teams, will be in charge of the USO Center which will be established on West 15th Street for Negro soldiers is a very gratifying one to both these soldiers and the general public.

Metcalfe, a graduate of Marquette University and also the University of Southern California, has already proved his ability during a period of years as coach of Xavier University in New Orleans, and this ability should stand him in good stead in his new position here.

The need for a recreation center for the Negro soldiers stationed at Fort McClellan has long been recognized, and this need becomes extremely acute with additional colored troops being transferred to the Replacement Center at the Fort. The National USO Council is to be congratulated upon its choice of the track star director for the local center. We feel sure that his services will prove satisfactory to the soldiers themselves, the military authorities and the public in Anniston.

Negro Troop Lounge to Be Set Up Soon at Terminal Railway Station

A lounge for Negro soldiers will be installed at the Terminal station, it was announced yesterday by S. Bartow Strang, chairman of the interracial relations committee.

It will be similar to the U. S. O. lounge opened recently for white soldiers and it will be operated similarly. Plans for the lounge were completed yesterday at a meeting of the Travelers' Aid society. Mrs. Raleigh Crumbliss, in charge of the work of the lounge already in operation, said, "Everyone agrees that the colored soldier is doing his full share to defend our nation at this critical time, and we hope to show him when he has occasion to pass through Chattanooga that his services are appreciated."

Dr. J. B. Barber, colored, vice-chairman of the interracial relations group, is organizing a committee of representative Negroes representing the American Legion, and auxiliary, pastors' association and others which will act as a nucleus in the forming of plans for equipping and operating the lounge. While colored workers will be in charge of the facilities for colored soldiers, the Travelers' Aid is assisting. There will be a meeting of the colored groups with the interracial committee, the service hospitality committee and others Saturday for final discussion of plans.

It is the hope of the committee to have the lounge in operation within the next week or ten days.

In addition to Mrs. Crumbliss, Mr. Strang and Dr. Barber, who attended yesterday's meeting, were Mrs. Harry Simpson, treasurer, Travelers' Aid; Miss Johnny Flynn, executive secretary; Mrs. A. M. Pennybacker, assistant chairman for volunteer help, and Frank Welch, of the service hospitality committee.

U. S. OFFICIALS OKAY BUILDING OF 2 USO CLUBS

Cost of Both Structures Would Total $35,415, Yancey Reveals

Two new USO clubs may be constructed here soon, City Manager Malcolm Yancey revealed today.

Yancey said regional officials of te Federal Works agency of the defense public works division had recommended a new club and gymnasium here for white men, and a club for negro soldiers.

The total cost of the two projects will be $35,415. The city would have to provide only $3,000 while the federal government would provide the rest.

The recommendation carried the suggestion that the negro club cost not more than $10,415 with the applicant's funds of $3,000 to be applied on the project.

It was further recommended that an allotment of $25,000 be made for building of a service club for white soldiers to be under the direct control of the federal government in construction and that the city provide the site.

Regional officials wrote that the two new structures were considered justified because of the proximity of Dale Mabry field to the city, and placed it on the priority "A" list which means it will be given priority over any other construction here.

Yancey said for some time facilities here have not been sufficient for men stationed at Dale Mabry and city officials felt additional clubs were needed.

The original application was for two clubs at a cost of approximately $56,000.

Birmingham To Get USO Center

FEB 28 1942

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—(SNS)—Birmingham will get a USO center for visiting Negro soldiers to be located at 1718 Fourth Avenue in the building formerly occupied by the Harlem Shooting Gallery.

At a meeting this week citizens committee on Army Welfare, which has been active in the movement to obtain the center, completed plans for an early opening of the USO center with opening plans expected to be put into execution Monday.

The building must be decorated and furnished. The task of furnishing the center will engage the attention of the group as no money is in the operating budget for furnishing the center.

In setting up executive machinery for directing the center activities, the CCAW elected an executive committee drawn from the primary participating organizations in the USO and a wide range of representatives of major local organizations. Numbering nine, the USO executive committee is composed of the following persons: Rev. J. Clyde Perry, C. W. Askew, Miss Dura Rice, George Peterson, Mrs. A. H. Parker, Benjamin Craig, Louis E. Burnham, Leroy S. Gaillard, Mrs. Grace Brown Knox.

USO Facilities Here

WITH OUR $90,565 USO building nearing completion, it is interesting to note from figures released by the Jacksonville office of the federal works agency that Pensacola has fared better than most places in Florida in such facilities. Moreover, we have heard that it is likely we shall obtain a building for Negro troops, which is much needed here. Now many Negro soldiers are seen on the streets and they have no place for recreation.

The addition of the National Catholic Community service USO building is another facility of which we can boast and the work of the YWCA here has been outstanding in its variety and effectiveness.

Pensacola's building, with its permanent construction, tops the list of Florida allocations. Starke, at Camp Blanding, comes next with $80,525, and Jacksonville is third with $75,000, of which $30,000 was for whites and $45,000 for Negroes. In addition Jacksonville Beach has a facility costing $75,000 and Manhattan Beach, the Negro resort nearby, one for $7,500. While Jacksonville and Jacksonville Beach have received more than Pensacola in total, it must be remembered that they have to serve the Camp Blanding area with 50,000 or more troops and the Naval Air station at Jacksonville.

Valpariso's allotment was $46,000 and Panama City's $50,000, so West Florida has not fared badly in these clubs for service men.

If Pensacola gets the Negro facility as rumored, this city and section will be in good condition to care for its service personnel.

USO Will Provide For Negro Soldiers

Recreational facilities for colored soldiers soon to arrive at Fort McClellan were given consideration in the meeting of the USO Council held in the club operated by the Jewish Welfare Board last evening. At a previous meeting of representatives of several USO agencies, proposal had been made that in order to meet the immediate problem there be opened at once a center which would be financed and operated by several USO agencies in cooperation. This plan has been approved by regional representatives of the different agencies and steps will be taken to have some recreational facilities available for colored soldiers as they come into Anniston.

According to announcement made in the Council meeting it is expected that there will be almost 4,000 colored soldiers at Fort McClellan. Council members unanimously declared that the needs of this new group of soldiers must have the same attention which has been given the needs of other soldiers by volunteer and employed USO workers.

Negroes to Aid In USO Drive

Campaign Will Be Launched Today

The Negro USO division will launch its campaign along with other USO units today in an effort to obtain the quota of $16,000 for Pensacola and Escambia county.

The Negro division was organized at a meeting held in Attuck's court last Friday night, which was attended by Negro doctors, professors, ministers and others.

The meeting was addressed by Earl G. Hamel, general chairman of the campaign for Escambia county. Hamel urged the support of the Negro division, pointing out that although the USO unit for Negro service men had not yet been established, the present drive is being carried on for the benefit of all service men throughout the nation. He also praised the Negroes of Pensacola and Escambia county for their splendid co-operation in the war effort.

Talks were made by Dr. R. P. Preer, who was elected chairman and Dr. H. D. Goode, co-chairman, promising full co-operation on behalf of the Negro workers. Dr. C. E. Cobb spoke, expressing disappointment that the contemplated local USO for Negro service men has not yet been established, but added that he felt that local Negroes should not consider that in connection with the national drive, and should take the viewpoint that the USO functions for the greater good on an overall basis.

Following are the leaders for the Negro division as were appointed at Friday's meeting:

Dr. R. P. Preer, chairman; Dr. H. D. Goode, co-chairman; A. T. McCrory, secretary-treasurer.

CITY, MILITARY PUSH NEGRO USO PROJECT

Pressing Need For Recreation Center Is Stressed

W. S. Coleman, president of the City Commission, said Saturday that efforts were being made to promote speed in getting work started on the new colored recreation center to be operated by the United Service Organizations.

"We are hopeful of getting the building ready soon for there is a great need for it," Mr. Coleman said. "Our colored people are doing all they can to make the colored soldiers at Fort McClellan feel at home and the USO Club on Fifteenth Street is doing well under Ralph Metcalfe's direction. This club is not large enough to accommodate the men and programs that could be presented for them."

Brigadier General Wallace C. Philoon, commander of the Branch Immaterial Replacement Training Center, and Colonel John L. Jenkins, commander of Fort McClellan, are also doing what they can to promote early construction of the building. Mr Coleman said "authorities at Fort McClellan are cooperating in this matter 100 per cent."

BIRMINGHAM (AP) — Alabama war savings officials said they began wondering Saturday about the kind of prosperity up in Winston County when they received a leter from Guy Ray, Haleyville, county chairman, which read:

"The county farm agent has reported that every Negro farmer in the county has signed a pledge to spend $1,000 for war bonds in the coming year."

Ray's letter added, "This report is accurate and can be verified. The liberal and patriotic support of the Negro farmers in the county is highly appreciated by all the people."

The surprise was partially deflated, however, when readers noted a postscript which said, "There is only one Negro farmer in Winston County."

Condemnation Proceedings On Site Will Be Filed Soon

The site purchased recently by Anniston and donated to the federal government for a colored United Services Organization building will be condemned to provide an absolutely clear title to the property, W. S. Coleman, chairman of the City Commission, was advised today.

With this step taken on the part of the government, it was regarded as likely that the Federal Security Agency soon would let a contract for construction of the building.

Both city and Fort McClellan officials believe that a better USO Club building for colored soldiers is one of the greatest local needs at this time.

Fisk Singers Entertain Army Camps

The Fisk Jubilee Singers, who have just completed a month's tour of military camps throughout the South, have returned to Fisk University, followed by telegrams and letters of appreciation of their programs for the soldiers, and requests for return engagements.

The original Fisk Jubilee Singers did a splendid work years ago in building up the university's endowment, and the present group is doing a fine job in furnishing entertainment for the enlisted personnel of the armed forces, according to the letters and wires of commendation which have come to Mrs. James A. Myers, director of the group.

Among the numerous commendatory letters is one from Maj. Oscar L. Farris, Ft. Benning, Ga., formerly of Nashville, who wrote: "The Fisk Jubilee Singers' concert last night made me proud that I am from Nashville. It was an excellent concert, well staged, and the numbers were appreciated by all the boys. You are rendering a great service."

Another letter from E. L. Ralford, director Tuskegee USO, says: "On behalf of our USO Club please allow me to express to you and your fine singers our sincerest appreciation for the highly enjoyable concert at the Tuskegee Army Flying School. Your singers exhibited splendid training, good taste and excellent poise. By such rendition of spirituals, work songs and favorite selections, you have made a definite contribution to the improvement of morale at our camp."

NEGRO USO UNIT TO VISIT CAMPS

Comedy Quintet, Fisk Jubilee Four Plan Appearances

The K. P. Comedy Quartet, a unique group of Negro musicians who beat more rhythm and harmony out of a set of kitchen utensils than the average musician produces from standard instruments, will make a tour of Southern army camps under the auspices of USO-Camp Shows, together with the Fisk Jubilee Four, a vocal ensemble who will demonstrate the more traditonal aspects of Negro music.

Military posts included in the itinerary are:

Aug. 3—Camp Forrest, Tullahoma, Tenn.; Aug. 4, Ft. McClellan, Ala.; Aug. 5, Ft. McPherson, Atlanta; Aug. 6, 7 and 8, Ft. Benning, Ga.; Aug. 10, U. S. Naval School, Auburn, Ala.; Aug. 11, Tuskegee A. C. A. F., Alabama; Aug. 12, Napier Field, Dothan, Ala.; Aug. 15, Maxwell Field, Montgomery, Ala.; Aug. 14, Craig Field, Selma, Ala.; Aug. 15, Key Field, Meridian, Miss.; Aug. 17, 18 and 19, Camp Shelby, Miss.; Aug. 20, Jackson Air Base, Miss., and Aug. 21, Greenville Air Base, Miss.

The Fisk Jubilee Four are matched voices from Fisk College at Nashville, Tenn., highly trained in authentic renditions of spirituals and folk melodies, as well as currently popular vocal numbers. They will present Negro folk music of a rural nature representative of the countryside, while the boys of the K. P. Comedy Quintet who are particularly noted for their musical mastery of the washboard, the tin basin and the 10-gallon lard can, will stress the city's contribution to folk music.

Although the K. P. Quintet include guitars and a banjo-mandolin in their instrumentation, these fugitives from kitchen patrol are so adept at playing their unconventional music-makers that a representative of the Library of Congress in Washington attended a recent rehearsal for the USO-Camp Shows tour to record the group's unorthodox renditions for the library's permanent files of folk music.

The vocal and instrumental numbers in the program will illustrate the variety and originality of Negro songs and the wide range of musical expression from "Deep River" to the "St. Louis Blues."

Theodore Smith To Head Negro USO In City

Syracuse Graduate Ready To Proceed With Project Here

Theodore H. Smith, of New York City, arrived in Durham yesterday to assume his duties as head of Negro operations of the United Service Organization.

Smith comes here from Gettysburg, Pa., where he has recently been project superintendent of the CCC, under the National Park Service, there. He is a graduate of Syracuse University and was also hea dathletic coach at St. Paul's College, Lawrenceville, Va., for two years.

Although definite arrangements for the setting up of the Negro USO program in Durham are still lacking, Smith will immediately begin search for a place suitable for temporary quarters to house the program until the USO building is built here.

Plans now call for two USO buildings in the city. A $90,000 structure to house the white USO and a $60,000 building for the Negro unit. Officials are pushing plans to make these buildings a reality as soon as possible, but so far no information has been made available as to when work on the units will begin. Temporary headquarters for both units will be established somewhere in the city until these buildings are completed.

Glenn Thistlethwaite, former head football coach at Richmond University, has been named head of the white USO operations here and has been at work on the program for several weeks. He has set up a temporary office in the Washington Duke Hotel building. Both the white and Negro units for Durham will be Y. M. C. A. operations.

Smith has a wife and one daughter, but said yesterday that he will not bring his family here until he can become established and find suitable quarters.

Metcalfe Describes Services Designed For Negro Soldiers

USO is amply providing for the off duty needs of Negro service men, according to Ralph H. Metcalfe, one of the outstanding athletes of the past decade and now director of the USO club for Negroes at Anniston, Ala., and national consultant on Negro operations for the National Catholic Community Service, one of USO's six member agencies.

"The fact that USO had to expand its services to take care of a nation at war on a budget planned when we were still at peace has made its job extremely difficult," Metcalfe continued. "But the results of its current $32,000,000 war fund campaign will more than fill any gaps in the present program. The Negro service men I have talked to are agreed that USO's servicese are invaluable in cementing the morale of our fighting forces.

"Programs in the Negro clubs are specially designed to satisfy the Negro's individual racial traits, for instance his aptitude for music. At Columbus, Ga., Negro service men raised $2,000 among themselves to establish an art center in the USO club which now has a gallery presenting regular shows of paintings by Negro fighting men."

"Practically every one of the 68 USO operations set aside for service men of my race sponsors a drama group," Metcalfe said. "Many of them are ambitious and truly progressive in their experimental theatricals. Some are aided by Negro colleges in the camp area with the details of planning and training. Hampton Institute, for one, assists with the programming for the men stationed at Langley Field, Va."

Metcalfe took part in the Olympic Games on two occasions: the first in Los Angeles in 1932 when he tied for the world's record in the 100-yard dash.

As track coach at Xavier College for Negroes in New Orleans, a position which he took up after graduating from Marquette University in 1936, Metcalfe was responsible for training such athletes as Eddy Culp, national A. A. U. junior champion of the 1,500 meters; Gilden Farraw, the 220-yard low hurdler, and Lilburn Williams, the natoinal A. A. U. champion shot-putter. All three men are now in the armed services.

Metcalfe was born in Atlanta, Ga., on May 29, 1910. He began his athletic career in Chicago on the track team of the Phillips Junior High School. Besides his degree of bachelor of philosophy from Marquette where he also studied law for a year and a half, he took a master's degree in physical education at the University of Southern California in 1939. In 1937 he married Gertrude Pemberton in Dallas, Tex.

County Negroes Carry On Drive For USO Monies

Local Drive In National Campaign Moves Forward

Under the leadership of Charles Chestnut, and with James Hobdy as campaign chairman, the Alachua County drive for USO funds is now being carried on among the colored population of Gainesville and Alachua County, it was reported today by the Rev. Francis B. Wakefield, Jr., County USO Campaign Chairman.

With $45.00 already in hand, the leaders of the campaign are planning to hold a meeting of all canvassers at the colored community center, North Pleasant and Garden Streets, at 8 p. m., on Thursday, July 2.

The local drive is part of a nation-wide campaign for the sum of $32,000,000.00 which is needed by the United Service Organizations to maintain and operate the more than 600 service clubs for soldiers, sailors and marines in communities near Army and Navy training camps in the United States and at our offshore bases.

Carrying out the slogan "the USO will follow the men wherever they go," United Service Organizations is already ministering to the social, spiritual and recreational needs of American soldiers on foreign soil, and as the expeditionary forces expand, the USO's foreign activities will expand with them. Among the more than 30 service centers operated by the USO in Florida are two centers for negro troops, one in Jacksonville and one in Tampa.

"In view of the pressing need to maintain the morale of our soldiers and sailors during this time that they are sacrificing so much for us, I am sure that every loyal citizen of Alachua County, both white and colored, will be ready and willing to respond to this call for financial assistance," Wakefield stated. "Give all you can, and give it now to USO," he said.

Old Monroe School Serving As Negro Activities Center

The folks who operate the Negro service men's center at Monroe School, on Leigh Street, can determine without the aid of a calendar when the boys in khaki get their army pay. The week end after payday, the center does a booming business, too booming, in fact, for the available facilities.

The first week end this month, for example, the 150 cots weren't enough to meet half the demand. Five boys slept on mattresses on the floor, four others were provided blankets only, while 52 other of Uncle Sam's fighting men made themselves as comfortable as possible on the steps, floors, fire-escapes, tables and anywhere else they could find room.

At that, 100 men who sought overnight shelter were turned away.

Prospects for the future are brighter, however. The Federal Works Agency is providing $30,100 to make possible an addition to the school building, and when this is completed, there'll be lots more room for the soldiers.

For 35 cents, the Negro soldier gets a cot to sleep on, but everything else at the center is free. There are showers, a clubroom, games and even a free hot breakfast on Sunday morning. Church and other groups furnish the breakfast, which is cooked at other places and brought to the center.

After breakfast there's a religious program, usually with a speaker. A couple of weeks ago, following the morning talk, one of the boys asked for the opportunity to say something. He told the group that the spirit of friendliness he found at the center each week end gave him added determination to carry on the best of his ability during the rest of the week. Other boys echoed his sentiments, and Mrs. Brown said she felt that if the center never did anything else, it had been worth while for its effect on that one boy.

Old Monroe School isn't just the headquarters for Negro service men here. It's also the center of all Negro defense activities, with a regular program of classes in first aid, nutrition and other subjects of value in the war program. On Saturday nights there are dances for the soldiers, with girls provided by the Defense Service Unit under chaperones. These dances have been fairly well attended, but some of the boys are attracted instead to the noise and light of Second Street. The girls, incidentally, make twice-weekly trips to Camp Lee for dances with the Negro soldiers there.

Recently put up on the clubroom walls at the center were several murals by Philip A. Coxe, Richmond Negro artist. They are symbolic scenes of Negro life. One shows the famous scientist, George Washington Carver, at work in his Tuskegee laboratory, developing new products from peanuts and potatoes. Another is of Marian Anderson, the singer; another of Henry Tanner, the artist, and another of gaily dressed Bill (Bojangles) Robinson, the Richmond tap dancer who has become world famous. In the background of the Robinson picture is a street scene at Adams and Leigh here in Richmond, showing the traffic lights Bojangles donated to his home town for that intersection where Negro school children cross. The largest picture is of a group of Negro men, women and children standing as though singing their songs of appreciation for their country, represented by an American flag.

C. V. Kelly is chairman of the Negro division of the Defense Service Unit, with Mrs. M. V. Binga as vice-chairman and Mrs. Alice H. Harris as secretary. A corps of volunteers works with them.

Negro defense leaders point out that there's something symbolic in the fact that the service men's center is in old Monroe School. The building originally was constructed as an armory, then was used as a school, and finally has become a meeting place for service men and headquarters for defense work.

"It's still serving as a symbol of American democracy," commented one volunteer yesterday.

Frederick Douglass Junior High School Doing Good Job for Boys

JAN 3 - 1942

By WALT SMITH

(Star-News Staff Writer)

In 1923, under the administration of Mayor John F. Hylan, the Frederick Douglass Junior High School was erected for the boys of Harlem.

Named for Frederick Douglass, the great nineteenth century leader and statesman, the school has adopted itself to every modern and progressive method to insure for each pupil every educational opportunity that a junior high school can afford, to build worthy citizens, provide economic opportunities and inculcate high moral ideals.

Completely equipped with modern classrooms, up to date shops, two libraries, a well appointed auditorium, a business practice office and a science laboratory as a result of the annex added two years ago, the school is prepared to render still better service to its pupils.

With a student body of nearly two thousand (2,000) and a faculty of some seventy (70) odd teachers, the school has become an important factor in the life of the community. Many of the civic classes have taken an interest in the social and civic problems of Harlem. Pupils collected pennies to send telegrams to high government officials in Washington urging passage of such important legislation as the Anti-lynching Bill. Others rang doorbells in the apartment houses of their locality to urge prospective voters to register when various elections are held.

Works for Good Health

To maintain and develop good health, one thousand boys are fed daily in the school lunch room. Clothing is distributed to needy pupils and the teachers themselves have created an eyeglass fund to aid students in purchasing proper spectacles.

School exhibits, displaying the industrial and academic work of the school are an annual feature. High school officials of the city have given unstinted praise to the school after inspecting the display and watching the pupils work.

The boys glee club is another important feature of the school's activities. Their musical program at the last commencement has been repeated at the local Y. M. C. A. and a neighboring school, P. S. 194, Man. During Open School Week last month, over 500 parents of the community and friends throughout the city witnessed the operetta, written by one of the teachers and presented by the pupils of the school.

The Science department has been the recipient of several prizes in the city-wide science exhibits hall at the Museum of Natural History. Puppetry occupies the attention of many of the industrial classes and several instructive and entertaining shows have been staged by them.

JAN 3 - 1942

Art Department Active

In the Art department, the pupils have given a splendid account of themselves. Painting, sculpture, soap carving, sign painting and water coloring are taught by competent instructors.

Dramatics occupy another important place in the school program. Plays are staged weekly during assembly programs. Lessons on tolerance, democracy and patriotism are stressed in order to inculcate high ideals in the minds of the students.

Douglass students excel in athletics. They have produced many city-wide championship teams in basketball, track and baseball. Many of the Douglass athletes have gone into high school and college and have brought glory to their respective teams. An effective health program is included in the physical activities. Health counsellors and a trained nurse are in constant attendance.

Guidance is provided for each boy in the school. Parents and students are interviewed with a view towards proper adjustment for the best interest of each boy.

Facilities to Help All

For boys who are overaged, retarded and non - academically minded, an excellent adjustment program is provided. A curriculum suited to the needs of each boy is given to him in order that he may secure the maximum benefit of his scholastic career.

Douglass is vitally interested in the program of delinquency. A special teacher gives a full timed program to this vexatious situation.

JAN 3 - 1942

Under the quiet, self-effacing but dynamic leadership of the principal, Dr. Abraham Ehrenfeld, the school has integrated itself into the life of the community. Many of the faculty members are actively associated with many agencies promoting the welfare of the citizens of the community. They serve with the Y. M. C. A., the Y. W. C. A., the N. A. A. C. P., the Boy Scouts, the Children's Aid Society, the Urban League, the Big Brother Movement and many other social and civic groups. Faculty members and supervisors take a personal interest in the welfare of the pupils. Individual instruction, counseling and programing are given to all pupils freely and willingly.

The school aims to build character and promote worthy citizenship. Home room periods and club activities serve to realize these objectives. The General Organization of the school offers an opportunity for self-government and provides for democratic expression of student life.

Negroes Will Be Given Training In Newbridge Center

Following a conference of National Youth administration officials from Raleigh and the sixth area last night, Leo Manley, area director, said training of Asheville negro youth will be emphasized more than in the past at the resident center at Newbridge.

Plans call for separate classes for negro youth at the center. The negro boys will not live at the center, as do the 204 white youths in training there, but will reside at their homes. Approximately 35 are now doing landscape work. The Raleigh group visited the center last night and left today for Raleigh.

Attending the conference were Miss Mary Winn Abernethy, state personnel officer; George Suggs, state director of youth personnel; J. P. Bond, state representative in NYA negro affairs; Cletus Burchett, negro representative in the Asheville area; Miss Francis Sisk, area youth personnel officer, and Mr. Manley.

Negro Defense Classes

A NEGRO reader of THE TIMES-DISPATCH writes to ask us what is to be done about "defense classes for Negroes in welding and sheet metal work." The division of trade and industrial education of the State Department of Education has just received an authorization to sponsor classes in these important fields of defense work, and they will be started at the Maggie Walker High School as soon as arrangements can be completed. General opportunity for Negroes to secure technical training in Richmond is, however, decidedly limited.

Defense classes in ship carpentry and masonry were begun some time ago at the same high school, but there was such a slight degree of interest manifested in the masonry class that it was discontinued. The classes in welding and sheet metal work will offer Negroes of all ages an opportunity to secure training that may greatly increase their earning power and give them the chance to do work vitally important to defense. But these classes, and others like them, will not be a success unless Negro leaders and educators make every effort to create interest in them and to secure for them the best type of students available.

The Negro applicant for vocational training who has written us, complains of the meagre facilities for this type of education in the Richmond public school system. This is admittedly true, although courses in masonry, woodworking, cooking and beauty culture are available to students at the Maggie Walker High School. At Armstrong High School there is a course in automobile mechanics. Shop facilities at the Maggie Walker School would have been considerably more extensive if Negro citizens had not wanted space for an auditorium in the school, and a gymnasium and athletic field. The desire for these extracurricular facilities was quite understandable, but a choice was made which greatly curtailed vocational training opportunities for Negro students.

There could hardly be a more timely raising of the question of increasing facilities for Negro trade and industrial education in Richmond. A survey of the public school system of Richmond is about to be made, at which the whole problem can be considered from the long-range standpoint. The immediate prospect offers not only substantial government aid for the training of Negroes in defense classes, but government support for Negroes in their effort to secure employment in defense work.

Negro Troops At Fort Sill Top Whites In Bonds

Race Units 8 Per Cent Higher Than the Average

FORT SILL, Okla. — (ANP) — War band purchases by soldiers in the field artillery replacement training center of Fort Sill during July found 64 per cent of the men buying bonds regularly, but the record of Negro troops here is 72 per cent, 8 per cent higher than the average of the entire center.

H. C. Jones, state administrator of war bonds for Oklahoma, visited here this week and congratulated Brig. Gen. Waldo C. Potter, commandant of the replacement center, on the fine showing made in war bonds' sales here. It was noted and commented upon favorably that Negro soldiers are buying heavily of war bonds and the 31st battalion, of all colored troops, is among the leaders in the averages of men buying bonds monthly through the army's convenient pay reservation plan.

Leading Negro units in bond buying for July was Battery D of the 31st battalion with an 88.04 per cent record of purchases. While not the highest average of men buying from their pay in the replacement center, the record of D-31 placed it up among the leaders for outstanding war bond subscription both in percentages and total cash purchases.

Colored soldiers in the center have made an excellent showing so far, with none of the four Negro battalions here being signed by less than 56.02 per cent of the soldiers for monthly pay deductions to buy bonds.

Servant's Dog Brings $40,000 At Bond Party

AUG 18 1942

Courier-Journal

Louisville, Ky

French Lick, Ind. Aug. 17 (AP)—Thomas Christopher, who has spent thirty years in the service of the Thomas Taggart family at French Lick, put his treasured cocker spaniel, "Prince of French Lick," up for auction at the "million dollar" war bond party held here over the week-end and saw it bring $40,000.

The bidding started at $5,000 and soared to the $40,000 offer made by Harry P. Fletcher, Fort Wayne.

Tears coursed down Christopher's cheeks as the dog was sold, but he explained: "I'm just crying because I'm so happy."

He turned down an offer by Fletcher to return the dog.

Christopher treasured a tribute given him by Lou Costello, the motion-picture comedian who conducted the auction.

Willard W. Allen Named Associate War Bond Aide

SEP 19 1942

BALTIMORE, Md.—The recent appointment of Willard W. Allen, one of the most widely known business and fraternal executives in the country, as associate state administrator for the State of Maryland by the organizations division of the U. S. Treasury War Bond and Stamp drive, brings to mind Mr. Allen's many other interests of a civic nature.

Mr. Allen, who is grand master of Most Worshipful United Grand Lodge A. F. and A. M. of Maryland, will be an assistant to Walter N. Ruth, Maryland state administrator.

The new appointee, who will receive only one-dollar a year as compensation, has also been prominently mentioned for appointment to the position of assistant to the State Commissioner of Maryland. OTHER ASSOCIATE STATE ADMINISTRTORS

In his new position Mr. Allen joins such nationally known figures as: Dr. Frederick D. Patterson, president of Tuskegee Institute, who was the first colored American to be appointed an associate administrator; W. W. Blackburg, who was certified by Mississippi State Administrator Eugene Ely; Dr. J. R. E. Lee, president of Florida A. and M. College, for the State of Florida; Dr. Channing H. Tobias, secretary of colored work, National YMCA, appointed by State Administrator Melvin Ford for the State of New York, and Dr. W. J. Hale, president of Tennessee State A. and I. College, for the State of Tennessee.

Other states are also being contacted for the inclusion of race administrators in an associate capacity. These include: North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas and Oklahoma.

In addition to being grand master of the Masonic Grand Lodge of Maryland (Prince Hall Affiliate), a position which he has held continuously since 1922, Mr. Allen also serves as most puissant grand commander of the United Supreme Council of Scottish Rite Masonry, Southern Jurisdiction.

ABLE BUSINESS EXECUTIVE

As a business executive Mr. Allen is president of the Southern Life Insurance Company; regional vice president and member of the executive committee of the National Negro Business League, a member of the executive committee of the Maryland Association for the Promotion of Business, and is actively engaged in the real estate and insurance brokerage business.

Appointed by the governor of Maryland to the board of trustees of Morgan State College, Mr. Allen is one of the most actively interested members of that body. He is also a member of the advisory council of the Colored Vocational School, and a former member of the Cheltenham board of managers.

Both Allen University and Wilberforce University have conferred upon him the honorary degree of doctor of laws.

AUG 3 1 1942

With the Improved Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks purchasing $200,000 worth of war bonds at its forty-third annual convention in Philadelphia last week, Negro fraternal groups continued their drive to assist the war effort through the purchase of bonds and stamps.

The Elks staged a daily bond rally during the course of the convention after William Pickens, Chief, Negro Organizations Divisions, War Saving Staff, Treasury Department, discussed the war savings program. Aided by Mrs. Nell Hunter of his staff, Mr. Pickens also assisted in a program of selling war stamps corsages to delegates at the convention.

Pledges and checks from individuals and organizations included a purchase of $42,000 worth of bonds by Major R. R. Wright.

The Elks contributions followed similar actions by other Negro fraternal groups. Included in this list is the purchase of more than $212,000 worth of bonds by the Supreme and local camps of the American Woodmen.

AUG 3 1 1942

Negro Masons have been very active in the purchase of bonds and stamps also. Following an address by Jesse O. Thomas at the 95th annual memorial services of the Masonic Grand Lodge of Maryland, the delegates voted to purchase $1,000 worth of bonds.

Negro Trade Group Opens Bond Drive

SEP 1 3 1942

SEP 1 3 1942

The Negro Chamber of Commerce, 133 East 47th street, is planning a drive to increase war bond purchases among the business groups of its community to $1,000,000 monthly. Purchases by members of these groups is estimated to be half that figure.

S. B. Fuller.

The chamber of commerce drive is designed to supplement war bond and stamp campaigns already functioning in the colored community. So far there has been no appeal directly to the business men and business groups.

Plan Bond Rallies.

The chamber of commerce plans a four point program to promote bond sales: to increase the number of merchants and shopkeepers who urge their customers to take change in defense stamps; to hold a series of war bond rallies, the first of which will be held at Du Sable High school in October; to extend the 10 per cent pay roll savings plan; and to provide speakers to press the sale of war bonds and stamps.

S. B. Fuller, chamber of commerce president, pointed out that the treasury department 10 per cent pay roll savings plan has principally been concerned with businesses which have large numbers of employés. The chamber of commerce plans to contact the small businesses and plants in its community in regard to this method of sale of war bonds and stamps. There are approximately 6,000 small businesses in the area, he reported. The organization also plans to work thru church groups. They will contact ministers and lay leaders and will provide speakers where asked for meetings.

Members of Committee.

Roosevelt Phillips heads the committee which is making plans for the drive. Members of this committee are: Marjorie Stewart Joyner, cochairman; Mr. Fuller, J. J. Robinson, Callie Broxton, Bishop W. Smith, S. L. Moore, O. C. Buckner, Henry C. Taylor, Katherine King, William L. Little, Walter Abernathy, C. G. Price and L. M. Quinn.

Fuller, who is general director of the drive as president of the body, is also a member of the advisory committee to the treasury department bond sales department. He is 37 years old and recently received the Robert S. Abbott Memorial award, given by the Chicago Defender, for outstanding achievement in business. Fuller, who operates a food and cosmetics manufacturing plant, was penniless when he came to Chicago in 1928 from Memphis, Tenn.

Escorted by auxiliary police and high school cadets, the parade, with four bands, included units of the American Legion, the Masons, Odd Fellows, Catholic Knights of St. John, the Order of Moses, Galilean Fishermen, cafeteria and civic groups and civilian businessmen.

Floats, patriotic slogans and martial music were cheered by spectators along the route until a downpour of rain caused a partial disbanding at Sixth and N Streets Northwest.

Lieut. Bartholomeo A. Passanante of the Third Pursuit Squadron, who lost his right leg in a bomb raid of Luzon 120 miles north of Manila 10 hours after the attack on Pearl Harbor, was a guest of honor. He is now a member of the Pennsylvania war savings staff.

Report Is Made On Negro Work Done In County

C. J. Ford, Negro County Agent, Tells of Plans For Bond Drive

Thirty neighborhood leaders met at the rural center in Roxboro, Saturday, September 12, to plan a $5000 war bond sale among negroes in the county, states negro county agent C. J. Ford.

Neighborhood meetings were planned as follows: County Home on October 15, Concord and Hyco Zion on October 16, Lee Jeffers on October 17, Hester's Store community on October 19, Union Grove and Pine Hill on October 20, Drumright town and Woodsdale on October 21, at Cedar Grove No. 1 and II on October 22, at Harris Hill on October 23, at Shady Hill on October 24 and at Bethel Hill community on October 26.

At these meetings farmers will be urged to bring their money with which to purchase war bonds that were pledged in the early part of the summer. G. C. Hunter, banker and chairman of the bond drive in the county has agreed to furnish someone at each of these meetings to make out these bonds and deliver them to the farmers. This particular method was agreed upon because of the shortage of tires and gas among the farmers.

Two tobacco grading demonstrations were conducted by W. L. Bradsher of the Agricultural Marketing Division, for negro farmers this week as follows: Woodsdale, Tuesday at 10:00 A. M., and county home community at 2:00 P. M. the same day. Mr. Bradsher pointed out that the most important factor in tobacco grading this year is to keep the colors uniform. It was emphasized that each pile of tobacco is bought for a particular purpose. Some of the farmers who had begun to grade tobacco stated that they were going back and regrade that that had not been tied. They appreciated the demonstration being held at the beginning of the grading season. Fifty farmers attended these two demonstrations.

Heavy and frequent rains are doing a deal of damage to the hay crop on farms where haresting was attempted during the past two weeks. Very little hay has escaped the rain in one stage or another, some being damaged severely and some not so much.

Elks Setting Pace By Making Purchase Of $200,000 Worth

AUG 31 1942

With the Improved Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks purchasing $200,000 worth of war bonds at its forty-third annual convention in Philadelphia last week, Negro fraternal groups continued their drive to assist the war effort through the purchase of bonds and stamps.

The Elks staged a daily bond rally during the course of the convention after William Pickens, Chief, Negro Organizations Divisions, War Saving Staff, Treasury Department, discussed the war savings program. Aided by Mrs. Nell Hunter of his staff, Mr. Pickens also assisted in a program of selling war stamps corsages to delegates at the convention.

Pledges and checks from individuals and organizations included a purchase of $42,000 worth of bonds by Major R. R. Wright.

The Elks contributions followed similar actions by other Negro fraternal groups. Included in this list is the purchase of more than $212,000 worth of bonds by the Supreme and local camps of the American Woodmen.

AUG 31 1942

Negro Masons have been very active in the purchase of bonds and stamps also. Following an address by Jesse O. Thomas at the 95th annual memorial services of the Masonic Grand Lodge of Maryland, the delegates voted to purchase $1,000 worth of bonds.

Other Masonic purchases include $25,000 by the Most Worshipful Grand Lodge, A. F. and A. M. of Alabama; $30,000 from the Endowment Department of the Masons at Birmingham; $15,000 from the Eureka Grand Lodge at Natchitoches, La; in addition to a previous $20,000 purchase for the lodge by J. G. Lewis, Jr.; $10,000 by the M. W. Stringer Grand Lodge of Mississippi Masons, and $15,000 by the Knights of Peter Claver and ladies auxiliary.

Negro Greek Letter fraternities and sororities continued the purchase of bonds also. Two local chapters of Delta Sigma Theta sorority purchased $3,500 worth of stamps each in addition to a $5,000 bond purchased by the sorority; the Kappa Alpha Psi purchased $3,000 worth, and a similar sum was expended by Omega Psi Phi for bonds. The Chicago Chapter of Sigma Gamma Rho recently purchased $350 worth of bonds.

Negro Trade Group Opens Bond Drive

SEP 13 1942

The chamber of commerce drive is designed to supplement war bond and stamp campaigns already functioning in the colored community. So far there has been no appeal directly to the business men and business groups.

Plan Bond Rallies.

The chamber of commerce plans a four point program to promote bond sales: to increase the number of merchants and shopkeepers who urge their customers to take change in defense stamps; to hold a series of war bond rallies, the first of which will be held at Du Sable High school in October; to extend the 10 per cent pay roll savings plan; and to provide speakers to press the sale of war bonds and stamps.

S. B. Fuller, chamber of commerce president, pointed out that the treasury department 10 per cent pay roll savings plan has principally been concerned with businesses which have large numbers of employés. The chamber of commerce plans to contact the small businesses and plants in its community in regard to this method of sale of war bonds and stamps. There are approximately 6,000 small businesses in the area, he reported. The organization also plans to work thru church groups. They will contact ministers and lay leaders and will provide speakers where asked for meetings.

Members of Committee.

Roosevelt Phillips heads the committee which is making plans for the drive. Members of this committee are: Marjorie Stewart Joyner, co-chairman; Mr. Fuller, J. J. Robinson, Callie Broxton, Bishop W. Smith, S. L. Moore, O. C. Buckner, Henry C. Taylor, Katherine King, William L. Little, Walter Abernathy, C. G. Price and L. M. Quinn.

Fuller, who is general director of the drive as president of the body, is also a member of the advisory committee to the treasury department bond sales department. He is 37 years old and recently received the Robert S. Abbott Memorial award, given by the Chicago Defender, for outstanding achievement in business. Fuller, who operates a food and cosmetics manufacturing plant, was penniless when he came to Chicago in 1928 from Memphis, Tenn.

Negroes Exceed War Bond Quota

Sum Of $2,025 Raised At Supper Held Here Friday Night

War bond sales amounting to $2,025 were recorded by Tuscaloosa negroes at a bond supper held Friday night at the Industrial High School, it was announced from the office of the War Savings Committee. This more than doubled the quota of $1,000.

Prof. Charles Orr, executive chairman for the Negro Division of the County War Savings Committee, reported that 19 negro employes of the city of Tuscaloosa agreed to take out bonds of $18.75 denomination in order to enable the drive to reach its goal. The Oak City Lodge of Elks No. 816 purchased a $100 bond and the Brothers and Sisters of the Charity Lodge No. 5 purchased a $200 bond, it was said.

Chairman Orr presided at the bond supper. Dr. A. B. McKenzie, chairman of the speakers' bureau, was the main speaker. Two brief addresses were made by Willie S. Layton of Northport, who is the mother of three sons now serving in the army, and Joseph O'Rouke, apprentice seaman, who is home on leave.

H. L. Conley of the Atlanta Life Insurance Company, spoke briefly, praising the work being done by the negro committee of Tuscaloosa. The bond supper table was arranged in the shape of a large V with approximately 52 bond buyers present. One man was present who reported he could not buy a bond but purchased $3 worth of stamps.

Prf. Orr expressed appreciation to all who helped in any way to make the bond supper a success.

NEGRO VICTORY DINNER

The Eagle is carrying today a brief report of the Victory Dinner given by the colored people of this community for the purpose of stimulating the sale of War Savings Stamps and Bonds among the Negroes in Walker County.

The committee, which had charge of the Victory Dinner (composed of Layton Davis, D. C. Reed and W. D. Kirk) is rendering good service in promoting the sale of War Stamps and Bonds among Negroes who are not employed by large industrial establishments, where employees purchase Stamps and Bonds through the "payroll plan". The committee is giving attention to the sale of Stamps and Bonds among "cooks, bell-hops" and others who are not buying Stamps and Bonds through the "payroll plan" of the larger industries.

The Negro cook or "shine boy" who buys 50c worth of War Stamps is just as patriotic as the well paid Negro industrial worker who buys $5.00 worth a week. "Every little bit helps," is an old saying.

Walker County has purchased almost a million dollars worth of Bonds, and, no doubt, Chairman Clarence Gardner and his co-workers who have accomplished so much in promoting the sale of Bonds in the county will welcome the assistance of the Negro committee, which will contact many people who have not been contacted to date.

SOLDIER INVESTS $37.50 OF HIS $40 PAY IN WAR BONDS

FORT DIX, N. J. (AP).—One patriotic private is dishing out $37.50 of his $40 monthly pay check to buy war bonds under the army's pay reservation plan.

Lieut. James G. Dill, post war bonds and stamps officer, said Harold Etchison, 21 year old Negro soldier, signed up for the monthly allotment against his commander's advice that it would leave him with only about 60 cents a week spending money.

"It looks to me like the more we pitch in the quicker we'll win," Dill quoted Etchison as saying. "They need the money pretty bad, too."

ONE CLUBHOUSE FOR WHITE ARMY OFFICERS; ANOTHER FOR COLORED

Jim Crow, in the form of officially sanctioned segregation, much as we deplore it, has flown across the desert and settled at Fort Huachuca in Arizona. The memorandum, re-printed herewith and issued under the authority of the commanding officer of the fort, exposes the presence of segregation at Huachuca. It is not known if the commanding officer consulted the white officers to learn if they wished to have a separate clubhouse. It is not known if he consulted the colored officers to learn their wishes. He may have acted upon the basis of a recent War Department directive in which separation of barracks and messes for white and colored officers was indirectly suggested.

The greater our love of country, the greater our zeal for winning this war, the more this calculated, officially-sanctioned segregated set-up insults and hurts us. This segregation is going to be a serious detriment to the morale of colored citizens throughout the nation. It is going to depress the spirits of those colored soldiers who will have to fight behind these colored officers who, indirectly, are told they are not good enough to associate in a clubhouse with their white fellow officers.

We believe that segregation, based on race, should be abolished at Fort Huachuca. In the name of the patriotism which we cherish, we appeal to the commanding officers at Huachuca to rescind the order establishing segregation. Can he deny that such segregation is against the ideals of American democracy and the cause for which we fight?

Kill Jim Crow To Aid War, McNutt Tells Negro Rally

By Louise Mitchell

Declaring that Jim Crow failure to give Negroes jobs in war industries is menacing vital production, Pal V. McNutt, chairman of the War Manpower Commission, warned yesterday that "Amecira cannot stand that kind of nonsense."

McNutt spoke at the packed Gold Gate rally, 142 St. and Lenox Ave., where the two-day conference of the Negro Labor Victory committee climaxed its sessions. McNutt's address was broadcast over auto radios and nearby store radios.

Representative Vito Marcantonio hailed the rally as a "demonstration of the peoples' will to open up a second front."

He announced that he was preparing a "Harlem" rider to the appropriations bill which would specify that the government would pay out no money to any employer or factory that did not abide by the President's fair employment practices.

Mrs. Miller, mother of Dorrie Miller, said, "Some people say we have nothing to fight for. But we all know we have something to fight for—that is freedom."

McNutt charged that "we are not using enough Negroes" in industry and that some employers "are protecting their prejudices at the cost of production for victory."

"We are not using Negroes enough," McNutt said, "there are still too many employers who stipulate that certain jobs are barred to Negroes. There ar still too many who assign them to work below their best skill."

McNutt noted that the Roosevelt Government is pressing the fight to break down the destructive Jim-crow barriers in war industry:

"And do not underestimate our progress. We ARE using Negro workers in American industry.

"Negroes are being used today in all branches of the war industry. Government has taken the lead. In U. S. Navy Yards, in arsenals, in army cantonments and at naval bases, thousands of skilled and semi-skilled Negroes are at work.

PAUL V. McNUTT

"Government has also helped private industry to extend Negro employment—through the work of the Labor Division, War Manpower Commission, and the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice.

"Thousands of Negroes have been hired in recent months in the aircraft industry.

"Tens of thousands are speeding ship construction on both Coasts.

McNutt refuted all the alibis of the Negro-haters who refuse to use Negro labor for war production. He pointed out that Negro workers performed the most skilled labor at the biggest machine and shipbuilding yards. He pointed out hat less than two dozen of more than 200 trade unions discriminate against Negro members. He showed that Negro and white workers work in the greatest harmony at such big plants as Ford's, Kelsey Hayes, Bethlehem, Lockheed-Vega, and many others.

"Such employers are protecting their prejudices at the cost of production for victory. America cannot stand that kind of nonsense. America can afford only maximum production from every worker in every plant everywhere in the nation."

McNutt said America lacks trained workers because "America permitted itself the luxury of discrimination 10 and 20 and 30 years ago."

"From the reservoir of five million Negro workers men will be found for the production lines at home," McNutt said, "and for the battle lines upon the seven seas.

JUN 29 1942

"It is fundamental that the life of no American soldier, of any race, creed or color, anywhere in the world, shall be put in jeopardy because of the prejudice of any employer, any worker, or any employer's or worker's organization anywhere in America."

MURRAY GREETS PARLEY

The two-day conference, which was officially greeted by the White House through Roosevelt's secretary, Stephen Early, was greeted by Philip Murray who said that the CIO fights for equal treatment for all workers, Negro and white, in industry and the armed forces.

Introducing McNutt, Rev. Clayton Powell said "We are fighting for world democracy, for Negro, for white man, yellow and brown. There is a new Negro on the march." Flowers were presented to the mother of Doris Miller. Greetings were received from Mrs. Mary Mcleod Bethune, and from Eddie Tolan who addressed the meeting in the name of the Detroit Youth Council.

M'NUTT ASSAILS BAN ON NEGROES IN WAR PLANTS

New York, June 28 (AP).—Paul V. McNutt, federal security administrator, declared tonight that the nation could not stand for the kind of "nonsense" under which some employers bar certain jobs to Negroes.

JUN 29 1942

"Such employers are protecting their prejudices at the cost of production for victory," he said in an address to the Negro labor victory committee and the National Conference of Negro Youths.

FORT McCLELLAN, Ala.—Soldiers of the Headquarters Company of the 92nd Infantry stationed here who called a special meeting last Wednesday and appointed representatives to ask the commandant's aid in working out plans to alleviate certain conditions which the men believed were detrimental to their welfare, were informed that as soldiers they had no rights and were entitled to nothing other than giving their lives to the service of their country.

SEP 26 1942

Captain McCaffrey, Headquarters Commandant, was asked to be present at evening mess at which time various soldiers outlined to him their grievances. They asked for Negro personnel in the post theatre and Negro personnel in the post exchanges (preferably girls as at Fort Huachuca). Several of the men told of injustices the soldiers had undergone at the hands of civilians in the station postoffice, as well as in the nearby town of Anniston.

SEP 26 1942

Captain McCaffrey explained that although they had no rights (in accordance with army regulations on taking the oath of service), he would take the grievance up with higher authorities. The commandant stated that the conditions in regard to the treatment of Negroes in the South have been going on for over 300 years, and there was nothing he could do to change them.

N. Y. Cracks Down On War-Job Bias

SEP 17 1942

The State War Council's Committee on Discrimination in Employment is prepared to use its new powers against employers practicing discrimination in war-industry jobs.

"For more than a year the committee has been waging a campaign against bigoted hiring practices," Frieda Miller, State Industrial Commissioner and committee chairman, said today:

"If appeal and persuasion fail to convince holders of war contracts that they should hire an applicant on his merits, regardless of his race, color, creed or national origin, such employers will be served with a formal order. If they fail to comply with the order, they will be prosecuted."

The formal order by the State Dept. of labor can require an employer to do any or all of the following:

SEP 17 1942

¶ Stop any discrimination immediately.
¶ Correct discriminatory refusals to hire.

War and U. S. Minorities

WHEN the first World War ended, the effort to make the world safe for democracy had engendered a poisonous interracial atmosphere throughout the nation. Vast numbers of Negroes from the South had migrated to the North to secure employment in the expanding industries. As was the case during our preparation for the present war, there had been many strikes as labor battled to get itself into a better-paying position for the long pull of wartime. Self-preservation is the first law of nations also, and no nation can conduct a war abroad and suffer industrial battles on the home front. Many of the Negroes who went North were used as strikebreakers, and after the war, all this was remembered. There were riots and murders in the North, and lynchings and floggings in the South.

In the current crisis, the President has taken time by the forelock. He has appointed his own committee to protect the interests of minorities in the national emergency, and he has buttressed the position of his committee by an executive order declaring that no industry engaged in production of goods for defense under Government contract, shall discriminate against qualified applicants for employment on account of their race or religion. The President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice is headed by MARK ETHRIDGE, whose work for better race relations constitutes one of the most important contributions he has made to the advancement of the South. The executive secretary of the committee is former GOVERNOR LAWRENCE W. CRAMER of the Virgin Islands. Both MR. ETHRIDGE and GOVERNOR CRAMER are exceptionally well qualified for the difficult task the committee is undertaking. Under their leadership, an able committee can go far toward establishing basic principles of democracy in our national employment situation, and toward forestalling a ghastly challenge to the principles for which we have fought, after we have done the fighting.

While we are fighting this war, directly under the President of the United States, and backed by the authority of his office, a strong national committee, which includes representatives of both the C. I. O. and the American Federation of Labor, will be working toward the solution of a paradox that has continuously mocked our democracy—the closing of the door of opportunity to racial minorities.

RUMOR SAYS CHAIRMAN TO RESIGN POST

JAN 24 1942

Pressure Of Business Is Cited As Reason For Giving Up Job

Reports were circulated here Monday as the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice met to hold a hearing on job discrimination in this area, that chairman Mark F. Ethridge was resigning his post.

Ethridge, who is publisher of the Louisville Courier-Journal, is said to have found that the arduous duties of the post required too much of his time and that his private business would not permit him to continue.

JAN 24 1942

Rumors are that the chairmanship will be offered to Dr. Malcom C. MacLean, president of the Hampton institute. It is not known whether he will accept but it is felt that the Hampton prexy would make an excellent executive.

For a time it was feared that executive secretary Lawrence Cramer was resigning also. Cramer had been offered a post teaching at Harvard. He has decided to remain with the committee.

Other predictions have been made freely here this week regarding governmental posts which vitally affect Negroes.

It is said that with the de-emphasizing of the OPM which took place when Donald Nelson of Chicago was elevated to chief of new War Production board, Sidney Hillman's post no longer becomes important. Hillman is expected to be made the secretary of labor.

It is probable according to this prediction, that Robert Weaver and his entire staff will have to be absorbed by the FEPC. In the absence of any definite action, no description of the necessary shifts was available, but it was said the Dr. Will W. Alexander, former head of Farm Security administration, but now also a race relations adviser under Hillman, would be sheltered in FEPC also. JAN 24 1942

The present secretary of labor, Mme. Perkins, will, it is said, move over to another cabinet post, that of secretary of social security while Paul McNutt will take over the portfolio of secretary of war.

The flourishing rumors did not dispose of Secretary of War Stimson but the cooperative spirit of the civilian side of the present war department setup will keep eyes glued upon any proposed change.

BETHLEHEM STEEL PLANT AT KEY HIGHWAY IS LILY WHITE

AN EDITORIAL

FEB 21 1942

A representative of the War Production Board, formerly the Office of Production Management, went to the Key Highway shipbuilding plant of the Bethlehem Steel Company last week to get information about the plant's policy affecting colored applicants for work.

FEB 21 1942

He got a full dose of the type of discrimination some of our defense firms are practicing in clear violation of the President's executive order outlawing discrimination on account of race, color or national origin.

At the outside gate he was met by a guard who, before he could speak, said, "We don't hire colored." At the next gate, the attendant shooed him away with the warning, "We don't hire colored."

Finally, he got inside and approached another official who bluntly exclaimed, "We don't hire colored." When WPB's representative produced his government credentials, the Bethlehem Steel official added, "Well, I mean we don't hire colored skilled men."

FEB 21 1942

If Uncle Sam really wants to crack down on discriminatory defense plants, let him send out more colored investigators. They do not need to say a word. The company employees who are charged with handling applicants will give them all the information about discrimination they want.

[DIV]IDE AND CONQUER'

Northern agitators - and a few former southerners like Miss Pearl Buck of Virginia - are trying to stir up a lot of stink about what they term "the injustices the Negro soldiers are being subjected to in the Army camps."

In a recently published pamphlet Miss Buck says that the Negro learned a lot from World War I and that he has "come a long way since then." She says the Negro is willing to fight and die for freedom, but not for something he does not have and has but little hope for.

Mrs. Roosevelt writes an endorsement of Miss Buck's tirade, calling particular attention to the "not willing to fight and die for something he does not have and has but little hope for" outburst.

The social reform magazines are full of the same kind of stuff, reminding us, they say, that "Hitler hasn't anything on the Southerners; that Hitler is actually more honest and honorable than we in the South, for he comes out openly and brags about his persecutions of the minorities."

Isn't this sort of trouble-making just the thing Hitler wants? Isn't it following exactly his pattern, "Divide and Conquer"? Aren't Miss Buck, Mrs. Roosevelt and their ilk doing the very same thing, or trying to do the very same thing, that the Indian leaders are trying to do to England - take an advantage of the War to make their demands?

Lots of things are wrong, no doubt, in the South; just as lots of things are wrong, no doubt, in the North, and in India. But is this the time, here in the United States, to try to stir up trouble between the races? Aren't we at war, with a terribly big job on our hands? Can't the agitators wait until tomorrow to take up their social-equality campaign?

CRITICISM OF MEN AND CONDITIONS WHICH MAKE OR MAR THE FUTURE OF A RACE

FEB 21 1942

Members of Congress and the committee which investigated the Pearl Harbor debacle have leveled considerable censure at the Navy. There have been very direct charges of inefficiency. The nation has become alarmed about the general and specific abilities of those charged with the direction of our naval forces. But in defense of the Navy's efficiency it should be brought out that the Navy department has mimeographed a letter which is a reply to any Negro who protests against the exclusion of the Negro from ranks above messmen in the Navy. All that the "efficient" navy people do is write in a date and your name and you get a mimeographed form letter telling you that "the policy for not enlisting men of the colored race for any branch of the naval service EXCEPT MESSMEN branch was adopted to meet the best interest of general ship efficiency." Now this really is the height of efficiency on the part of the Navy in carrying out its policy of exclusion of the Negro. But this type of efficiency will not win naval battles in the Pacific.

According to Time Magazine, the army big wigs did not know that Private Robert Brooks, first casualty of World War II, was a Negro when it was decided to name the parade grounds at Fort Knox after him. The Army has been in the habit of being able to tell when a private was a Negro by the mere mention of his unit. The segregation in the Army made this possible. But, the Army cannot always tell and cannot tell now how many light colored Negroes are in what the Army calls white outfits. Robert Brooks was one of these fair-skinned Negroes who in some manner was in a white outfit. The Army big wigs may have been dismayed when they found that Private Brooks was a Negro, but they went through with the dedication. The whole situation presents some problems to the Army. Imagine how many of these fellows there are. Just think of how many such cases may come up and add to the Army's problems in respect to its policy of segregation. While they may have carried through with a private, they might do some funny things if something comes up an it is a general involved.

Newspaper accounts from the scene of the Pacific war area reveal that in some sections of Malaya the British forces evacuated the white population but left the native civilian population to whatever fate the Japanese might mete out. Maps of the great Singapore area show that there is what is known as a "native section." Singapore has fallen, but the reports indicate that here, also, the white civilians who wanted to leave were provided with ships and taken to Australia. No one needs to be a psychologist to understand how the native civilian population felt about this action. The natives were fighting for their own land but were under the spell of the British imperial doctrine that they were as much a part of the empire as the governors and other rulers sent from Great Britain to rule them. But when this differentiation between civilian populations was made some sort of error was committed. The Japanese will not fail to utilize the error as they establish their rule in the conquered areas. The stage has been set. Britain can blame only herself for providing this advantage for Japan.

It cannot be repeated too many times that the right to vote is one of the fundamental rights of every citizen of the United States. This repetition is necessary because too many people who are now being denied this right have failed to make a fight to eliminate all of the practices which result in disfranchisement of both whites and Negroes in many states in the South. To permit these southern states to elect a congressman with only five per cent of its population eligible to vote and demand that a northern congressman receive the votes of 50 per cent of the population in his district is a fundamental equality which strikes at the very heart of representative government. For northern congressmen to be required to receive over 50,000 votes and a southern congressman a bare hand full of votes, gives to the South a power well beyond its population. Every American should at this time demand that at least our national law-making body be representative or else the spectacle of the tail wagging the dog will continue and we have already seen the result of southern influence in Congress and to contemplate a future with this type of domination is to envision a leadership which will finally kill even the hope of a true democracy.

Say Colored Troops Pulled Off Normandie

FEB 14 1942

Reporters Told Whites Objected to Presence Of Black Soldiers

(Photos on Page 3)

Had it not been for America's Jim Crow policy, the giant Normandie would probably be ready to sail.

That was the challenging fact put to investigating authorities this week when initial efforts were made to fix responsibility for the disastrous fire which caused more than $5,000,000 worth of damage to one of the world's greatest passenger vessels.

For one thing, G-men learned that colored soldiers were not on guard duty when the fire started. Army authorities ordered the 372d Infantry to withdraw the guard, the Star-News learned, because "she is about ready to go and we don't need the boys any longer."

But dock workers, white and colored, disputed that explanation by saying that several complaints were made recently by whites who did not like being ordered around by colored soldiers.

To bolster their claim, the dock workers also emphasized that, of 2,200 men working on the Normandie, not a single person was known to be colored. Approximately 300 laborers told reporters they had never heard of any colored men being employed to help in converting the liner into a vessel fit for wartime service.

A few recalled having seen "some colored mess boys from the Navy," learning the layout in preparation for service later.

Star-News reporters spent five hours on the scene Monday, trying to find out if any colored were employed in a skilled capacity aboard the Normandie. But their efforts proved futile.

One man, who identified himself as Italian, said he believed that "there were two or three colored fellows around, but ordinarily your boys can't get into this sort of work. They just don't talk the right language. To be truthful," he added, "speaking English just isn't enough."

372d Back on Duty

As soon as the blaze started, Army officials ordered the 372d back on duty. But, even in the face of such a disaster, many remarks were heard about "them niggers."

One official, identified later as a big shot on the Maritime Commission, told a group of white reporters: "I hope those niggers don't cause us any trouble handling their guns like that. They're good soldiers and plenty tough but white people in this country will never obey them in the real sense of the word."

As the Maritime Commission official spoke, some of the reporters took notes. "Now, boys, be careful," he said, "don't write that because that bunch in Harlem will be down here picketing before the fire is out." FEB 14 1942

Defense Training Discrimination Probed in N.C.

MAY 2 1942

CHARLOTTE, N.C.—Close on the heels of a fight against discrimination in the NYA training courses for machinists here, it has been revealed that colored persons are being excluded from defense training in several other North Carolina cities, including Asheville, Wilmington, and Winston-Salem.

In this city union instructors were reportedly refusing to teach the machinist trade to colored persons, but would teach them to be machinists' helpers.

Letter Unanswered

The local branch of the NAACP made a strong protest to heads of the A.F. of L. local of the International Machinists' Union, of which J. P. Waggoner is president. A letter to Mr. Waggoner, in which he was asked to state definitely the union's local policy, is still unanswered.

In the welding schools in Asheville, and the defense projects in white centers in Wilmington and Winston-Salem, the general attitude seems to be a willingness to use colored persons in defense, but the unions won't permit white instructors to teach them.

MAY 2 1942

Man Take Case to FEPC

The union attitude, according to a letter from State NYA officials, is that union members may not teach colored youth, but that the union has no objection to colored instructors teaching the courses. The latter, however, are not easily found.

The union says that it will admit colored persons into the union after the apprenticeship

In the Spirit of Fair Play

JAN 16 1942

• More such events as the "Salute to Negro Troops," held in Mecca Temple last Sunday, would undoubtedly contribute to national unity and to national morale.

JAN 16 1942

This cultural benefit was sponsored by the Stage, Screen and Radio Division of the Fight for Freedom, Inc., and the Council for Negro Culture. It served to weave together the common stake of Negro and white Americans in the fight against Hitler, through a skillful and enjoyable dramatization of the historical traditions of the country.

The participation of Mrs. Roosevelt, Paul Robeson, Herbert Agar, and Councilman A. Clayton Powell, Jr., and so many outstanding artists was an expression of the broad concern of the population in the welfare of the Negro troops for whom the benefit was given. This shows again that discrimination against Negro soldiers and the Negro people flouts the spirit of unity and fair play which prevails in the country today as never before. All the participants and sponsors of the affair helped to strengthen morale in the armed forces and among the people generally.

NEGROES IN DEFENSE JOBS.

A committee to investigate charges of racial and religious discriminations in the employment of men and women in defense industries has been holding hearings in Chicago. The President has issued an executive order forbidding such discriminations. It is the business of the committee to discover whether the rule is being obeyed.

JAN 22 1942

A number of employers were questioned in open meeting and a considerable amount of evidence was obtained tending to show that prejudice against Negroes was preventing them from getting work. It is to be hoped that the committee will assemble its facts with care and present them to the President forcefully. As has often been pointed out in these columns, the abuses complained of make a mockery of our claim to be fighting a war for the four freedoms.

A paragraph in Tuesday's account of the hearings was a good deal less than reassuring. It said that an audience of several hundred had listened to the questioning of the employers, but that the executive session, scheduled for the evening, at which heads of governmental offices were to have been examined, was canceled. The explanation given was that this aspect of the problem was being handled in Washington.

Why should private employers suspected of discrimination be examined in open session and government agencies be examined in secret? The government is by far the nation's biggest employer, and has repeatedly been charged with unfairness to Negroes. Why this protection to the biggest of the alleged offenders? Why not collect such evidence as may be available in Chicago and elsewhere as a check upon the testimony which may be obtained in Washington? Is it assumed that the government is above the Constitution, above the statutes, above the executive order of the President, and above inquiry?

Most of the people of this country have believed that the President was genuinely desirous of giving the colored people a square deal in the armament program. It is true that he is dependent upon southern Democratic support in congress; and it is true that he placed union labor representatives on the committee of inquiry in face of the fact that many unions have barred Negroes from membership and therefore from employment on union shop defense projects. It was possible to discount these circumstances, but it is not easy to disregard the conduct of the committee in Chicago.

Colored Radio Expert Turned Down By Navy

'Flat Feet' Is Decision Of Officials

JAN 3 1942

EAST ST. LOUIS, Ill.—(ANP)—Caesar S. Bassette, radio technician, is trying his best to "remember Pearl Harbor" and respond to the call of the United States armed forces for volunteers. But Bassette spent a fruitless week in an effort to enlist for services in the field work in which he is highly skilled. The navy finally got rid of him by giving him a special physical examination and announcing he had flat feet which private physicians dispute.

Bassette is a native of Hampton, Va., and a graduate of Hampton Institute where he majored in science and was a creditable student in physics. He has held a class "B" amateur radio license since 1934. In 1936 he obtained his class "A" license. He is a member of the Radio Relay league, the national association of radio operators. In August, 1940, this organization presented him with a code proficiency certificate, certifying to his ability to receive international radio messages at the rate of 30 words a minute. In the summer on 1935, Bassette served as chief radio operator for the CCC Radio Station, WGX, located in York Town, Va. Since January of this year his abilities have been devoted to the NYA in East St. Louis where he serves as foreman of the radio shop at Technical center.

WHITE ONLY

Last Tuesday the young man attempted to answer the nation-wide radio and press call for amateur radio operators and join the United States Army Signal corps at the Eighth Corps Area Recruiting station in St. Louis. He was met with "open to white only." He returned to East St. Louis and sought to enlist at a Seventh Corps area recruiting station only to receive the same answer. The same evening Bassette reported to the city hall to talk with Lt. W. E. Miles of Chicago who was here to recruit amateur radio operators for the naval communications service.

Local newspapers had stated that radio technicians and radio men were being sought by the navy in the ultra high frequency field of radio. Persons selected for the work attend a naval radio training school for an eight-month course in a branch of the radio field only recently explored by radio engineers. The work is considered of a highly confidential nature and approved applicants become petty officers immediately, with a beginning pay of $72 a month. Qualifications are United States citizenship, 17-35 years of age; unquestionable character and integrity; high school graduation, with amateur class "A" or "B" license or as a substitute, experience in radio repair and maintenance work.

"USELESS TO APPLY"

Despite the fact that Bassette more than satisfied all requirements, Lt. Miles told him, "It is useless for you to apply." Bassette asked Miles, "Will it be the policy of the navy to use racial discrimination in this branch of service?" The lieutenant replied "No racial discrimination will not be used, but it is a well-known fact that certain racial groups in this country have associated themselves with a particular kind of job, and as far as the navy is concerned, the colored boys have only been interested in being mess boys."

After this deft job of white-washing in behalf of the United States navy, Lt. Miles suggested to the young radio expert that he go to St. Louis to see Lt. Commdr. Buell F. Brandt in charge of the area navy recruiting station.

Wednesday, Bassette went to St. Louis, accompanied by a representative of the East St. Louis Citizens' defense and Urban League committee, to seek a conference with Brandt. The men buffeted their way past numerous petty naval officers and sub-ordinates, who one by one repeated the oft-told tale, "We only have mess jobs for colored boys." Finally after being told that the commander was out of his office, they found the commander's orderly who admitted that the commander was in as Bassette peered over the shoulders of the orderly at the commander himself seated beneath a huge American flag.

The naval officer left Bassette and his companion standing for over a half hour, but finally stepped out of his office to speak with them. He talked at length to Bassette, jotting down the information called for by the naval enlistment application from, on a scratch pad. He concluded by suggesting that Bassette report for his physical examination the next morning.

Thursday morning at 8 o'clock, Bassette was given special attention and passed ahead of a long line of applicants awaiting physical examinations to a navy physician who gave him a cursory examination, which revealed that Bassette's feet were flat. The navy physician personally escorted the would-be volunteer back to Lt. Brandt, who favored Bassette with the following note: JAN 3 1942

12-18-41

B. F. Brandt."

A local Negro physician who serves as one of the examining doctors for the East St. Louis Selective Service Board No. 1, which found Bassette physically fit for army service insisted Saturday that Bassette's feet were not flat. The doctor, however, was reluctant to formally take issue with the navy's findings.

Declares Victim Was Attacked In Rome, Georgia

Incident Is Reported To Bus Officials

BY CLIFF MACKAY

(World Managing Editor)

FEB 2 1942

Another ugly chapter in the despicable saga of studied abuse heaped by prejudiced whites upon the heads of young black Americans preparing to risk their lives to "save democracy" was written Saturday in Rome, Georgia, the World was informed Sunday afternoon.

The informant, a Clark college graduate. who is teaching this year in Chattooga county, was stirred by intense anger, as she related the incident to newspaper men at the Atlanta bus terminal.

FILL BACK SEAT

FEB 2 1942

The teacher, Miss Rowena Bentley of Athens, said she was a passenger on the Southern Stages, National Trailways Bus, when eight young selectees from Chattooga county boarded the vehicle at the county seat of Somerville.

The men filled all of the back seat and with other Negro passengers occupied two of the side seats near the rear of the bus, she said.

When the bus stopped at Rome, two boys who were riding on the back seat left the bus momentarily to get a sandwich. The bus driver looked around and immediately began insisting that Negro passengers occupying side seats move to the vacated spaces on the back.

One of the young men attempted to tell the driver that the seats were already taken and that the two selectees who had gone after sandwiches were coming right back. The driver refused to listen and started back to the rear, threateningly asking: "Do you mean to say you aren't going to move back?"

TRIES TO EXPLAIN

FEB 2 1942

The youth, Miss Bentley asserted, continued his attempt to explain the absence of his fellow passengers, but had begun to get up.

"You aren't getting up fast enough," the bus driver was quoted as saying, whereupon the driver seized the youth by the arm and began pushing him toward the front. Reaching the door, the boy, who was due to report for induction at Fort Benning Saturday afternoon, was shoved off the bus.

Just as his companion stepped to the ground, one of the absent youths, who had been detailed leader of the group, walked up and asked what was the trouble, Miss Bentley said.

"What have you got to do with it?" the bus driver belligerently asked, the witness reported.

REFUSES TO LISTEN

The leader then attempted to explain that he was the leader of the group that they were, en route to be examined for the army, and that it was vitally necessary for them to reach Atlanta by two o'clock Saturday afternoon.

"Don't you talk back to me," the angered bus driver shouted, menancingly.

"Wait a minute, mister," the leader was quoted as saying. "After all I'm a man just like you are and I have tried to explain to you that we have to report for the army."

"I don't care where you're going," the hostile driver was quoted as replying, suddenly grabbing the leader by the arm, propelling him toward the door. A heavy set white passenger, who had been witnessing the discussion, suddenly jumped up and began beating the second youth about the head with his fists, the witness said.

FEB 2 1942

FORCE YOUTH OFF BUS

Both the passenger and the bus driver then combined forces to put the youth off the bus. Then over the protests of the six remaining selectees, who kept warning him that their companions must reach Atlanta by a certain time, the driver shut the door and drove off, leaving the youths in Rome.

Miss Bentley reported she heard the bus driver tell the two ejected boys to get a cab standing by the station, but was not able to see whether or not they obeyed. Just what became of the young men was not learned.

FEB 2 1942

On reaching Atlanta, the army detail assigned to meet the youths, asked where the other two were, and was informed that they had been put off at Rome. The two had not arrived in Atlanta by the time she had boarded another bus headed for Athens, Miss Bentley said.

The youthful teacher, who was a member of the 1940 class at Clark, detailed how the heavy-set white passenger, who had butted in on the dispute, later expressed regret that he had struck the boy, but added, "He just had no business talking back to a white man."

TAKES NAMES OF WITNESSES

FEB 2 1942

The driver before the bus reached Atlanta passed around slips to white passengers for them to sign as witnesses, Miss Bentley asserted. She said it was only after her insistence that her name be put down as a witness that the driver reluctantly gave her one of the slips to fill out.

The matter was reported to the Atlanta division of Southeastern Stages by the Atlanta Daily WORLD.

FEARS EFFECT OF HIS ACT ON RACE MORALE

JAN 31 1942

Civilian Aide Had Been Urged To Take Step As A Protest

JAN 31 1942

WASHINGTON—(ANP) — Although he has attempted to step out of office no less than three times, the War department refuses to accept William Hastie's resignation, as civilian aide to Secretary of War Stimson, it is reliably reported in circles high in the administration's favor. Judge Hastie, who has made an enviable reputation in a tough spot, finds, it is reported, the department is not doing the things he would like to see done, nor is it doing the little bit that is being done fast enough to suit him.

When he discovered that his recommendations were not being taken as he thought they should be and as he had been promised they would, he submitted his resignation, only to have Under Secretary Patterson pointblank refuse to accept it.

Fear of what effect his resignation would have on Negro morale, already at low ebb, is believed back of the War Department's refusal to let him go.

JAN 31 1942

Several publications and individuals have urged Hastie to resign as a protest of conditions and policies of the department which are objectionable to Negroes and are responsible for failure of Negroes to rally enthusiastically to support of the war effort.

The same sources are responsible for saying that Hastie's assistant, Truman Gibson of Chicago, has frequently done the same thing, in fact, often sustaining Judge Hastie's opinions and joining with him in resenting the ignoring of their findings.

All told, the "Black Cabinet" has fallen on evil days since the inception of war. The NYA, with Mrs. Bethune as head, is on the way out or to become a part of another organization formed by combining the NYA, CCC and possibly the WPA.

Housing is in a dither because the heads of the departments have all followed Straus' mandates as to fair play and the elimination of discrimination.

Although it is rumored that Dr. Horne has been qualified under the Ramspeck bill and cannot be removed, there are others who are not so fortunate. In the same category is William Trent of the racial relations division of FWA. With the removal of Carmody, along with Clark Forman and Straus, there are persistent rumors that the axe will swing and some heads are liable to fall.

Over in the now defunct OPM, Dr. Weaver is sitting pretty with Sidney Hillman having control of labor under the new setup. So all talk of the combining of the labor training division with the FEPC temporarily is knocked into a cocked hat.

Claim Qualified Negroes Denied Defense Jobs

Questionable Cases Cited By Woman

MAR 28 1942

WASHINGTON—(ANP) — Pointing out the fallacy of the exclusion of competent Negroes from defense jobs as one of the drawbacks to the all-out war effort, Miss Lucille Norman cities cases of questionable action on the part of the War Department which seems to indicate more than just appears on the surface.

"On February 10, the Rock Island arsenal at Rock Island, Ill., one of the strategic points of productions, sent telegrams to a number of persons who had passed the junior professional assistant examination (given last November) instructing them to 'Advise immediately if interested in appointment as Senior Clerk at $200 annually starting March 16. After two months training here, assignment made to ordance establishments within the United States.' Among those so notified were a number of Negroes, three of whom were in Washington."

"Lucille Norman, who received her master's degree from Boston Teachers' college in June, 1941, and who has been working as a secretary in the legal department of the Office of Price Administration, was notified. She had taken the examination with an option as junior business analyst.

ANOTHER CASE

"William Rutherford, second year law student at Howard university, was another. He took the examination with an option in public administration. The third person's name is not known.

"Miss Norman and Mr. Rutherford were interviewed at the Social Security building and were told that their training and experience were adequate for appointment and they should forward to the commanding general at Rock Island, a medical certificate executived by a doctor in the federal service—which they did, Mr. Rutherford spending $150. Miss Norman was told to also send her official OPA release notifying the war department that it would interpose no action to prevent her appointment. Soon after receipts of these papers they were to receive official notice from the Rock Island arsenal. Each sent follow-up letters confirming that the necessary decouments had been forwarded but neither received any notice to report for work. On March 9, William Rutherford received a letter telling him that he was still being considered along with others, but yet those of the white racial group had received notification to report to work.

"Samuel Allen of Cleveland, graduate of the Harvard Law school in 1941, received a similar wire last October, but at the interview he was told he didn't have the qualifications. In order to take and pass the examination, certain educational qualifications are set up, which a Harvard Law school graduate surely must have had."

Army Limits Number Of Colored Nurses

JAN 24 1942

NEW YORK, Jan. 22.—Although the United States Army faces a critical shortage of trained nurses, Surgeon General James C. Magee of the U.S. Army, Tuesday laid down a policy in Washington barring race nurses from treating or attending white soldiers.

The Army has 7,000 nurses in its ranks now and has issued a call for 10,000 additional nurses, but the quota of race nurses has been limited to 56. These 56 will only be assigned to two camps in the South, Fort Bragg in North Carolina and Camp Livingston in Louisiana. They will only treat race soldiers.

IN LINE WITH ARMY POLICY

In answers to protests against this policy from leading race and white civic and professional leaders, Magee declared that the Army was opposed to using Negro nurses to attend white patients.

It will prevent this country's 8,000 registered race nurses from offering their services to their country.

It would seem that the army high command would prefer to have soldiers die from lack of adequate nursing care rather than discard its jim crowism. The Army's attitude is somewhat mysterious since the American Red Cross has no part in this policy of racial discrimination in nursing. The Red Cross does not draw the color line when it comes to recruiting nurses for its own ranks.

Dickerson, on FDR's Commission, Pushes Job Bias Fight

JAN 24 1942

(Special to the Daily Worker)

CHICAGO, Jan. 23.—The fight against the strangulation of all-out victory production by Jim Crowism has just begun, Alderman Earl B. Dickerson promised in a statement of the Chicago Council on Fair Employment Practices issued today.

The Chicago Council, which played an important role in facilitating the work of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice during its investigation and hearings here, will carry on.

It will not only follow up recommendations made by the President's Committee, but will extend its work.

Alderman Dickerson points out in his statement that the cases of discrimination made public by the President's Committee during its two days of public hearings were necessarily only a fraction of the cases known. He continues, "There are many which have not been made public, and there will be many others unless we make every effort to see that the President's Executive Order prohibiting discrimination is effectively applied.

"The public hearings should be only the beginning of our effort to eliminate discrimination in defense employment. We have some indication of the extent of discrimination as a result of the Committee hearings. We know that Jews, Negroes, and other minority groups are not being permitted to make their contribution to our victory effort. We know that they are being denied a fundamental right as citizens in a democracy."

Alderman Dickerson, who is also a member of the President's Committee, is acting chairman of the Chicago Council.

The Chicago Council has invited the cooperation of all persons and organizations in Chicago willing to join in a genuine effort to combat discrimination because of race, creed, color, or national origin.

At present the Committee is a temporary one. A meeting will be held in a short time to set up a permanent organization. The headquarters of the Chicago Council on Fair Employment Practices are now at Hull House.

Brilliant Young Engineer Is Arrested For Impersonating U. S. Army Air Corps Officer

JAN 31 1942

DAYTON, O., Jan. 29.—Arrested by Federal authorities last Saturday and held on charges of impersonating an Army officer, Franklin Peterson, prominent Philadelphian and son of Rev. and Mrs. W. P. Peterson, is awaiting the action of the Federal grand jury. Peterson was arrested while at work as a civilian employe in the instrument division of the Army Air Corps at Patterson Field.

The undoings of the brilliant young engineer was brought about following an interview he gave to The Pittsburgh Courier last week while visiting his parents in Philadelphia. Peterson wore an officer's uniform with Air Corps insignia, showing the rank of lieutenant, into the Philadelphia office of The Courier and gave an interview that he was recently commissioned in the Air Corps and was to be assigned to the 99th Pursuit Squadron at Tuskegee.

CO-WORKER BLAMELESS

Peterson included in his statement that Chauncey Spencer, co-worker, was also a commissioned officer. Investigation by The Courier and subsequent events show that both Peterson and Spencer are civilian employes at the Patterson Field. Mr. Spencer was exonerated by Federal officers of any attempt to impersonate an Army officer because he was not present and had nothing to do with the statement issued by Peterson.

According to information from the Provost Marshal's office, Peterson had applied for a commission and would have received one at an early date. The young minister's son is a former student at Temple university and Drexel Institute of Technology at Philadelphia and has made a brilliant record as an engineer since getting the job at Patterson Field last summer.

Crew Refuses To Sail Ship Unless Colored Men Hired

JAN 31 1942

NEW YORK, Jan. 29—As further proof of the solidarity and comradeship which distinguishes its membership from that of any other labor union, the National Maritime Union disclosed last week that a crew of white seamen had refused to sail on the SS Mormacport, a cargo ship built by the government for the Moore-McCormack Lines, when officials of the line refused to hire four able-bodied seamen who were Negroes.

In order to obtain a crew, the line finally yielded its position and took on a mixed crew which included the four rejected Negro seamen—Jacob Green, Zuvendee Wyllis, Allan David and Harry Jones, all of whom have seen from 15 to 20 years service at sea.

END DISCRIMINATION, SAYS NMU

NEW YORK, Jan. 29—(ANP)—Representatives of United Fruit, Moore McCormack, Lykes Bros. and the Clyde and Grace lines met with National Maritime union representatives here last month in a conference on discrimination of non-white union members and the tying up of ships due to lack of sufficient crews. Union representatives, Vice-Presidents Myers, McKenzie and Lawrenson, and the National Port committee asked ship owners to end discrimination against Negro and Filipino seamen.

All shipping companies were asked by President Curran to advise the union whether they would aid in assuring victory over fascism by eliminating all discrimination against any American worker because of his race, creed or color.

LINE OFFICIAL DENIES BLAME

It took the intervention of President Roosevelt three weeks ago to force the United States Lines to rescind its rejection of twelve Negro seamen who had been assigned to the SS. Kungsholm by the National Maritime Union. As in the case of the Mormacport, white seamen were willing to sail as members of the mixed crew but line officials would not allow it.

Although the NMU has accused the Moore-McCormack Lines of discrimination, Robert C. Lee, executive vice-president of the shipping firm, has entered an emphatic denial. "It's a lie", he said, "and I'm perfectly willing to be quoted. The NMU informed us that there was a shortage of seamen and asked us if we would take colored men.

"I said all right, but there must not be any checkerboard. I have no color line. We'll take an all-white crew or an all-colored crew, but we won't quarter them together. We'll take colored men provided the whites don't object. That's positively the only basis I'd accept." Mr. Lee admitted that the whites had not objected in the case of the Mormacport. "It seems that they are Commies," he said.

Army Limits Number Of Colored Nurses

JAN 24 1942

JAN 24 1942

NEW YORK, Jan. 22.—Although the United States Army faces a critical shortage of trained nurses, Surgeon General James C. Magee of the U.S. Army, Tuesday laid down a policy in Washington barring race nurses from treating or attending white soldiers.

The Army has 7,000 nurses in its ranks now and has issued a call for 10,000 additional nurses, but the quota of race nurses has been limited to 56. These 56 will only be assigned to two camps in the South, Fort Bragg in North Carolina and Camp Livingston in Louisiana. They will only treat race soldiers.

IN LINE WITH ARMY POLICY

In answers to protests against this policy from leading race and white civic and professional leaders, Magee declared that the Army was opposed to using Negro nurses to attend white patients.

It will prevent this country's 8,000 registered race nurses from offering their services to their country.

JAN 24 1942

It would seem that the army high command would prefer to have soldiers die from lack of adequate nursing care rather than discard its jim crowism. The Army's attitude is somewhat mysterious since the American Red Cross has no part in this policy of racial discrimination in nursing. The Red Cross does not draw the color line when it comes to recruiting nurses for its own ranks.

Dickerson, on FDR's Commission, Pushes Job Bias Fight

JAN 24 1942

(Special to the Daily Worker)

CHICAGO, Jan. 23.—The fight against the strangulation of all-out victory production by Jim Crowism has just begun, Alderman Earl B. Dickerson promised in a statement of the Chicago Council on Fair Employment Practices issued today.

The Chicago Council, which played an important role in facilitating the work of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice during its investigation and hearings here, will carry on.

It will not only follow up recommendations made by the President's Committee, but will extend its work.

Alderman Dickerson points out in his statement that the cases of discrimination made public by the President's Committee during its two days of public hearings were necessarily only a fraction of the cases known. He continues, "There are many which have not been made public, and there will be many others unless we make every effort to see that the President's Executive Order prohibiting discrimination is effectively applied.

"The public hearings should be only the beginning of our effort to eliminate discrimination in defense employment. We have some indication of the extent of discrimination as a result of the Committee hearings. We know that Jews, Negroes, and other minority groups are not being permitted to make their contribution to our victory effort. We know that they are being denied a fundamental right as citizens in a democracy."

Alderman Dickerson, who is also a member of the President's Committee, is acting chairman of the Chicago Council.

JAN 24 1942

The Chicago Council has invited the cooperation of all persons and organizations in Chicago willing to join in a genuine effort to combat discrimination because of race, creed, color, or national origin.

At present the Committee is a temporary one. A meeting will be held in a short time to set up a permanent organization. The headquarters of the Chicago Council on Fair Employment Practices are now at Hull House.

Brilliant Young Engineer Is Arrested For Impersonating U. S. Army Air Corps Officer

471

DAYTON, O., Jan. 29.—Arrested by Federal authorities last Saturday and held on charges of impersonating an Army officer, Franklin Peterson, prominent Philadelphian and son of Rev. and Mrs. W. P. Peterson, is awaiting the action of the Federal grand jury. Peterson was arrested while at work as a civilian employe in the instrument division of the Army Air Corps at Patterson Field.

JAN 31 1942

The undoings of the brilliant young engineer was brought about following an interview he gave to The Pittsburgh Courier last week while visiting his parents in Philadelphia. Peterson wore an officer's uniform with Air Corps insignia, showing the rank of lieutenant, into the Philadelphia office of The Courier and gave an interview that he was recently commissioned in the Air Corps and was to be assigned to the 99th Pursuit Squadron at Tuskegee.

CO-WORKER BLAMELESS

JAN 31 1942

Peterson included in his statement that Chauncey Spencer, co-worker, was also a commissioned officer. Investigation by The Courier and subsequent events show that both Peterson and Spencer are civilian employes at the Patterson Field. Mr. Spencer was exonerated by Federal officers of any attempt to impersonate an Army officer because he was not present and had nothing to do with the statement issued by Peterson.

Red Cross Solves Problem: Will Accept And Segregate Negro Blood

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Its duplicity exposed through publication of a letter written by Adm. Ross T. McIntyre denying that he had requested that the blood plasmas of Negro donors, be refused, the Red Cross this week announced that it would accept the contributions of Negro blood donors, but that they would be segregated from blood given by white persons.

This new policy which is as odious as the former one of flat refusal was made public in a statement released Wednesday, Jan. 21. The statement follows:

"The following policy has been formulated by the chairman of the American Red Cross in the consultation with the surgeons general of the army and of the navy, and is issued with the approval of the secretaries of war and of the navy. All blood donor centers and chapters cooperating in the enrollment of voluntary blood donors will conform to this policy:

"The facilities for processing blood plasma having now been expanded considerably to meet not only the increased needs of the armed forces but those of civilian emergencies as well, the American Red Cross, in agreement with the army and navy, is prepared hereafter to accept blood donations from colored as well as white persons.

"In deference to the wishes of those for whom the plasma is being provided, the blood will be processed separately so that those receiving transfusions may be given plasma from blood of their own race."

The project of developing blood banks for the army and navy, grew out of an experiment carried on by the Blood Transfusion association. This body, organized earlier in New York City, began in 1939-40 experiments which were carried on by Dr. John Scudder of Presbyterian hospital, New York City, and Dr. Charles R. Drew, head of the department of surgery at Howard university.

The research carried on in New York by Drs. Scudder and Drew progressed to such an extent that it was decided to use blood thus processed and dried in England and France for the allied armies.

Accordingly blood plasma with a commercial value of some $400,000, gathered principally in New York City and from people of all races, colors and creeds, under the general supervision of the Red Cross but with a Negro physician, Dr. Charles R. Drew, in charge, was shipped to England and used.

Plans were then considered by the Red Cross for the processing of blood similarly for the American army and navy. The processing went along satisfactorily until it reached Baltimore where objection was raised to acceptance of the blood of a Negro donor by local whites.

As would be expected, the Red Cross, which has always held to the policy of racial segregation, bowed to the will of the protesting whites, and to fortify itself sought the opinions of army and navy officials.

The navy, represented by Admiral McIntyre, responded that it had little use for blood plasma for Negroes and that it would not be necessary to process Negro blood for its use.

The army, represented by its surgeon general, Maj. Gen. James C. Magee, replied that it "was afraid the indiscriminate use of white and Negro donors would militate against the success of our blood plasma program." This appeared to be in line with most of Gen. Magee's pronouncements regarding Negroes and with Red Cross policy.

Gen. Magee is said by members of the National Medical association, and the National Association of Colored Graduate Nurses to have been totally reactionary wherever Negroes have been involved in army medical service.

Negro reaction was swift. Sensitive already toward discriminations, the statement was regarded as additional insult, and protests poured in. The American Red Cross found itself caught in the middle.

White southerners, awakened to the matter, joined an opposite protesting group insisting that they did not want Negro blood infiltrated into their sons.

Two weeks ago at a conference attended by the only Negro member of the Red Cross board, Dr. F. D. Patterson of Tuskegee, the Red Cross agreed to the use of Negro donors, and a general statement excluding mention of race altogether was agreed upon. The statement which it was agreed should be consented to by the army and navy read simply that hereafter all blood donors would be accepted.

Admiral McIntyre issued a letter denying that he had objected to the use of Negro blood which was perhaps technically true. General Magee would not accept the statement which had been worked out. He wanted it made specific and clear that the Negro blood would be kept separate and given only to those soldiers requesting it.

Observers point out that the interesting thing about the whole matter is that it has been scientifically proven there is no way to tell the blood of one race from another.

In the future Negro donors may give on the same basis as whites, as much blood to the Red Cross as they desire, providing their blood meets requirements.

Hobgoblins and Haemoglobin

THERE'S no difference between a Negro's and a white man's blood, except to the "scientists" who squeak and gibber in the streets of Rome and Berlin. This obvious truth needs to be forcibly impressed on whoever is responsible for the rejection of Negro donations to the American Red Cross blood bank for aid to those wounded in battle. According to Red Cross officials, their refusal was based on instructions from the Army and Navy. Rear Admiral Ross T. McIntire has denied this in a letter to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. While the buck-passing goes on, no one can be made to stand up and give the reason for excluding Negroes as blood donors. What reason could there possibly be? Sound medical practice certainly makes no such racial distinctions. Nor can we afford them—besides being unscientific and harmful to the medical aid program, they are as insulting to our Negro patriots as Hitler's "blood and soil" hysteria. Moreover, they violate the avowed policy of the United States government. A few days ago President Roosevelt reiterated that policy, when the federal Maritime Commission directed the United States Lines to employ Negro seamen as well as whites. In a letter to Joseph Curran, head of the National Maritime Union (CIO), the President again gave assurance that the government's purpose is "to encourage full participation in the National Defense program by all citizens, regardless of race, creed, color, or national origin, in the firm belief that the democratic way of life within the nation can be defended successfully only with the help and support of all groups within its borders." These words should be studied by anyone who admits racist hobgoblins into considerations of a nation's life-and-death struggle.

WANTED TO ATTEND ARMY SCHOOL: ARMY REBUFFS HIM

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15.—(ANP)—"I received a disappointing rebuff today. About four weeks ago, applications were taken for the next session of the officers' candidate school, which starts in January. I applied with about 15 other Negroes. Ten of our applications were accepted—the minimum qualifications was a grade of 110 on the army intelligence test. I was safe at 126.

"Two of us, I and another fellow, survived the first interview and took the physical examination. A rating scale was filled out for us by the company commander. High blood pressure disqualified the other fellow. I went to the final board interview last week. Only simple routine questions and questions of opinion were asked.

"Today my application, physical report and rating sheets were returned with a form showing reasons for rejection. The form indicated three possible means of disqualification: (1) not sufficiently recommended by commanding officer; (2) response to interrogation applicable to leadership and practiceability unsatisfactory; (3) military bearing and appearance unsatisfactory.

Not Wanted

They check number 2 against me. My company commander gave me the highest recommendation a man can get, and my military bearing, etc., was good. It's obviously a case of not wanting a Negro in the officers' candidate school. They have not had any in the past. My company commander practically said so himself today when he gave me the report."

This is an extract from a letter from a disappointed Negro who thought he had a good chance of becoming an officer through the present methods of infiltrating officers into the army from the ranks.

The outfit to which he was assigned was not an ordinary type of military unit, but one of the higher branches to which he had been assigned because of his high rating in intelligence test, etc.

The utter despair of thousands of Negro youths is sumed up in this letter, which would probably never reach the public had it not been for a sympathetic person interested in the welfare of such young men.

Hundreds of young men are receiving the same treatment, it is said, and in one camp, where they are admitting Negro youths to the officer candidate schools, the proposition is ridiculous. In the camp itself, there are about 4,000 Negro troops to 18,000 whites, or about 4 whites to 1 Negro. In the officers' candidate school, the ratio is 150 to 1, since there are 300 whites and two Negroes in the school.

"They Can't Mix Soldiers Too Damn Much For Me"-White Boy

FEB 7 - 1942

SAN ANTONIO—While investigating charges that soldiers were allegedly being mistreated at the Reception Center here a Houston Informer reporter, seeking information on the location of an office, asked a white soldier from a Texas town did the white and colored soldiers get along.

"Fine. Only they keep bragging about what good soldiers the colored boys make, but keep shipping them out. I wonder why they don't keep them down here;" he freely and surprisingly answered.

When reminded of the traditional objections to a mixed division he proved a versatile in his answer as in the first case.

"Boy, once we get over there before them guns they can't get too damned mixed for me."

Race Justified In Criticizing

47d

HAMPTON, Va., Feb. 5—Blasting the "segregation idea" of the American Red Cross in accepting Negro blood donors, Newbold Morris, $14,500-a-year president of the New York City council, revealed to a packed audience Sunday that a Negro had devised the blood bank.

The eminent liberal, a trustee of Hampton university, smashed at the racial discrimination idea in a Founders' Day address here. Said he:

"The American people are entitled to an explanation of the buck-passing going on between the American Red Cross and the Army and Navy. This . . . is racial prejudice carried to an absurdity!

"Why," he continued, "it was Dr. Charles Drew, a Negro physician of the faculty of Howard university, who devised the blood bank system and was invited to England to help them organize their blood banks."

DEMANDS AMERICA MAKE DEMOCRACY WORK AT HOME

Mr. Morris, in no uncertain terms, also demanded that America make democracy work at home as an example for South American countries and as a counter-attack against racial doctrine and propaganda, when he said: "Prejudice should not be allowed to stand in the way of complete maturity and the full meaning of democratic institutions.

"The potential earning power and purchasing power of the Negro has been overlooked in peace time.

"Their actual and potential industrial and fighting power MUST NOT be left out of our war effort.

"This," he continued, "Would be a colossal blunder. Right now, TODAY, may be the last chance for democracy to survive.

WOULD MAKE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN DEFEAT-VICTORY

"Whether the American Negro gets his chance to contribute to the strength of America today may well mean the difference between a long war and a short one. Let us hope that the projected spring drives . . . will not make the struggles so close that the failure to enlist the 'total' strength of one-tenth of our population would make the difference between victory and defeat.

In praising the loyalty of the race to America, Mr. Morris said:

"The American Negro has never been suspected of sabotage; his loyalty to America has never been questioned; his passionate desire for service in peace or war are only some of the reasons why the minority of white people who are striving to secure real opportunity for the Negro is constantly growing."

SAYS RACE HAS A RIGHT TO CRITICIZE

Before concluding his address, in which he paid tribute to Hampton's president and faculty, the council president said:

"Why should Negroes be criticized for struggling to achieve the rights which are guaranteed them under the constitution . . .?

"They care passionately for these rights. Otherwise, they would not be good Americans."

Houston Printer Charged With 'Inciting Riot'

FEB 7 - 1942

W. H. MITCHELL RELEASED ON $400 BOND

W. H. Mitchell, local printer, was arrested and placed under a $1000 bond charged with "inciting riot" at a local tavern this week. Mitchell's arrest grew out of a situation where he, well known citizen and business man, entered a verbal tiff where a Pennsylvania soldier resented being addressed as "nigger" by a local police officer. According to witnesses, Mitchell spoke in a gesture to avoid trouble by explaining to the arresting officer that the soldier was not a native of the South and naturally unfamiliar with southern customs, resented being addressed in a manner which the local officer had spoken to him.

Witnesses stated that the white MP's who are supposed to have charge of the soldiers, aggravated the situation by lecturing to the Pennsylvania soldiers and others saying, "You are niggers and will always be as long as you are in the South."

Mitchell, who was released on a $400 bond, refused to make any statement to the press about the matter.

The incident involving the attitude of the MP's has been referred to Major Smith, in charge of the MP detachment in this area.

Army Appeals for 50,000 Nurses, But No Colored

FEB 7 - 1942

47d

WASHINGTON

The appeal for 50,000 young women to enter nursing schools to prepare themselves for service with the military forces was not directed to the nation's thousands of colored would-be and graduate nurses, the AFRO learned this week from Major J. O. Flikke, chief of the U.S. Army Nurses' Corps.

Major Flikke was asked Monday whether the appeal, issued jointly by the surgeons general of the army, navy, and Public Health Service, was directed to the more than 8,000 colored graduate nurses and the thousands of girls anxious to enter army nursing careers.

"I don't know," she replied. "We didn't have anything to do with the appeal. We have colored nurses in two of our hospitals now and plan to use more as soon as the facilities are available.

"I understand that there are something like 5,000 colored graduate nurses available and this number is more than sufficient to meet our demand."

The two hospitals referred to by Major Flikke as using colored nurses are located at Fort Bragg, N.C., and at Camp Livingston, La.

Although it was announced a few weeks ago that the army would need 10,000 army nurses, only fifty-six of these will be colored due to the army's policy of assigning colored nurses only to the colored wards of army hospitals at Livingston and Bragg.

Surgeon General James C. Magee of the U.S. Army, who is reputedly responsible for the policy of assigning colored nurses only to wards and hospitals devoted exclusively to treatment of colored soldiers, could not be reached for a statement.

Mrs. Roosevelt Flays Citizens For Prejudices

JAN 18 1942

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 15—If the enjoyment of the privileges and benefits of American democracy is the only reason for loyalty then the colored people of this country have little reason to be loyal, was the attitude expressed by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt Thursday in a lecture before a group of women in the Rector's Aid Society of the St. Thomas Episcopal church.

MRS. ROOSEVELT

The First Lady said that even colored workers in her office of the Office of Civilian Defense have to walk many blocks for food because of the refusal of the white places to serve them, and often can get no taxicabs.

She would dislike to conduct a canvas of some of the sections in Washington, she said. The situation there has made her, she added, most conscious of racial discrimination and segregation.

JAN 18 1942

She said that she did not ordinarily advocate mingling of the races, but when large groups of people live together common sense measures ought to be taken.

Red Cross Scored

She criticized the Red Cross for its segregation of the persons who take first aid classes. In such period of distress all persons capable of administering to the sick and injured will wait upon white and black alike.

Mrs. Roosevelt took the position that the United States must show other nations that many nationalities and races can live in peace. Prejudice against the colored race and naturalized Japanese and German citizens, she said, constitutes a "growing problem."

TODAY'S TALK

BY A. N. FIELDS

WE NEED GREATER UNITY—LET'S NOT LET RETRIBUTION OVERTAKE US!

Courier — Pittsburgh, Penn.

FEB 7 - 1942

THE Fair Employment Practice hearing held a few weeks ago in Chicago received extensive publicity from the various papers of the midwest. The inquisitors were able to bring out much worthwhile evidence, which showed the vicious attitude of many large corporations with respect to their opposition to the employment of Negro people.

If the testimony adduced meant anything, then it is difficult to use your metaphysical scissors in determining the difference between the mental and physical brutality that we are fighting against abroad and the condoning of the same social and spiritual situation at home.

A. N. Fields

It would appear that our first responsibility is to determine to our own satisfaction, if we have not mesmerized ourselves at home with our false beliefs, in our preparation to spread democracy throughout the world. Can we reasonably argue that there is any difference in the viciousness and contempt for the orderly process of law and order between what happened at Pearl Harbor and what happened last week at Sikeston, Mo. In other words is there any difference between the spirit which prompted the Japanese in their assault, and the spirit which prompted the lynching in Missouri?

It is probable that in our fine way of reasoning coated with hypocrisy and sham, we may, in our holier than thou idea, want to argue that there is a substantial difference, yet the facts stand out as murder and treachery, which were involved in the two transactions and closed the two crimes with the same community of interests.

ETHERIDGE SPEAKS

At the hearing in Chicago of the President's Committee on Fair Employment, Publisher Mark F. Ethridge of Louisville, Ky., with his usual forthright honestness made this statement to the committee:

"We are engaged in an effort in which every loyal hand that can run a machine must be used. To draw lines of employment on any basis except that of fitness is to deny ourselves full use of our manpower. Even more seriously, it impairs national morale. This is an all-out war. Anything that does not fall in line with that idea is close to treason.

"If Japan establishes hegemony in the Far East and consolidates the yellow peoples, the white race itself may become a minority group and have brought home to it the importance of equality in opportunity, regardless of race or color."

This statement is indeed one which should receive sober and serious thought from every American. Black people in America have no desire to live under any other law or social regulations than those embraced in the pages of the Constitution of America. We want those laws and statutes universally interpreted for all Americans alike.

WE CAN LEARN FROM ENGLAND

It must be clear to all students of history as to why England's hand is slowly relaxing around certain particles of its great world empire. In regions where white people predominate and in regions where black people predominate it is the same. It is the same because the mother country has been openly accused of vicious joviality when ever the topic full citizenship has arisen in time of peace and plenty. In war these same oppressed people are proving now that they are willing to do more than their equitable part, and their life blood is being given up on the faint hope in a visionary Utopian loyalty instilled in them by crown's emissaries.

REMEMBER THERE IS A GOD!

But back of all this and the acknowledged unfairness toward black folk now going on in America some human beings fail to remember that there has been and there is an inevitable law of retribution, and black Americans just ask a square, human deal, to prevent that which might befall America.

In this great struggle America occupies an important position but her first great task is unification. We represent a government that justifies its existence upon the untrammeled opinions of the people; we maintain that political parties receive their sanction from the satisfaction of those they serve. But we divide this service into degrees; we attempt to measure it along the lines hedged about by racial identities, which is so un-American as to make our actions false both in word and in deed. These unjointed groups of racial identities which make up America proper are of themselves a potent force to be reckoned with in computing the possible survival of our culture.

EDITORIAL OF THE WEEK

SENDING NEGRO TROOPS SOUTH

JAN 29 1942

Negro draftees from many northern centers are being sent to southern cantonments to get a first hand experience of what it means to be a Negro in the land ruled by King Jim Crow. From Fort Bragg, near Fayetteville, N. C., comes the shocking report of brutality and murder by white military police. From Prescott, Arkansas, comes the equally shocking report of the attempt of forty-three Negro soldiers to return to the North to escape the abuse of persons in that community. The number of such incidents increases. We recall the treatment accorded Negro soldiers, proudly wearing uniforms of the United States army on the streets of many southern cities at the close of the war in 1918. Even an army uniform, which ought to be as meaningful as a United States flag, is no protection to a Negro against the racial prejudice which not only hampers the Negro but warps the souls of southerners. Unless the government can give these soldiers the protection they have a right to expect, every Negro soldier should be immediately removed from southern cantonments. As the Christian Century points out, "Unfortunately the policies of segregation and discrimination which underlie these and other incidents have official sponsorship in the government itself."

Every Negro citizen should address a letter to his congressman urging him to give immediate attention to this problem. Perhaps a march on Washington is still needed.

ONLY WHITE TROOPS AT THE D. C. CENTER

FEB 7 - 1942

WASHINGTON, Feb. 5 — (ANP) — White troops on leave are enjoying the facilities of the remodeled Gunther building down on Ninth and Pennsylvania avenue, while Negro troops are out in the cold as a result of the much publicized fight over whether they were to have the use of Banneker center which needed remodeling to the extent of $10,000 or whether they were to be permitted to use the Gunther building.

The answer to the protest is that the Negroes have nothing, and lots of Washingtonians are trying to hide from the answer to the question propounded at the time. The question had to do with segregation in other entertainment and recreational facilities, whereas some of those loudest in the denunciation of the proposed plan demanded "equal facilities without segregation, with both centers, the one ordinarily planned for whites and the one for Negroes, open to both races with bi-racial staffs."

Another argument was the government was not supposed to take over any site or building already in use as a recreational center by any city, but was to build or remodel other buildings for this purpose. Edgar Brown, president of the United Government employes, was one of those who fought the issue and sought to have something done for the Negroes. But opposing him was a strong bloc of Washingtonians, some of whom it is believed, saw possible jobs in the newly formed recreation center. Meanwhile, Negro soldiers are without facilities because of the misunderstanding and the attitude of both races, one determined to spend the $10,000 on Negroes while the white got the $75,000 house, and the other group seeking, it is said, no one knows what.

Mrs. FDR Warns Against Defense Discrimination

FEB 4 - 1942

"Negro citizens should be organized into every civilian defense service and function and trained just as others," Mrs. Roosevelt told newspapermen during the press conference held backstage of the City Auditorium following her Atlanta appearance Tuesday night.

The statement was made in response to a question asked by Cliff Mackay, managing editor, of the Atlanta Daily WORLD, who pointed out that Negroes formed forty per cent of Georgia's population.

"No discrimination should be practiced against Negro people in the organization of Civilian Defense Councils," she declared. "They should be allowed to become air raid wardens, auxiliary police just as other people. This is a total war and it calls for total defense."

Mark Ethridge Quits as Chief Of Job Group

FEB 11 1942

Retains Membership on Federal Committee on Employment.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 10.—(AP) President Roosevelt has accepted the resignation of Mark F. Ethridge as chairman of a committee on fair employment practices to permit him to devote more time to his duties with the Louisville Courier-Journal.

Mr. Roosevelt, however, increased the board membership from six to seven, and Ethridge agreed to continue as a member. Malcolm S. MacLean, president of Hampton Institute, Hampton, Va., has accepted the chairmanship of the committee for the duration of the war.

The committee was created after protests had been made by Negro organizations that they were not receiving a fair proportion of defense employment.

The White House said most of the topflight officials of The Courier Journal were devoting most of their time to war work of one kind or another and Ethridge felt he must, as a result, give up the chairmanship of the committee.

In a letter to Ethridge Saturday the President said he was reluctant to accept the resignation since "the committee has done a splendid job under your leadership" and its usefulness and effectiveness would increase in the next few months.

TODAY'S TALK

WE NEED GREATER UNITY— LET'S NOT LET RETRIBUTION OVERTAKE US!

FEB 7 - 1942

THE Fair Employment Practice hearing held a few weeks ago in Chicago received extensive publicity from the various papers of the midwest. The inquisitors were able to bring out much worthwhile evidence, which showed the vicious attitude of many large corporations with respect to their opposition to the employment of Negro people.

If the testimony adduced meant anything, then it is difficult to use your metaphysical scissors in determining the difference between the mental and physical brutality that we are fighting against abroad and the condoning of the same social and spiritual situation at home.

A. N. Fields

It would appear that our first responsibility is to determine to our own satisfaction, if we have not mesmerized ourselves at home with our false beliefs, in our preparation to spread democracy throughout the world. Can we reasonably argue that there is any difference in the viciousness and contempt for the orderly process of law and order between what happened at Pearl Harbor and what happened last week at Sikeston, Mo. In other words is there any difference between the spirit which prompted the Japanese in their assault, and the spirit which promoted the lynching in Missouri?

It is probable that in our fine way of reasoning coated with hypocrisy and sham, we may, in our holier than thou idea, want to argue that there is a substantial difference, yet the facts stand out as murder and treachery, which were involved in the two transactions and closed the two crimes with the same community of interests.

ETHERIDGE SPEAKS

At the hearing in Chicago of the President's Committee on Fair Employment, Publisher Mark F. Ethridge of Louisville, Ky., with his usual forthright honestness made this statement to the committee:

"We are engaged in an effort in which every loyal hand that can run a machine must be used. To draw lines of employment on any basis except that of fitness is to deny ourselves full use of our manpower. Even more seriously, it impairs national morale. This is an all-out war. Anything that does not fall in line with that idea is close to treason.

"If Japan establishes hegemony in the Far East and consolidates the yellow peoples, the white race itself may become a minority group and have brought home to it the importance of equality in opportunity, regardless of race or color."

This statement is indeed one which should receive sober and serious thought from every American. Black people in America have no desire to live under any other law or social regulations than those embraced in the pages of the Constitution of America. We want those laws and statutes universally interpreted for all Americans alike.

WE CAN LEARN FROM ENGLAND

It must be clear to all students of history as to why England's hand is slowly relaxing around certain particles of its great world empire. In regions where white people predominate and in regions where black people predominate it is the same. It is the same because the mother country has been openly accused of vicious joviality when ever the topic full citizenship has arisen in time of peace and plenty. In war these same oppressed people are proving now that they are willing to do more than their equitable part, and their life blood is being given up on the faint hope in a visionary Utopian loyalty instilled in them by crown's emissaries.

FEB 7 - 1942

REMEMBER THERE IS A GOD!

But back of all this and the acknowledged unfairness toward black folk now going on in America some human beings fail to remember that there has been and there is an inevitable law of retribution, and black Americans just ask a square, human deal, to prevent that which might befall America.

In this great struggle America occupies an important position but her first great task is unification. We represent a government that justifies its existence upon the untrammeled opinions of the people; we maintain that political parties receive their sanction from the satisfaction of those they serve. But we divide this service into degrees; we attempt to measure it along the lines hedged about by racial identities, which is so un-American as to make our actions false both in word and in deed. These unjointed groups of racial identities which make up America proper are of themselves a potent force to be reckoned with in computing the possible survival of our culture.

SENDING NEGRO TROOPS SOUTH

JAN 29 194

Negro draftees from many northern centers are being sent to southern cantonments to get a first hand experience of what it means to be a Negro in the land ruled by King Jim Crow. From Fort Bragg, near Fayetteville, N. C., comes the shocking report of brutality and murder by white military police. From Prescott, Arkansas, comes the equally shocking report of the attempt of forty-three Negro soldiers to return to the North to escape the abuse of persons in that community. The number of such incidents increases. We recall the treatment accorded Negro soldiers, proudly wearing uniforms of the United States army on the streets of many southern cities, at the close of the war in 1918. Even an army uniform, which ought to be as meaningful as a United States flag, is no protection to a Negro against the racial prejudice which not only hampers the Negro but warps the souls of southerners. Unless the government can give these soldiers the protection they have a right to expect, every Negro soldier should be immediately removed from southern cantonments. As the Christian Century points out,

"Unfortunately the policies of segregation and discrimination which underlie these and other incidents have official sponsorship in the government itself."

Every Negro citizen should address a letter to his congressman urging him to give immediate attention to this problem. Perhaps a march on Washington is still needed.

ONLY WHITE TROOPS AT THE D. C. CENTER

FEB 7 - 1942

WASHINGTON, Feb. 5 — (ANP) — White troops on leave are enjoying the facilities of the remodeled Gunther building down on Ninth and Pennsylvania avenue, while Negro troops are out in the cold as a result of the much publicized fight over whether they were to have the use of Banneker center which needed remodeling to the extent of $10,000 or whether they were to be permitted to use the Gunther building.

FEB 7 - 1942

The answer to the protest is that the Negroes have nothing, and lots of Washingtonians are trying to hide from the answer to the question propounded at the time. The question had to do with segregation in other entertainment and recreational facilities, whereas some of those loudest in the denunciation of the proposed plan demanded "equal facilities without segregation, with both centers, the one ordinarily planned for whites and the one for Negroes, open to both races with bi-racial staffs."

FEB 7 - 1942

Another argument was the government was not supposed to take over any site or building already in use as a recreational center by any city, but was to build or remodel other buildings for this purpose. Edgar Brown, president of the United Government employes, was one of those who fought the issue and sought to have something done for the Negroes. But opposing him was a strong bloc of Washingtonians, some of whom it is believed, saw possible jobs in the newly formed recreation center. Meanwhile, Negro soldiers are without facilities because of the misunderstanding and the attitude of both races, one determined to spend the $10,000 on Negroes while the white got the $75,000 house, and the other group seeking, it is said, no one knows what.

Man Wanted To Attend U.S. Army School, Is Rebuffed

JAN 12 1942

Report Hundreds Of Young Men Are Excluded

WASHINGTON, D. C.—"I received a disappointing rebuff today. About four weeks ago, applications were taken for the next session of the officers' candidate school, which starts in January. I applied with about 15 other Negroes. Ten of our applications were accepted—the minimum qualifications was a grade of 110 on the army intelligence test. I was safe with 126.

JAN 12 1942

"Two of us, I and another fellow, survived the first interview and took the physical examination. A rating scale was filled out for us by the company commander. High blood pressure disqualified the other fellow. I went to the final board interview last week. Only simple routine questions and questions of opinion were asked.

"Today my application, physical report and rating sheets were returned with a form showing reason for rejection. The form indicated three possible means of disqualification: (1) not sufficiently recommended by commanding officer; (2) response to interrogation applicable to leadership and practiceability unsatisfactory. (3) military bearing and appearance unsatisfactory.

"They check number 2 against me My company commander gave me the highest recommendation a man can get, and my military bearing, etc., was good. It is obviously a case of not wanting a Negro in the officers' candidate school. They have not had any in the past. My company commander practically said himself today when he gave me the report."

This is an extract from a letter from a disappointed Negro who thought he had a good chance of becoming an officer through the present methods of infiltrating officers into the army from the ranks.

The outfit to which he was assigned was not an ordinary type of military unit, but one of the higher branches to which he had been assigned because of his high rating in intelligence test, etc.

The utter despair of thousand of Negro youths is summed up in this letter, which would probably never reach the public had it not been for a sympathetic person interested in the welfare of such young men.

Hundreds of young men are receiving the same treatment, it is said, and in one camp where they are admitting Negro youths to the officer candidate schools, the proposition is ridiculous. In the camp itself, there are about 4,000 Negro troops to 18,000 whites, or about 4 whites to 1 Negro. In the officers candidate school, the ratio is 150 to 1, since there are 300 whites and two Negroes in the school.

ASK CONVICTION IN GURDON, ARK. SOLDIERS CASE

JAN 3 - 1942

War Department Refuses To Act on NAACP Note Citing Violations

NEW YORK—The War Department turned thumbs down on the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People contention that the state troopers near Gurdon, Ark., had violated the Articles of War, but the N.A..AC.P. legal committee pointed out this week that the unprovoked assault is also punishable under Section 54, Title 18 of the United States Code, "the conspiracy statute."

In a letter to Robert P. Patterson, under secretary of war, the N.A.A.C.P. asked that the War Department make a formal request to the U. S. Department of Justice to prosecute the persons involved in an attack on Negro troops at Gurdon.

JAN 3 - 1942

Section 54, Title 18 provides a $5,000 fine or imprisonment of six years or both if two or more persons conspire to prevent, by force, intimidation, or threat, any officer of the United States from discharging his duties or to injure him in his person or property on account of his lawful discharge of the duties of his office.

The N.A.A.C.P. expressed determination not to abandon the fight for a fair settlement of the Gurdon incident.

"Unless some action is taken in this matter, this threat against our democratic form of government will go unpunished and will certainly give courage to other mobs to show similar disrespect for the uniform of the United States Army," the N.A.A.C.P. declared.

NAACP PROTEST BRINGS ACTION

Southern Officers of Fort Bragg Unit Invoked Penalty Without Authority.

JAN 10 1942

NEW YORK, Jan. 8 — A protest to the War Department, lodged by the NAACP over the issuance of orders by officers of the 77th Coast Artillery Regiment stationed at Marcus Hook, Pa., that "any association between the colored soldiers and white women, whether voluntary or not, would be considered rape." has caused the order to be withdrawn.

JAN 10 1942

According to the NAACP the order was issued b Lieut. Lewis A. Bonifay and said the death penalty would be invoked for any relationship between white and colored males and females. Many of the officers of the 77th are white southerners. Chaplain H. A. Robinson is the only colored officer.

OFFICERS AGREED TO INVOKE PENALTY

On December 22 the Association wired Secretary of War Stimson to remove the officers involved if the order was found to be in excess of their authority. On December 31 the NAACP received a report from the War Department that "The order was found to be contrary to the purport of verbal orders of the regimental commander who has caused the order to be withdrawn."

In discussing the matter an officer who would not give his identity said, "We have received reports that soldiers have accosted women and have also been informed that white women have approached some of the men. This matter was discussed at a meeting of the officers and it was decided to invoke the army penalty of death to prevent this type of association."

The 77th is commanded by Lt. Col. R. E. McGarrough, a white Georgian, and is composed of selectees from New York, Illinois and Michigan. The regiment figured in the Fort Bragg "Night of Terror" of last August when one member of the unit was killed by white MP's.

'We Must Be Vigilant Against Racial Discrimination'

• The action of the War Department in rescinding a scandalous Ku Klux order issued by a commanding officer against Negro troops in Pennsylvania will meet the widest approval as a contribution to national unity against Hitler.

Using the contemptible "rape" bugaboo, Officer Riley E. McGarragh, commanding the 77th Coast Artillery Regiment, authorized an announcement that relations between Negro and white citizens would be punished with the "death penalty." It was clearly the purpose of this order to arouse antagonism and division between the Negro and white people, and to intimidate the Negro soldiers and the Negro community.

What nettled this officer was that "townspeople and kids kept dropping into the barracks to visit the soldiers" and some "would stop Negro sentries on their posts to ask them how they were getting along." In other words, as never before there is a spirit of equality developing between Negro and white, with millions of patriotic white citizens realizing increasingly that victory over Hitler requires working and fighting shoulder to shoulder with Negro Americans. This spirit makes for a strong armed force and a heightened morale throughout the nation for the fight against the common enemy. Such a spirit, already manifest, needs to be encouraged as the people of Pennsylvania were plainly trying to do.

JAN 6 1942

The fascist "racialism" exhibited by Officer McGarragh flies in the face of President Roosevelt's words uttered in his Tuesday message to Congress. "Hitler," said the President, "will try again to breed mistrust and suspicion between one individual and another, one group and another, one race and another. . . . We must be particularly vigilant against racial discrimination in any of its ugly forms." (Our emphasis.)

The action of the War Department, following protests by Negro and white citizens, should be duplicated and strengthened by taking all measures to prevent the recurrence of such Fifth Column policies which seriously weaken the nation's united effort to victory.

PROMPT ACTION!

JAN 1 0 1942

The Army Command is to be commended for its quick action in withdrawing the order issued by Lieut. Lewis A. Bonifay of the 77th Coast Artillery, asking for the death penalty for "relations between white and colored males and females whether voluntary or not."

The War Department now says that "the order was found to be contrary to the purport of verbal orders of the regimental commander who has caused the order to be withdrawn."

JAN 1 0 1942

The matter should not end there by any means. Bonifay should be court-martialed.

Morale officers should urge that the War Department issue a general order to the entire army that no simular ukases ever again be issued.

If these Negro soldiers are good enough to be called to defend a part of our vital Atlantic Seaboard, then they are good enough to associate with anybody—white or colored—who lives there and who wants to associate with them.

MARTIN PLANT HEAD FEARS WALKOUT IF NEGROES ARE HIRED

JAN 1 7 1942

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15.—Exclusion of colored workers from training and employment in the Glenn L. Martin aircraft plant is due to race segregation in force in Maryland, Glenn L. Martin, president of the Glenn L. Martin Company, told the special House committee investigating national defense migration while it was holding hearings in Baltimore.

Mr. Martin also said the skilled men in the plant would walk out if colored workers were placed in the plant alongside of white workers.

RAP EXCUSES

Both of these excuses were blasted by Frank J. Bender, regional director, Maryland Congress of Industrial Organizations, and Edward S. Lewis, executive secretary of the Baltimore Urban League.

Failure to employ colored workers in skilled jobs in defense work was due to employer's objections, Mr. Bender stated. Where labor is given an opportunity, he said, colored and white men will work side by side without objection.

In the Glenn L. Martin plant, he pointed out, the overwhelming majority of workers are about 21, 22 and 23 years of age and most of them "are on the first job they ever had, and they would not be so indoctrinated or prejudiced against the Negro race" as to quit work because colored workers were put to work beside them.

Mr. Lewis told the committee he did not feel that the argument that white and colored workers would not work together was sound. He pointed out that there was no difficulty with CIO unions as far as race discrimination was concerned, but that there had been acute difficulties with American Federation of Labor Craft Unions.

JAN 1 7 1942

MUST HAVE SEGREGATION

"Now, we haven't a thing in the world against the Negro," Mr. Martin testified. "If he is a good citizen he is all right; but we would have to have segregation and the organizations who have been promoting the Negro question do not wish to accept segregation."

"You say you would have to have segregation?" asked Representative Frank C. Osmers, Jr., Republican, of New Jersey.

"We believe so," replied Mr. Martin.

"Why?" asked Mr. Osmers.

"Because Baltimore has segregation," replied Mr. Martin. "The Negro does not go to the white man's theatre nor does he go to the white man's restaurant or hotel. There are no colored people in the legislature in Maryland. The schools have segregation.

"We are willing to help with any social reform or change, but we do not feel that we have time to lead in such a reform at this time.

JAN 1 7 1942

CLAIMS DANGER OF WALKOUT

"When Maryland undertakes to place the Negro on the same basis with the white man, without segregation, I believe that our organization would be ready to absorb such a relation. But at present we have segregation, and when we employ the colored man, I believe that we will have to segregate him, as is the custom in every other instance in the State."

"Well, I don't know whether I have correctly gauged your attitude," remarked Mr. Osmers, "but I think your attitude is one of absolute neutrality so far as the question is concerned. But you anticipate, do you, that there would be a work stoppage if you attempted to put Negroes throughout your plant?"

"If we undertook to put Negroes in there without segregation, there would be an immediate stoppage," replied Mr. Martin. "We know that. The Organizers who have proposed our employing Negroes without segregation had some publicity in the Maryland papers. We have said nothing about it—made no reply, but a number of our employees who became concerned for fear we might consider such a thing have let it be known that they, the skilled men in the plant, will walk out when the Negroes walk in; and so we are, in the interest of national defense, not going to do anything to disturb a social problem until someone else has straightened it out."

Oxley Fights Defense Bias In Alabama

MOBILE, Ala.—Lieut. Lawrence A. Oxley, senior specialist with the Social Security Board at Washington, has been in Alabama for the past two weeks endeavoring to stimulate equitable participation of sualified Negroes in defense training and employment. From various reports Lieutenant Oxley has met with success.

After a three-day visit here where he interviewed several key people and held conferences with Employment Bureau officials, Lieutenant Oxley was successful in securing approval by Mobile defense authorities for a $10,000 defense training program to fit Negro trainees for the job openings anticipated in defense ship building here. Approximately $500,000 in defense contracts have been awarded in the Mobile area for the construction of light destroyers and cargo ships.

The opening of defense classes in Mobile marks the first instance in this section where qualified Negro workers have been integrated into the total all out training picture. Several local organizations have sought these classes.

Prior to coming to Mobile, Lieutenant Oxley held conferences at the regional office of the Social Security Board at Birmingham and the office of Defense Training of Alabama at Montgomery.

F. D. R. SEEKING END OF DISCRIMINATION

APR 6 - 1942

WASHINGTON, April 5—(AP)—A letter from President Roosevelt to the Fraternal Council of Negro Churches saying that the Committee on Fair Employment Practice is "making vigorous efforts to eliminate discrimination based on race, creed, color or national origin" was made public Sunday by the National Negro Congress.

The letter, written in reply to one from the council, said that the committee, appointed by a presidential order last June, had held public hearings "which have sharply brought to the notice of war contractors their obligation to eliminate evidences of discrimination in employment."

Mr. Roosevelt also said:

"There has been considerable progress in opening training and working opportunities for Negroes in war industries. I look for an acceleration of this improvement as the demand for labor in our war industries increases and as the committee on fair employment practice develops its means for meeting specific situations.

"At my direction, the armed services have taken numerous steps to open opportunities for Negroes in the armed forces of our country and they are giving active consideration to other plans which will increase that participation."

"Last night's incident was merely a brawl," he said yesterday, "which, if it had to happen, might just as well have occurred between members of the same race."

Negro Soldiers Not Wanted In Texas Camps, Gov. Told

Courier

DALLAS, Texas, July 9.—Negro soldiers are not wanted near Eagle Pass and Brackettville, Texas. This fact was made known when residents of these two little communities bombarded Governor Coke R. Stevenson with requests to intercede with the War Department in preventing Negro troops from being stationed at Fort Clark, located at the edge of Bracketville at Eagle Pass, on the Mexican border.

Despite the fact that these same colored soldiers must fight and die to protect these narrow-minded Texans from the common enemy, they are not welcome to share the facilities of these communities.

It was pointed out to the governor by many whites that there are "no schools for educating Negro children," "no cafes or theatres or other public buildings which could be frequented by the Negro soldiers."

Mrs. O. J. Cansler, Dallas representative of The Pittsburgh Courier, wrote a letter to the Dallas Morning News expressing the sentiments of many race residents of the state relative to the attitude adopted by those white citizens who do not want our boys stationed near them. The letter follows:

Dallas, Texas, July 3, 1942.

The Dallas Morning News,
Main and Lamar Streets,
Dallas, Texas.

JUL 11 1942

Thinking Negroes are sorely perplexed over the present crisis facing America. Down through the years, they have demonstrated unquestioned loyalty, yet today, they stand rebuffed at every turn. There is no place for them in southern Defense Plants, (few maids and porters excepted) yet the daily press reports that spies from other lands are found in the very heart of America's production and preparedness. The Defense schools closed their doors in the beginning to Negro enrollment. The classes that are available to them are too often manned by poorly instructed and uninformed leaders, consequently, very half-heartedly attended.

Negro Women are anxious to take their places in the ranks of Defense, but in many cases they have been told that they were not being accepted in the present set-up. When the gigantic Hollywood Caravan came to Dallas for Army and Navy Relief, no provision or accommodations were available to Negro patronage. Camp Wolters is sending its soldiers to us on July 4th with an emergency relief show, but again Negroes are suffering the usual discrimination—a seat in the left-side of the balcony.

Down in Eagle Pass, Texas, white citizens are storming the Governor's office, and he in turn is begging the "powers that be" in Washington not to station Negro soldiers in that vicinity. The complaints say that no homes, schools, amusement houses or restaurants are open to Negroes. The entire picture is a pathetic one. In many of the dining cars, Negro soldiers must eat behind a curtain so that the sacred laws of the State are unbroken, but it is a startling fact that if (God forbid) the enemies' bomb ever falls upon us, the blow will not have a racial label, nor will the days be spaced.

Unmindful of this dire situation, Negro men are leaving their homes by the hundreds to take their places beneath the colors; Negro business houses are investing huge sums in Defense Bonds and Negro mothers are teaching their children to revere the American Flag and the Democracy for which it stands. A birthday party given for a two-year-old boy recently would have gladdened the heart of every American and shamed quite a few. Many Defense Stamps were given in lieu of the usual gadgets for such an occasion. Twenty Negro children, scarcely more than infants stood beneath a large American Flag, waving over the assembly, sang in true childish gusto, "God Bless America." William Cecil Paul, around two summers, knows that the country is at war and he knows that he would fight for his Uncle Sam if he were but a man—thanks to his home training.

Tragical indeed for America to draw its color line so taut these days. The country is at war—this is everybody's war. The Negro has never been known to betray a trust; give him his place in the sun; let him call himself a man. This is the cry of Negro America.

Medical Shortage Due to Race Bias

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Race discrimination by a large number of medical schools is responsible for the shortage of physicians which the army and navy face, Representative Samuel Dickstein, Democrat, of New York, declared on the floor of the House last Wednesday.

JUN 27 1942

Mr. Dickstein's remarks were evoked by a letter from Dr. Willard C. Rappleye, dean of the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Columbia University, to congressmen asking their support for a federal appropriation for loans to students of limited financial means in medicine, engineering, dentistry, physics, chemistry, and other critical occupations.

The House Appropriations Committee had refused to include a provision for such loans in the appropriations for the Social Security Agency.

Mr. Dickstein charged that medical schools are nothing but closed corporations.

"I know that there are a number of medical schools that have been discriminating against people of certain races," he declared.

BAR JEWS, NEGROES

He pointed out that the supply of physicians is insufficient to meet the needs of the armed forces due to the exclusion of qualified students from some medical schools on account of race or religion. He had reference to the rejection of both Jewish and colored students.

Mr. Dickstein introduced a bill for the erection of a number of military schools throughout the country. One such school would be located in each army corps area. Students would be selected as cadets and midshipmen are now chosen for the United States Military and Naval Academies.

City in Maine Goes 'Southern'

BANGOR, Maine—Incensed over the admittance of Negroes in the air corps, white southern cadets temporarily stationed at the air field here have made the city take on all the characteristics of hatred and prejudice generally found in the deep south.

Negro troops under Negro officers, assigned to the post near the city meet with rebuffs and humiliations on the part of business people in the town to such an extent that their morale has been considerably lowered, and they, for the most part, voluntarily restrict themselves to the post.

The city manager has been meeting with Major R. E. Contee every day for a week, trying to accept a separate USO for Negroes. If such is established, it will be the first deliberate jimcro USO in New England. At present Negro soldiers are asked to leave public restaurants "before they are embarrassed" and in some cases they are not asked to leave but, instead, are served and after the bill is collected are jailed on trumped-up charges.

A Bangor Daily News reporter was told by a policeman how he was all set to arrest two Negro officers who unsuspectingly went in the Paramount Hotel for supper; but learned that Maine did not have a law to permit such. However, in many cases, Negro soldiers are arrested on "made-up" charges.

A Negro officer, Lieut. McCottry, obtained reservations at the Lowder Hotel for his wife, who was to visit him on business. She arrived in the middle of the night; the hotel refused accommodations, violating a 1917 law, which forbids refusal of service to a soldier in uniform. The case is the first such in the history of the state. It is being tried in municipal court here this week.

Fight Arsenal Negro Firings

PHILADELPHIA, July 16.—The United Federal Workers, CIO, have got nowhere with a protest to the War Dept. that discrimination, and not inefficiency, caused the dismissal of 14 Negro women from the Frankford Arsenal here. "PM Daily"

Back from Washington, Ann Wharton, national representative of the UFW, said that Col. W. R. Johnson of the War Dept. was polite to her and two of the dismissed women—but that was all. New York, N.Y.

"He gave us many fine words," she said, "but we were completely dissatisfied."

Miss Wharton said Col. Johnson denied that discrimination was involved and insisted that the women were fired for inefficiency. He also argued, she said, that the proportion of Negro workers at the Arsenal compared favorably with the percentage of Negroes in Philadelphia's population.

¶ That the Civil Service Commission certified the 14 women as sub-inspectors on shells when they were employed in March.

¶ That the women, the only Negroes working among whites in their inspection division, were shunted after six weeks to the box factory, where there were no whites other than supervisors.

¶ That, in the box factory, there was no piece work, as before, and less earnings.

¶ That when the union protested, the 14 were fired.

No Discrimination In His Office, Says Censor Byron Price

NEW YORK—(S N S)—"It is the policy of the Office of Censorship to permit no discrimination because of race, creed or color," said Byron Price, director of the office, June 24, in reply to a letter from the NAACP asking him to check on reports that Negroes certified for jobs there had been turned down.

Price stated: "Our only requirement is ability to perform satisfactorily the intricate and often technical fuctions of censorship."

Prejudice Must Not Interfere

Use Will Be Made Of All Manpower Available In U. S.

NEW YORK—"When jobs are scarce, Negroes aren't trained because there is no employment opportunity; when jobs are plentiful, Negroes can't fill them because they aren't trained," was the sentence employed by Federal Security Administrator Paul V. McNutt, to describe the plight of America's largest minority group at the Unity for Victory mass meeting held here Sunday.

McNutt assured that provincial prejudices shall not jeopardize American liberties.

MAP PROGRAM

Delegates, both Negro and white, from over two hundred A. F. of L. and C. I. O. unions and community organizations, representing over a million people attended the Trade Union and People's Victory Conference on Saturday at the Fraternal Club House, 110 West 48th Street, and planned a positive program for harnessing the large reservoir of Negro labor into full participation in war industry.

The two-day conference ended Sunday, with a Unity for Victory mass meeting at the Golden Gate Ballroom, 142nd Street and Lenox Ave., with Paul V. McNutt's address one of the highlights.

DORIE'S PARENT PRESENT

Mrs. Connie Miller, mother of Dorie Miller, naval hero; Congressman Vito Marcantonio; Eddie Tolan, representing Council of Negro Youth; Joseph Curran, president of the National Maritime Union; Edward Lawson, representing Donald Nelson of the War Production Board; Councilman A. Clayton Powell, Jr.; Winifred Norman, chairman, National Conference of Negro Youth, and Ferdinand Smith, secretary of the National Maritime Union, also appeared on program.

The conference, which was sponsored by the Negro Labor Victory Committee, the People's Voice and the National Conference of Negro Youth, heard reports on what has already been accomplished since the Negro Labor Victory Committee submitted a list of proposals to Donald Nelson, head of the War Production Board last April, and what strides have been made since the representatives of the Committee held a round-table discussion with the War Manpower Commission last May 28th.

In elaborating upon his statement describing the plight of the Negro McNutt said:

"But in a truer sense it describes the plight of the Nation. It describes a problem America is up against today in its demand for trained manpower.

"America permitted itself the luxury of discrimination ten and twenty and thirty years ago. Today we lack trained workers.

"Today America is making up for lost time," he continued. "There are some plants, some areas, which have not fully discovered that fact—but they will.

MEN WILL BE FOUND

"From the great reservoir of more than 5 million Negro workers needed men will be found for the production lines at home—and for the battle lines upon the seven seas.

"It is fundamental that the life of no American soldier—of any race or creed or color, anywhere in the world — shall be put in jeopardy because of the prejudice of any employer, any worker—or any employer's or worker's organization anywhere in America, McNutt emphasized.

"It is unthinkable that our sacrifices shall be in vain or our liberties jeopardized by any provincial prejudices.

"And do not underestimate our progress. We are using Negro workers in American industry.

"Negroes are being used today in all branches of the war industry. Government has taken the lead.

THOUSANDS AT WORK

"In U. S. Navy Yards, in arsenals, in army cantonments and at naval bases, thousands of skilled and semi-skilled Negroes are at work, he asserted.

"Government has also helped private industry to extend Negro employment — through the work of the Labor Division, War Manpower Commission, and the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice.

"Thousands of Negroes have been hired in recent months in the aircraft industry.

"Tens of thousands are speeding ship construction on both Coasts.

"But we are not using Negroes enough.

"These things that I have described are only the first steps.

MANY VIOLATORS

"There are still too many employers who stipulate on their hiring schedules that certain jobs are barred to Negroes. There are still too many who hire them only for certain service jobs or assign them to work below their best skill.

"Such employers are protecting their prejudices at the cost of production for victory.

"And America cannot stand that kind of nonsense.

AT CROSSROADS

"Because America is discovering the productive power and production necessity of its Negroes the whole cause of Negro progress today stands, I think, at one of those great cross-roads of destiny.

"This is a time which places upon the shoulders of every one of you a tremendous responsibility.

"The little people, the oppressed minority have risen always as the result of their own efforts and their own powers. They have risen always by proving themselves in crises.

"There are some who fear today that Negroes will be influenced by the propaganda line of Goebbels or of Japan.

"There are others who believe that American Negroes will fall for the party line of fascism or communism — trailing after the big balloom of promises and letting go of the firm cornerstone of American democracy.

THEY ARE WORKERS

"Some people hope so. Other people fear so. America's Negroes are workers. They do jobs that need doing.

"To match Paul Bunyan and Pecos Bill they have John Henry in their tradition of great achievement. Heroes who do jobs," he added.

Social Equality Irks Hollywood Haters of 369th

HOLLYWOOD, Calif. —(ANP) —Because a white couple entertained colored soldiers in their home here, a group of irate neighbors have threatened to get the building and loan company to foreclose on them so as to force them out of the neighborhood.

The trouble began when the husband, David H. Prosin, invited several soldiers from the 369th to his home to eat after he learned from them that four or five restaurants in North Hollywood, a separate and self-governed suburb, refused to serve them.

Party Draws Protest

When Mrs. Prosin invited the members of the local chapter of Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority to a dance for the boys, the neighbors protested as they "just don't want colored people socializing in North Hollywood homes."

Mrs. Prosin has planned another party which she intends to go through with despite protests because, as she stated, "any soldier that is a credit to the uniform is a credit to my home regardless of race, color or creed."

Citizens have threatened to go to the white commander of the 76th, which took the place of the completely colored - officered 369th, Col. French, and it is feared that he might declare her home and party "out of bounds" to placate the fascist-minded North Hollywood residents.

SORRY SPECTACLE

The officer at Fort Benning who is said by Fortune Magazine to have told a white youth, who objected to sleeping in the same barracks with Negro soldiers, "the could get out and stay out," is in the opinion of The Gadsden Times, "sorry Army material." The Daily agrees.

Certainly in these grave times, it is poor judgment to say the least, for an Army officer to attempt to fan racial prejudices. The Daily has no earthly idea why it came to pass at Fort Benning that white troops and Negro troops should have been quartered together. We imagine the situation was not desired by members of either race and the whole thing smacks of the work of some professional race agitator, a specie found among members of practically every race.

The Times says: "Any officer who has so little sense as to deliberately stir up racial feeling at a time when the nation is fighting for its life, and who has so little respect for the feelings of white youths, is wholly unfitted for any mission involving sound, common sense."

The Daily again agrees with The Times, but insists that the whole blame should not fall upon the nit-wit who made the remark quoted in Fortune's.

The blame rests upon the high command of Fort Benning. Let us be fair about this proposition. Routine complaints, such as the one described by Fortune's usually do not occupy the attention of the ranking officers of a post as big as Benning. We are forced to the conclusion that the remark must have been made by an officer of the lower ranks, although his name and rank were not given by the magazine.

So let us convict the officer of no more serious charges than sheer stupidity, but let us ask of the command of Fort Benning exactly how and why it happened that soldiers of both races were quartered together.

The captain of a ship is responsible for the conduct which goes on aboard his ship.

The commanding officer of an Army fort is responsible for the actions which transpire on that fort especially if they concern policy.

Will the commanding officer of Fort Benning tell us who ordered the white and Negro soldiers to share barracks and why such an order was issued? A straight forward reply should go far toward clarifying a situation which is beginning to disturb conservative whites as well as conservative Negroes.

Members of both races have a big job to do for their country, but past experience has taught us they will do a better job if they pursue their separate ways to achieve the goal we all seek—victory over the Axis.

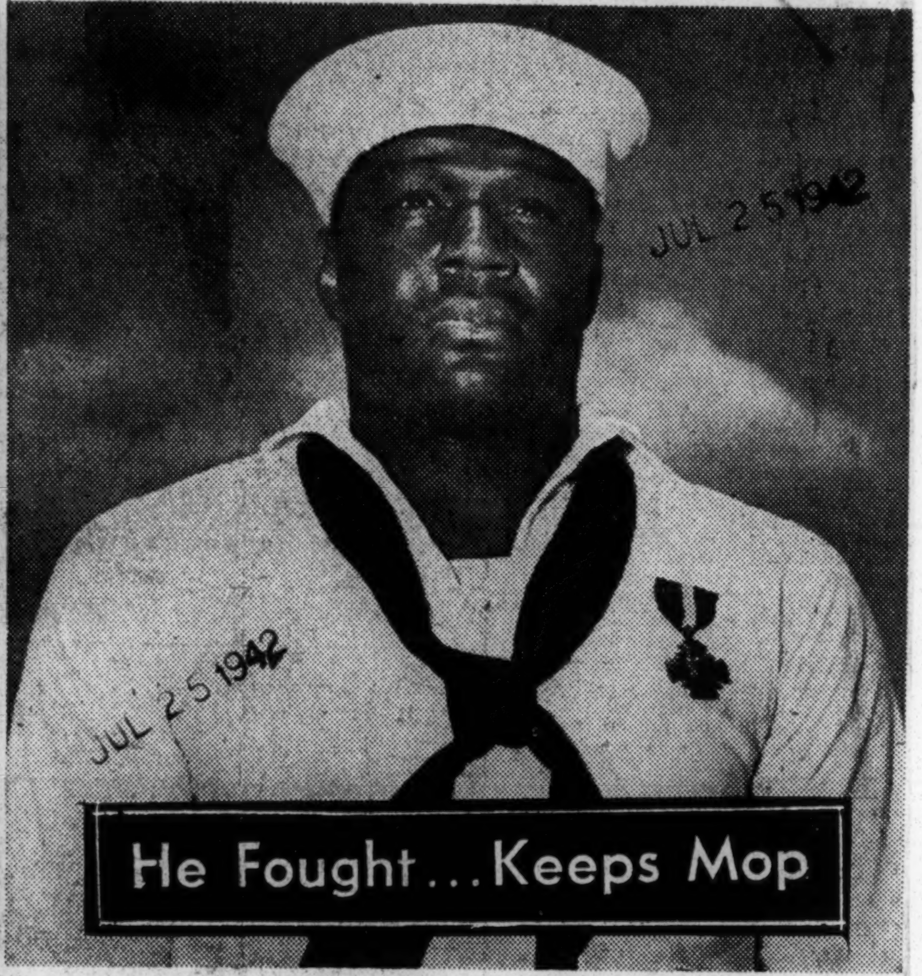
THIS IS AN EXAMPLE OF HOW THE JIM-CROW POLICY AND THE JIM-CROW ATTITUDE WORK

He Warned . . . Gets Commission



He Fought . . . Keeps Mop

Our Army and Navy heads protest that the system of segregation imposed on Negro citizens in the service does not result in discrimination. They say that although the Negro is segregated, he has the same training, the same equipment, the same accommodations and the same OPPORTUNITY as the white soldier. The pictures above disprove this contention. In the picture on the left is Brigadier General George L. Van Deusen shown pinning the bars of a second lieutenant on Joseph L. Lockard while the latter's wife looks on. Lockard, of course, is white. He was a sergeant at Pearl Harbor when the Japanese attacked December 7. He gave a warning of the approach of the Japanese which went unheeded. For keeping his eyes and ears open, Lockard was returned to this country, sent to an officer training school and has now been given a commission. On the right is the photograph of Dorie Miller. Miller was also at Pearl Harbor. He was a messman, one of the boys who wait on officers, shine their shoes, mop up the decks and polish the brass. But Miller threw aside his mop when the Japanese came. He rushed to the top deck of the Arizona to fight. He seized the body of his dying captain and carried it to a position of safety. He grabbed a machine gun and trained it on the Japanese bombers until his ammunition was exhausted. No, the Navy did not return Miller to this country and put him in an officer training school. The Navy returned him to his mop and duster and shoe shine brush. Scores of heroes have been returned from the Pacific so that the American people can see their boys who are fighting the war. But the Navy finds Dorie Miller too important waiting table in the Pacific to return him so that his people might see him. In the one case, where the boy is white, he is returned to this country and advanced to a commission. In the other case, where the boy is black, he is returned to the kitchen and given a mop. —International News photos.

Sane Advice to the Negro

SANE and levelheaded counsel to the Negro appears on this page today from MARK ETHRIDGE, former publisher of The Times-Dispatch, and former chairman of the President's Committee on Fair Labor Practices, of which he is still a member. The extract is from the Louisville Courier-Journal, of which MR. ETHRIDGE is general manager.

No informed person of any race can charge that MARK ETHRIDGE is a spurious friend of the Negro. All who know him recognize his friendly attitude, and it can be taken for granted that if he sees the present inter-racial tension, and the unreasonable d e m a n d s of certain Negroes, as highly dangerous and promotive of discord and strife, there is a genuine basis for his feeling.

The Times-Dispatch has published several editorials of late in which it expressed much the same point of view as that expressed here by MR. ETHRIDGE. For carrying these editorials, the paper was assailed in certain quarters as unsympathetic to the grievances of the Negro, and as out of step with modern democratic concepts. Let those who attacked us note the words of MR. ETHRIDGE concerning the dire results which will come to the Negro, if he pushes blindly ahead, under the stress of wartime excitement, in an effort to wipe out racial segregation. The South, as MR. ETHRIDGE properly declares, cannot be forced into a position on this issue, against its deeply-held convictions. Those who are trying to have the Federal government bring about such a result are simply risking violent interracial strife and the loss of decades of Negro progress.

Nashville Officials Criticized On Negro War Work Training

BIRMINGHAM, June 18 (AP)—School authorities at Nashville, Tenn., were criticized today as constituting a bottleneck in efforts to train Negroes for war work by witnesses testifying before the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice.

This testimony followed a lengthy inquiry into employment practice at the Vultee Aircraft, Inc., operations at Nashville, during which witnesses declared no Negroes were qualified for production jobs at the plant because they lacked pre-employment training, and such training was not available in Nashville.

Dr. Emory Q. Hawk, economist and member of the Seventh Regional Labor Supply Committee which made a study of the Nashville problem, said it was his opinion that "the city officials form the chief bottleneck."

He said W. A. Bass, Nashville city school superintendent, was "hostile in his attitude" toward the training of Negroes for war work. Dr. Hawk's survey, placed in the record, listed 1500 Nashville Negro males, all between 18 and 35, as eligible for pre-employment training for aircraft production.

M. H. Day, editor of the Nashville Globe, Negro newspaper, declared a Negro committee had been seeking defense training courses for Negroes since October, 1940, but that the only courses instituted were for training blacksmiths and auto mechanics.

Mark F. Ethridge, general manager of the Louisville Courier-Journal, and a member of the committee, questioned several witnesses concerning the courses in blacksmithing and auto mechanics, and inserted the statement that unless "there is a legitimate demand in Nashville for blacksmiths and auto mechanics, this sort of training is destructive and tends to hinder the war effort."

G. E. Freeman, state director of vocational education, outlined methods of determining vocational courses in Tennessee schools, saying they were instituted at the request of some particular employer, or at the suggesstion of the U. S. Employment Service.

He said there had been no demand in Nashville for pre-employment training for Negroes for aircraft production work. Other defense courses, including sheet metal work and welding, have been started in Nashville this year, he said, but enrollment is small.

The committee's hearing of complaints against Vultee brought a "statement of company policy" from F. C. Bryan, Vultee spokesman for the case, that "Negroes will be given equal opportunity with all other persons on future openings and those who qualify will get jobs."

Mark M. Latting, one of the Negro complainants against Vultee, testified he was informed he lacked proper training when he applied for a job at the Nashville plant as a bench mechanic.

Latting said he was a graduate of the Agricultural and Industrial College at Nashville, and had 20 years' experience as a mechanic.

George Hastings, Vultee's industrial relations manager, agreed that there were no Negro production workers in the aircraft plant but said 16.5 per cent of the Negroes who had made application had been given jobs, while only 13.2 per cent of the whites had been employed.

Exact employment figures were not listed after Hastings said the Army authorities had instructed him such figures must not be made public. He said eight-tenths of one per cent of all Vultee employes are Negroes, all rated as janitors, cleaners and maids.

Dr. Malcolm S. MacLean, Hampton Institute president and committee chairman, opened the three-day hearing with the assertion that his group's sole interest was promotion of the war effort by making available the nation's total manpower.

"According to our best analysts," he said, "we will have 10,000,000 to 12,000,000 men in our armed forces by Jan. 1, 1944."

Threaten Strike When Negroes Get Skilled Jobs

White Workers In Birmingham Resent Move

BIRMINGHAM—(A N P)—Die-hard white union men, fighting efforts of their own union to include men without regard to race, color, or creed in all jobs are threatening stoppage of work in the Raimund ore mine of the Republic Steel corporation because four Negro motor runners have been hired.

Several years ago Negro motor runners working in this mine, and are working in a similar capacity in other mines of this district.

According to informed circles, the union, CIO, had imported other miners to take the place of the prospective strikers when one of the Negro motor runners appeared for work.

JUL 9 - 1942

A union leader said last week that this case was placed before the FEPC when it conducted hearings here. It was not listed for the hearings, although it was understood that several undocketed cases were called to the attention of the committee.

Union leaders were in sessions here July 2 trying to adjust this matter without stoppage of work or denial of the skilled jobs to the qualified Negro men.

SEPARATE OFFICERS' CLUBS TO OPERATE AT FT. HUACHUCA

By FRANK E. BOLDEN
(Courier War Correspondent)

FORT HUACHUCA, Ariz., July 23—In an interview with Col. E. M. Hardy, post commander at Fort Huachuca, this correspondent learned definitely that there would be two separate officers' clubs in operation on the post pursuant to War Department policy. The Mountainview Club will be opened for use by the colored officers, and the Lakeview Club will be for use by the white officers. The clubs will serve officers of the Post Complement and also the 93rd Infantry Division.

"I believe that the good sense and devotion to duty of all officers at Fort Huachuca, both colored and white, will be such that this problem (if it be a problem) will be satisfactorily solved by them, as they are the ones mainly concerned. The friends of these officers on the outside should not become too much disturbed, because, with the other urgent and important problems which have to be solved in these critical times, the problem of separate officer's clubs fades into comparative insignificance.

"The situation is not as rigid as many persons, not acquainted with the conditions at Fort Huachuca, assume it to be. Apparently they think that a colored officer will never put foot inside the white officer's club, and that a white officer will never put his foot inside the colored officer's club. This is far from representing the facts. Approximately every month there will be a general get-together on a Dutch treat basis of all officers of both races, where they will mingle together as officers of the same army, preparing to fight a common enemy. One month these meetings will be held at the colored officer's club and the next month they will be held at the white officer's club. In addition to this, officers of each club are at perfect liberty to invite, whenever they choose officers of the other club as guests.

"At first it seemed apparent that a large number of colored officers interpreted the plan for the two clubs as being a rigid policy of segregation, which was not intended and will not be practiced. Now that the idea has been made clear, many of the officers who previously declined membership in the Mountainview Club (colored) have withdrawn their refusals and are now members.

"After all, we have to learn that when large numbers of men are brought together for the purpose of being trained to fight the enemy, we cannot use such occasions to solve the day problems of an evolutionary nature, which time and developments in our country must be depended upon for fair and broad solutions."

NEW YORK TIMES REPORTER FINDS LITTLE FRICTION BETWEEN WORKERS IN SOUTHERN PLANTS

White Man Finds Himself Saying "Yes, Sir" to a Negro Inquisitor

JUL 11 1942

WHITES FEAR SOCIAL EQUALITY

BIRMINGHAM. — (ANP) — Reporting on recent hearings here of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices, Brooks Atkinson of the New York Times, declared that "nothing of a disturbing nature happened during the hearings and nothing disturbing to local morale has happened since."

Atkinson, who attended the hearings and interviewed both whites and Negroes in connection with them, found that the prospect of a public inquiry into discrimination against Negroes in the war industries was regarded as dangerous by many southerners, but that such liberal papers as the Birmingham News and Age-Herald, the Louisville Courier-Journal, and the Montgomery Advertiser played an active part in directing public opinion during the hearings, and had many supporters among whites.

A white man, in an exciting moment of the hearings, found himself saying, "Yes, sir" to a Negro inquisitor, Atkinson reports. Another, however, remarked that the purpose of the hearings was to see that "little Sambo gets his rights."

The south has no monopoly on discrimination in industry, Atkinson points out, directing attention to hearings in Chicago, Washington, New York, and Los Angeles, where discriminatory practices against the Negro and other minority groups has been so widespread as to hinder war production.

It was declared that in Birmingham most of the CIO unions have had whites and Negroes working together with a minimum of friction for several years. The hearings, however, fired tensions which lay smouldering. Voicing the sentiments of the old south, a political trade journal wrote:

"Whether the creators of the CoFEF committee realize it or not, there exists in this part of the country a resolute committee for the preservation of honorable traditions, and its members are legion."

The same editorial accused "reformers" of trying to turn the south upside down under the cloak of necessity [illegible]ght on [illegible] war emergency.

Whites on every hand express fear of "social equality," which includes anything from inter-marriage to abolishing jim crow laws and customs. Negroes, however, declare they are neither asking for or expecting social equality within the lifetime of any of them now alive, but rather want justice and fair dealing. Immediate needs are for work, food, shelter and civil justice under the constitution.

Many iBrmingham Negroes feel that jim crow regulations have been enforced with more severity than uusual since the war begur especially in the way of availability of training in new industrial skills, Atkinson reports.

A sour note was lent the hearing when Mark F. Ethridge, membe of the CoFEP, prior to their opening, declared:

"There is no power in the worl which could now force the southern white people to the bandonment of the principle of social segregation."

Hearing this, many wavering Negroes began to feel that the government needed their help in wartime, but that they could not expect any permanent improvement in their situation. Negroes having this attitude have no enthusiasm for the aiding in the war effort, Atkinson concludes.

White Navy Men Forbidden From So. Side

As a result of orders issued by Lieutenant Commander Lowe, director of the Navy Radio and Signal Training program at the University of Chicago, the South Side has been declared "forbidden territory" for white sailors.

This was first learned last week when the owners of the DeLisa and Rhumboogie night clubs were given orders not to admit white sailors. The "forbidden territory," said to be a verbal order, comprises the area bounded by 37th and 70th streets, and Cottage Grove avenue and State street. White City, an amusement park which discourages Negro patronage, is the exception to the rule, and they are allowed to go there only by public conveyance.

Commander Lowe was reluctant to discuss the matter but stated that the order was given for the protection of Negro women from being molested by white sailors.

"Ridiculous and Un-American"

Atty. Ulysses S. Keys, a member of the redress staff of the local branch of the N.A.A.C.P., described the order as "ridiculous and un-American," stating that the case presented all the elements of a good test-case and was definitely discrimination, based on race or color. A conference with Commander Lowe is scheduled for later this week.

Racial Discrimination

(Editorial Research Reports)

Recognizing the importance of enlisting the full support of the Negro 10 per cent of the population in the national effort, the federal government for more than a year has been making special efforts to end discriminatory practices that have closed to colored workers many industrial jobs they were fitted to perform or could be trained to perform. Denial of employment opportunities and limitations surrounding service of Negroes in the armed forces, have been responsible for a feeling of apathy among colored persons toward the war. While there has been little concern over Axis propaganda efforts to exploit this feeling, the realization has grown that in a war of democracy against fascism serious attention must be paid to Negro appeals for effective steps to combat the essentially fascist practice of racial discrimination.

To meet demands for labor in the last war, large numbers of Negroes migrated from the South to Northern industrial centers, but they were employed mainly in unskilled jobs. While colored workers retained some foothold in industry after the war, most such gains were wiped out during the depression. Despite evidence to the contrary, Negroes were considered suited only for unskilled labor and were given few chances to train for skilled or semi-skilled work. Opportunities for advancement in industry were denied them as a result of prejudice not only on the part of employers but also on the part of labor unions, particularly the craft unions, a number of which specifically barred membership to colored artisans.

In June, 1941, President Roosevelt issued an executive order requiring inclusion of a non-discrimination clause in all defense contracts and requiring all government agencies concerned with vocational training programs to see to it that such programs were administered without discrimination. The President set up a Committee on Fair Employment Practice to investigate and act upon complaints of discrimination. The committee to date has held hearings in four cities. A number of companies and several unions have been ordered to cease discriminatory practices, and the companies have been ordered to report regularly as to the number of Negroes hired and the number promoted. The Negro Manpower Service for War Manpower Commission also is working to integrate Negroes into the war production program. Tightening labor supply conditions provide a favorable atmosphere for all such efforts.

There have already been significant gains in Negro employment in shipbuilding, ordnance, aircraft, and other war industries. Several of the large shipbuilding concerns have plans for training thousands of Negroes in the shipbuilding crafts, manning certain yards entirely with Negroes. The aircraft companies, which recently began to take on Negroes as production workers, are doing so in numerous cases without adopting a policy of segregation. And in some instances they have added colored persons to their office staffs. In federal government departments in recent months, there has been a marked increase in the number of Negro white-collar workers.

In the last war more than three-fourths of the 200,000 Negro troops who went to France never saw action at the front, being used behind the lines in the services of supply. Negro soldiers now are being trained for all types of combatant service. Last summer a special school for training colored combat pilots was set up at Tuskegee. Elsewhere in the army, Negro officer candidates are being trained in the same schools with whites. The private soldiers, on the other hand, are organized in separate Negro units. The Navy, which since 1922 had accepted Negroes for enlistment only as mess attendants, finally began a month ago to recruit colored men for combatant service. In the Navy, unlike the Army, there are no plans to commission Negroes as officers.

"Complete Equality Rests With The Gods," Says White Reader

Dear Editor: A drawing by Holloway in your edition of Saturday, July 11, 1942, is impressive.

I believe that he did not fully illustrate what hazards confront your ship of "Destiny."

The land fortifications are political and personal Gibraltars that I do not believe can be demolished.

Many millions will never tolerate the mixing of races either in social or in the field of labor as a permanent policy, call it discrimination, if you will, but there are definite reasons for this well known to your race.

PLAYED FOR A SUCKER

Other millions will now and always refuse to work with you, but not denying you the right to work in your own locale.

The first fired last hired policy will still be in effect after the war has ceased. The "Sops" tossed your race now are only temporary, just to keep the ball rolling.

The politicians have always played you for a sucker, and you have been and still are. Mr. Willkie, what did he do for your race while president of the Commonwealth and Southern? Mr. Roosevelt never had any time for you when he was Assistant Secretary of the Navy, 1917-18, or as Governor of the state of New York—most naturally your votes count the same as the "white" and certainly more easily controlled.

Your race is notorious for its unreliability, most of the race seem to think that the employer should consider it a privilege to employ the colored man, rather than that he should strive to make a name for his race by strict attention to his work and habits.

Certainly there are some outstanding colored men and women in all fields of endeavor, but the ratio is somewhat on the order of 15,000 to one.

Personally, I am of the opinion that the colored race has faired fairly well, as to complete Equality—that is in the lap of the gods. Your race is not the "Savior" of the white world and don't try to kid yourself that you are.

Negro Ship Captain Gets Job Runaround

Jacob Baker, head of the Recruiting and Manning Division, U. S. Maritime Commission, yesterday told a delegation which demanded that Hugh Mulzac, Negro sea captain, be "used immediately as a ranking officer" in the interest of beating the Axis, that he would appraise Admiral Emory B. Land, War Shipping Administrator, of the visit but that his department could do nothing.

The Negro Labor Victory Committee, which led yesterday's delegation, had already written to Admiral Land about Captain Mulzac. That letter, signed by Ewart Guinier, executive secretary of the Committee, had pointed out to Admiral Land that Captain Mulzac "holds the highest officer's license that our government issues, an unlimited license for ocean - going steamers of any tonnage," and that his experiences ought to be used now, in view of an admitted shortage of qualified officers.

Mrs. Dorothy Kelso Funn, representing the Negro Labor Victory Committee, told Mr. Baker in his office at 45 Broadway yesterday, that the delegation had called on him "at the suggestion of" Admiral Land in answer to Mr. Guinier's letter. Mr. Baker, seemingly surprised, proceeded to explain why his department had "nothing to do with" Captain Mulzac's case and that "under no circumstances" would the Recruiting and Manning Division take steps "without certification of Admiral Land."

Mr. Baker pointed out that his department "seldom" receives calls for officers of Captain Mulzac's grade, owing to the fact that ship owners "have their own crews." If operators, he said needed a captain or a mate, they applied to the Master, Mates and Pilots Association. The Recruiting and Manning office, he declared, would be the "last place" to which they would call.

Baker reminded the delegation of "the age-old policy" of ship operators of discriminating against Negro officers because of the theory that "white seamen won't work under a Negro." Members of the delegation reminded him, however, that the National Maritime Union had disproved that theory wherever white members of crews had been asked to vote whether or not they would work with under Negroes.

Mr. Baker promised to "correspond" with Admiral Land on the conference with the delegation.

Jim Crow Greets Sailor at Baltimore Railroad Station

BALTIMORE.—Despite the fact that he is a member of Uncle Sam's armed forces and was en route to his home in New Orleans for what may be his last visit, Nolan Biages, a mess attendant in the U.S. Navy, was jim-crowed in the restaurant at Camden Station Friday.

Nolan, who was weary after a three-day train ride, went in the restaurant operated by the Union News Company to eat. He sat down at the nearest table. A white waitress, showing no deference to his uniform, told him that she had a better place for him and directed him to a table near the kitchen where colored persons are generally served.

Moved Near Kitchen

The waitress refused to serve him at the first location, so Biages went to the stuffy section near the kitchen door to have a sandwich and a cup of coffee.

Biages said that he has a brother in the navy, who is probably at sea, since he hasn't heard from him in about three months. His brother's station is somewhere in New York.

Two of his cousins, Sam Biages and Joe Fisher, signed up for the navy a year ago and are in active service. His father operates a fleet of trucks in New Orleans.

Proper Leadership

C. C. SPAULDING is one of our outstanding men in the world of insurance, banking and civic leadership. His recent election to membership on the powerful Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York is one of several national honors which have come to him in a long and constructive career.

When Mr. Spaulding speaks on any question, the nation listens; and his talk on the subject of proper leadership to the Negroes in North Carolina recently is worthy of study beyond the borders of his native State.

Mr. Spaulding said among other things:

"The American Negro has before him the greatest opportunity in all his history. I am wondering how wisely he will use it. Have we the leadership, the calm, good judgment, to press our claims for justice, to seek every possible opening industrially, civically, yes, but at the same time not to be stampeded into false hopes or present unattainable aims? Many gains can be made now. Others can be lost or greatly delayed if the wrong technique is used. Many advantages will never reach us until we really prepare for them, sacrifice and measure up to their responsibilities.

"I want the same things the radicals want," the white-haired, elderly statesman of the Negro continued. "I want them the same way they want them, but I know from long and wide experience that reason, good judgment and cooperation are far more swift and effective methods than the types of ill-considered pressures which create enmity and stifle cooperation."

There is a need for the calm, good judgment of which Mr. Spaulding speaks and it is all the more pressing because of the growing response of the Negro to radical leadership that would tear down overnight that which has taken years to build. One branch of Negro leadership would condemn opportunity for employment if it is segrated. Another branch would accept jobs for the people under such conditions. One branch of Negro leadership supports the swing of the masses toward racial nationalism; another branch asserts that integration of the Negro into the American system is the only solution. The radical elements in all camps are clamoring to be heard. They are cropping up on all sides with ill-planned, ill-conceived and dangerous proposals which range all the way from national race riots to civil disobedience campaigns throughout the nation.

It is wrong to seize upon situations born in this emergency, and upon acts and words by those in power and to twist these to fit selfish, starry-eyed ambitions and purposes. The misconception of President Roosevelt's Executive Order 8802 is one of which we speak. As we pointed out recently in these columns, President Roosevelt's Executive Order is no social document. It does not open an avenue whereby existing social injustices may be rectified. It is worded carefully, concisely to fit only the purpose for which it was issued: that of getting this country's war industries off the assembly lines and out of the factories as quickly as possible. Read it again:

"I do hereby reaffirm the policy of the United States that there shall be no discrimination in the employment of workers in defense industries or Government because of race, creed, color or national origin. It is the duty of employers and labor organizations in furtherance of said policy and this order to provide for full and equitable participation of all workers in defense industries without regard to race, creed, color or national origin."

It is indeed strange that our leaders did not at once see that the order issued by the President is not the solution of our wider problem for full integration as Americans, socially, economically and politically. Calm, good judgment as advocated by Mr. Spaulding would make it plain that advice from the White House to White America is needed to help us acquire our other objectivs. He could not order such changes in attitudes, because there would be few ears—white, of course—which would listen, let alone obey. Our claims for justice must be made through sacrifice, more sacrifice, and a conscientious measuring up to their responsibilities.

THE COMMON MAN AND WOMAN

It looks as though the common man and woman of Houston are the "forgotten man" of our town. Almost three years ago the Government appropriated funds for training courses for people who would be trained to take jobs in defense industries. Courses were immediately set up in Houston for whites, and we understand that there are fifty-one such courses in Houston for whites and only one for Negroes, with a possible additional one added in the same building last week.

Over a year ago the President issued his Executive Order against discrimination in employment of men and women in war industries because of race, creed or color. Various committees have been set up to work on the problem and other institutions, such as the Catholic manufacturers, the Federated Churches and many others, to see to it that the order was put into effect. In addition there has been the Fair Employment Practice Committee, with the specific task of seeing to it that the order and the principle under the order were enforced.

In Dallas Negroes have taken advantage of the new impetus toward democracy to procure a Negro Executive with a paid secretary and office to work in Civilian Defense. They have also procured the appointment of a specialist, the consumers' organizations, have fought through to where they are about to get a school established for training of Negro men and women, and have gotten Negro men and women into various industries in their area. But here in Houston the leadership seems asleep or to have missed the boat.

Again Houston suffers from the inordinate ambition of the various leaders, scrambling for their own personal aggrandizement and forgetting the real function and obligation of leadership. A small clique have been busy in the last year, ingratiating themselves in the good graces of the whites who control the city, and scheming to get a monopoly on contacts with the whites. To a great extent they have succeeded in monopolizing the contacts. But like most little men, when they got in the positions they could not use them, and as a result the opportunity to push more work, more training, more advancement for Negroes in Houston has gone aglimmering for lack of vision and courage on the part of the clique that has the contact.

The day of reckoning is at hand, when these leaders who have the contact must stand forth and show what they have done to justify their position. Daily the resentment and bitterness of disappointed Negroes, turned back from training courses and from war industry jobs, are mounting. "The forgotten man" is about ready to make the presence of himself and his companion known in ways that may embarrass "the leaders."

KEEP NEGRO SOLDIERS IN NORTH, ARMY URGED

Bankhead Asks Marshall To Revise Assignments

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Aug. 2.—(AP)—Senator Bankhead (D., Ala.) has suggested to General Marshall, Army Chief of Staff, that Northern negro soldiers be quartered in Northern states only, the Senator revealed Sunday in a letter to John Temple Graves II, columnist for the Birmingham Age-Herald.

The letter, quoted in Graves' column, says: "Our people feel that the Government is doing a disservice to the war effort by locating negro troops in the South in immediate contact with white troops at a time when race feeling among the negroes has been aroused and when all the energies of both the whites and the blacks should be devoted to the war effort," the senator's letter to Marshall said.

Bankhead then suggested that if negro soldiers must be trained in the South "as a result of social or political pressure, can't you place Southern negro soldiers there and place Northern negro soldiers in the North where their presence is not likely to lead to race wars."

The question of racial relations has been in the news in Alabama for several weeks.

Governor Frank M. Dixon of Alabama refused to sign a Federal contract for the consumer-operated textile mill because he objected to the fair labor practice clause, which binds the contractor not to discriminate against any person because of race, color, creed or national origin.

'Damn Uniform,' Dixie R. R. Conductor Tells Soldiers

By ELLEN TARRY

"I don't give a damn about that little yellow uniform you've got on. It don't mean a thing to me. You either pay your fare or get thrown off this train. And if you don't get off, I'll blow your brains out."

According to William Jenkins, 100 West 117th St., and Edward Johnson, 486 St. Nicholas Ave., seamen stationed at New Orleans for the duration, the above statement was made by an inspector on a Southern railroad train between Atlanta and Washington, July 22, when a conductor misplaced a soldier's ticket and demanded that the service man pay his fare.

Jenkins and Johnson, who were en route to New York for a visit, left New Orleans on the Southerner, the morning of July 22. They could not get a seat on the Southerner all the way to Washington and had to change at Atlanta, where they boarded the Jim-Crow coach of No. 30, which leaves Atlanta five minutes behind the Southerner.

As the train pulled out of Atlanta the conductor collected tickets from the passangers, among whom were two soldiers en route to their posts in New York via Washington. One of the soldiers appeared fatigued and dozed off after handing his ticket to the conductor. A few minutes later the conductor came around again, aroused the soldier and insisted that he hadn't given him a ticket.

The soldier continued to tell him that he had and an argument ensued. By the time the train reached Charlotte, N. C., the conductor told the soldier that he'd have to produce a ticket or pay his fare from Atlanta to Washington. The soldier refused to pay and was told he would be put off if he didn't.

At Salisbury the conductor left the train, but instructed the new conductor to get a ticket from the soldier. An inspector came in the coach and stood by as the conductor who came aboard at Salisbury demanded a ticket or fare from the soldier. He explained that he had given his ticket to the other conductor, but was told that the only thing the present conductor was interested in was a ticket or fare. The soldier insisted that he would not pay a fare as he had already turned his ticket in.

Uniform Didn't Mean Anything

At that point the inspector drew a pistol and told the soldier that his uniform didn't mean a thing and he would blow his brains out if he didn't produce a ticket or fare.

The coach was crowded with women and children who became hysterical when they saw the white man's pistol and the seamen advised the soldier to pay his fare and report the incident when he arrived in Washington.

The service man followed the advice of Jenkins and Johnson and handed the conductor a $10 bill out of which one fare from Atlanta to Washington was taken.

The passengers became quiet and the conductor and inspector left the Jim-Crow coach. About 20 minutes later, when the train was between Salisbury and Greensboro, the conductor returned and asked the soldier to give him back the change he had given him from the $10 bill. The soldier asked why and was told that they had received a telegram saying his ticket had been found.

Told to Report Incident

As the train was running full speed, the colored passengers considered this a stall and Jenkins and Johnson told the soldier that he should report the incident to the passenger department as soon as he reached Washington.

The conductor yelled at the seamen and told them to "Turn around in your seats and mind your own business. You niggers are too damn smart!"

The seamen reminded the railroad employe that they were citizens and entitled to free speech. They also told him that any time a man threatened to blow a man's brains out in a crowded car where they were, their lives were in danger and they had a right to speak.

Both Mr. Jenkins and Mr. Johnson said that the attitude of the man changed as soon as he learned they lived in New York. He decided the coach was too crowded and added another coach. Then when a colored woman prepared to leave the train he assisted her with baggage. They considered his hastily assumed attitude as an attempt to influence them against reporting the incident.

This is but one of the many indignities suffered by soldiers and defense workers traveling from the South to their homes or posts in the North. Around 100 or more Negro seamen come up from New Orleans every week and they claim conditions on these Jim-Crow coaches are almost unbearable.

Term Racial Bias Biggest Problem

CHICAGO—(ANP)—Racial discrimination is "our most important national problem," said Prof. John I. Yellott, white, director of the Illinois Institute of Technology war training program, at a Chicago Urban league luncheon held Wednesday.

Discrimination does not occur at the institute, where both white and colored are trained, he declared, adding:

"But when the trainees have finished their courses, the problem of discrimination has arisen repeatedly. We have ten weapons with which to win acceptable positions for these Negro trainees who complete their training courses satisfactorily.

"The most important on the list is the President's executive order, No. 8802."

The other nine, he said, are a state law implicit in every contract signed since No. 8802; Sumner Wells' statement of war purposes that "discrimination between people because of their race, creed or color must be abolished"; the power of the press; the fairness of the American people; the fact that Negro soldiers are as well paid as whites of similar grades; the vast increase in industrial output; new training techniques; cooperation of labor unions and the selective service inventory of skills.

Jimmy Davis To Enter Army

Jimmy Davis, the 2[illegible]-year-old Negro composer who for many months refused to be inducted as a protest against Jim Crowism in the Army, has finally changed his mind. Yesterday, after spending 13 days in the Federal House of Detention as a conscientious objector, Jimmy declared his readiness to join up. "P M Daily"

"Having stated my protest in all the forms available to me," he said, "I now feel that no further usefulness could be served by my continued refusal to go into the armed forces, segregated even as they are into white and Negro units."

Jimmy Davis

Davis's case attracted wide attention after he informed his draft board, which classified him as 1-A, that he would serve only in an Army free from segregation. His appeal for permission to cross the border to join the Jim-Crow-free Canadian forces was turned down.

"I want to fight Hitlerism and its racial superiority myth," he said at the time, "but I can't see how I can fight it in an Army that itself practices racial discrimination."

Selective Service officials handled Davis's appeal with much tact, respecting the young man's sincerity. He was finally called to duty July 3, and was jailed.

New York, N.Y.

"I shall now report for induction into the armed forces," Davis said yesterday, "offering all that I have to the service of my country during this hour of peril in our common fight against the Fascist threat. It is my fervent hope that from this conflict will emerge an America in which no race or people are denied any of the democratic rights embodied in our national ideals, our Constitution, and in the recent speeches of our President and Vice President, whose words hold out hope for the poor and oppressed of all the world."

Discrimination Decreasing In War Industries, Says Report

While Negroes comprise only 1.2 per cent of the 180,000 employes in 120 state war industries recently investigated by the Committee on Discrimination in Employment of the State War Council, a report issued by its chairman Sunday declared that Negro employment is increasing steadily and predicts that "thousands more will move into armament production before the end of the year."

Industrial Commissioner Frieda S. Miller, chairman of the committee, stressed the fact that the proportion of Negroes in these plants a year ago was considerably less than at the time of these visits and that rechecks during the past few weeks indicate that the majority of the companies are now actively seeking Negro workers.

"For example," she declared, "one plant which employed 60 Negroes in March added 29 in May, another increased its Negro staff from 30 to 105, and still another which never used a colored person on production in the past, has accepted a sizeable group for its training school. As the result of pressure by our committee and other groups, one NY firm, which previously excluded them, now is hiring eight Negroes to every white person and will continue to do so until a fair proportion is reached. Many plans have upgraded Negroes to supervisory jobs and others have taken on Negro technicians."

Specific examples of improvements in hiring practices noted in the report, included the following:

● In March, no Negroes were employed in the Western Electric Company's tube plant in NYC. When re-visited July 13 to learn what employment, if any, had followed the committee's appeal, the company was found to be employing 20 Negroes. The personnel manager had just placed a Negro girl, Virginia U. graduate in his office as a receptionist to assist him in interviewing applicants. The company is considering plans for inducting more Negroes and reports considerable success in their use at the Kearney, NJ plant.

● When first visited by a Committee field representative, Brooklyn Aircraft employed nine Negroes out of a total personnel of 900. Today, as a result of the committee's efforts, 80 Negroes are employed.

● Following representations by the committee, Pepsi Cola company has upgraded six Negroes from porter jobs and has just taken on a salesman of that race at a good salary.

● Late in March, a committee investigator found 75 Negroes employed by the Ford Instrument company out of a total of 5,000 workers. Following the committee's appeal, the company liberalized its practices and on June 8 employed 125 Negroes on production work. Some of this group were being trained as expert mechanics.

Examples of results obtained through threats of legal action included the following:

● A paint concern discharged a Negro, the only one in its employ and a complaint received by the committee indicated that it was because of color. An investigation substantiated this charge and the firm was given 48 hours to reinstate the employee or face a subpoena. The company complied.

● A precision instrument concern, previous to the passage of the Mahoney Anti-Discrimination Act, stipulated "white Christians" on their job orders. When visited April 22, the company had reluctantly hired three Negroes. When visited July 8, they had taken on two more but had eliminated a very large number of Negro applicants through the use of questionable examinations. On their job application forms the discriminatory items "Protestant," "Catholic," "Hebrew" appeared. After first refusing to eliminate these items and to comply with the law, the company agreed on July 16 to follow the committee's order.

● One of the largest war production plants in NYC refused repeatedly to remove discriminatory specifications such as race and religion from its application blanks. An investigation indicated that its employment practices were greatly influenced by these questions.

Minnesota Accepts Alien In State Guard

SEP 12 1942

Race Applicants Barred; Suit Still Pending

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn.—(ANP)—An alien may become a member of the Minnesota Defense force while a Negro is barred, it was decided here last week when Atty. Gen. A. A. Burnquist handed down an opinion declaring that a Filipino, not a native American, may become an enlisted man in the state guard if he has declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States.

This ruling came after a request by Col. F. G. Stutz, adjutant general of the M. D. F.

A fight to break down the lily-white stand on the part of the state guard began in 1940 when the St. Paul branch of the NAACP wrote Col. Stutz regarding enlistment of Negroes in the home defense force. Col. Stutz replied at that time "there is no provision for Negroes in the Minnesota Defense force." This statement came after two St. Paul Negroes, Ernest Potts and Victor Galloway, attempted to enlist.

A request from Samuel Reed, president of the St. Paul branch NAACP, for a conference with Gov. Harold E. Stassen, was ignored, until the Minnesota Negro Defense committee threatened to march on the state capitol, Reed reports.

COMMITTEE APPOINTED

Instead of granting a conference, the governor appointed Raymond Cannon, attorney and Leslie Tarver, adjutant of the Leslie Lawrence post, American legion, as a special committee to study the situation. Twin-City Negroes denounced this move and in March, 1941, the Minnesota Negro Defense committee was authorized to bring suit against Gov. Stassen and Col. Stutz for their refusal to accept Negroes in the Defense force.

On June 7, 1941, Gov. Stassen held a conference with six members of the M. N. D. committee and 10 other Twin City Negroes at the state capital, and shifted blame for discrimination in the M. D. F. to army officers heading the organization.

Subsequently an injunction suit was filed in federal district court to restrain Gov. Stassen and high state militia officers from discriminating against Negroes. The suit is still pending and the governor's answer has been to issue an order for the establishment of two new all-colored companies in the "Minnesota Negro Defense force."

White Woman Refuses Man Shelter During Test Raid

The Washington Tribune learned this week that there are still some housewives who had rather let the enemy come into Washington than to permit Negroes to enter their homes during test raids.

James A. Purvis, 60, I Street, Northeast, was caught in the 100 block of Michigan Avenue, Northwest, during the raid Tuesday morning and was told by the air raid warden to go inside a house. He walked into the vestibule of a house and was told upon entering, by a white woman, "Get out. I do not allow N——s in my house." It was not until a policeman and warden, both white, told the woman that the man would have to be permitted to stay and that she had better not turn anyone away during an air raid, was Purvis allowed to remain.

Contends Navy Yard Reeks With Prejudice

SEP 11 1942

CHICAGO—(ANP)— Speaking before the Society for Social Research in convention here recently Dr. Charles S. Johnson, noted socioligist of Fisk university, gave a nmber of examples to illustrate his theme on the "Impact of the War Upon Negro-White Relations." Among them was one which gave a picture of the Norfolk Navy yard from the inside and from the viewpoint of a competent and intelligent worker.

SEP 1942

Dr. Johnson said "The areas of resistance to the Negro worker which, in the present crisis, continue to be maintained are those involving racial segregation of the workers, the appointment of Negroes to supervisory positions over whites and even over other Negro workers, and the use of recreational facilities.

MOST ARE LABORERS

SEP 11 1942

"The Norfolk Navy yard, to use just one example, which has received Negro workers, has been represented in the Readers Digest the Saturday Evening Post, and Life as an example of an establishment in which democracy and equal rights for Negroes are becoming a reality. Over a fourth of the employees are Negroes and several of the men are engaged in trades for which they qualified through civil srvice. But 90 per cent of the Negroes are laborers One worker there, a college graduate, and a skilled lathe operator said:

SEP 11 1942

"A factor that adds to the feeling of frustration on the part of the Negro workers is the fact that the yard is filled with brilliantly painted signs telling the workers of the horrors of Hitler, the Japs, and the hell that war is and urging each worker to perform his duty by being patriotic to his country; but there are larger signs with bolder lettering stating that "this is for white" and that for colored.

WHITES MOVING NORTH

"Then there is by far greater reason for this feeling of a certain hopelessness among the Negro workers—which lies in the fact that although they have increased by 25 per cent in the yard — poor whites from the North Carolina hills and backward sections of Virginia, Alabama and Georgia, have probably increased 100 per cent, bringing with them, their hates, their fears and their prejudices and their feeling of superiority; and they create a situation where one either has to be strong in heart or die of frustration.

"However here, as elsewhere, the Negro worker still has implicit faith in his country. And in this fighting for freedom— as the battleship sets out to sea to do its duty—he too is wishing it bon voyage, because he knows that his work, his toil, his sweat, his brain have helped it like he has served his country—to be what it is and he wants to see the ship coming back to port, victorious and his country to live on and on."

NEGROES BARRED, BUT FILIPINOS MAY JOIN STATE GUARD IN MINN.

SEP 12 1942

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Sept. 10.—A Negro is barred from service in the Minnesota defense force but an alien is acceptable, it was decided here last week when Atty.-Gen. A. A. Burnquist handed down an opinion declaring that a Filipino, not a native American, may enlist in the state guard, if he has declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States.

This ruling, coming after a request from Col. F. G. Stutz, adjutant general of the MDF, marks the climax in a NAACP fight for the integration of Negroes into the defense force.

Sometime ago two St. Paul Negroes, Ernest Potts and Victor Galloway, attempted to enlist. Col. Stutz informed them "there was no provision for Negroes in the Minnesota Defense force."

A NAACP request for a conference with Gov. Harold E. Stassen followed.

SEP 12 1942

This was ignored, however, until the Minnesota Negro Defense committee threatened to march on the state capitol. Then the governor appointed a special committee to study the situation. Minnesota Negroes denounced this move and the Defense group brought suit against Gov. Stassen and Col. Stutz for their refusal to accept Negroes in the Defense force.

Last year the governor shifted responsibility for discrimination in the MDF to army officers heading the organization. He said he could do nothing about the situation even though he is commander-in-chief of the state militia.

An injunction suit is still pending in a Federal district court to restrain the governor from discriminating against Negroes. As a compromise, he has issued an order for the establishment of two new companies, all colored, in the "Minnesota Negro Defense Force."

HAMPTON, Va. (By phone to PV).—Negro trainees assigned to study here forsook classrooms Tuesday morning, lining up in drill formation before one of the campus buildings, in mass protest against what they describe as the determination of Captain Charles R. Fenelon, white, to replace Negro noncoms with white men. In the protesting group were 180 Negroes comprising the Enlisted Detachment Motor Transport Maintenance Corps.

Their Negro sergeant, Edward J. Hayes, was transferred Monday to a labor battalion in Virginia, while two white noncoms were assigned to the camp the same day, in charge of a new detachment of trainees for the group. It was this combined action of Monday which prompted the mass protest of the 180 men.

The group has a Negro lieutenant, James Gibbs, who has received the friendly cooperation of the men in training. Several office employes are Negro, as well, and the men fear that they too will be displaced by whites.

Reason given for the transfer from Negro to white noncoms is that a new, white naval group of trainees is expected at the school September and complications have already been raised against the Negro outfit. One point of objection is that the Negroes are not properly dressed and do not present a neat appearance. Spokesmen for the group insist that their training work is necessarily dirty and greasy, that it is impossible for them to present a neat and well-groomed appearance while in working togs.

The 180 men, following Tuesday's mass formation, planned a march to nearby Fort Monroe, Va., to present their protests in a body before the commanding colonel of that fort, but were unable to do so because of a lack of army passes.

The one-day protest ended Tuesday evening with the men agreeing to return to classes Wednesday morning, pending future developments in the case.

Worker Barred from Federal Dormitory

NEW LONDON, Conn.—Public-spirited citizens of all races and creeds are calling for an investigation here of the discriminatory practices of the local Federal Housing Authorities.

Central figure in the case is a mechanic, William E. Taylor, 37, of Middletown, Conn. Taylor was hired last week by the Electric Boat Company, of Suburban Groton, only private ship yard building submarines in this country. Upon coming to Groton, Taylor was unable to find a room in this bustling defense area.

Southerners' "Wouldn't Like It"

Upon learning that the Federal Government maintained dormitories for housing bachelor workers, Taylor applied at the dormitory for a room. He was refused quarters by dormitory manager Keith Warner who told him "our Southern white boys wouldn't like it if I gave you a room. You had better find some other place."

When Taylor explained that he couldn't find other quarters, Warner said there was nothing he could do for him. "This is for white people only, even though it's a Federal project."

Investigation Promised

Taylor appealed to Congressman William J. Fitzgerald of New London who promised an investigation into the boat company on the housing project.

Also taking up the cudgels for Taylor is Milton D. Dreyfus, attorney for the New London Defense Housing Area, and the Rev. A. A. Garvin, pastor of Shiloh Baptist Church, who has obtained temporary headquarters for Taylor, while Mr. Dreyfus is investigating the possibility of getting him into the project.

The Rev. Mr. Garvin, in a letter published in the local newspaper, said: "What is happening to Taylor is nothing but material for the propaganda machines of Hitler and Hirohito."

DIXON'S CHARGE GETS COMMENT

Stand On Segregation Is Provocative Of Many Wires, Messages

MONTGOMERY, Ala., July 27—(AP)—Comments on Gov. Dixon's charge that a non-discrimination clause in a federal war industry contract attempted to break down the racial segregation in the South were heaped on his desk Monday.

Among letters and telegrams commending his stand were messages from Gov. Paul B. Johnson, of Mississippi; Gov. R. M. Jefferies, of South Carolina, and Representative Starnes (D., Ala.).

Representative Carter Manasco (D., Ala.) asked permission in a telegram to have it inserted in The Congressional Record and his request was granted by the governor.

Several letters disapproving his stand also were received. A telegram of disapproval came from the Brooklyn branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Clippings of editorials criticizing his charge from The Philadelphia Inquirer and PM, a New York newspaper were also sent in.

Dixon charged Thursday that the non-discrimination clause in a contract offered Alabama by the War Production Board for manufacture of osnaburg cloth with the Department of Corrections and Institutions facilities tended to break down segregation.

The governor refused to sign the contract for the state since, he said, the non-discrimination clause would force Negroes and whites to work together in "positions of responsibility" and in some cases might cause whites to work under Negroes.

RACE SEGREGATION

A large number of negro soldiers are stationed at Dothan and many of them come from northern states. They are naturally young negroes and most of them have not visited the South and are unfamiliar with its policies and customs. The Dothan Eagle, an admirably edited paper, takes occasion to give the trainees a column of good sound advice on the matter of behavior in their hours of recreation.

The most harassing problem in this section of the country is not the relationships of the race but the proneness of those from other sections to resent the segregation plan that has been in effect since time was not and will be until time is not or Hitler rules the world, which would be worse. There is soundness and saneness in it and it is the only manner in which the two races can get along as well as they do in this section of the country.

In camps the soldiers are entitled to certain recreational facilities. It can well be imagined what the confusion would be if it was not properly handled or the trainees went amuck as a result of their distate of the segregation ideas that are involved in the woof and warp of our customs and habits. Most of them are well-behaved but it is always a reactionary or recalcitrant one or few that can stir up something horrible, when the vast majority resent the thought of any such action and would do much to prevent it, even if afterward they are drawn into it unwittingly if not in the heat of passion.

Uncle Sam is using discretion of handling the troops assignments in his army. He has taken cognizance of the fact that the white is the predominant race and that the yellow, the red and the black must take a second place in our social affairs, in some places our politics. This is merely a means to an end, a plan to prevent the horror of racial conflict. In Germany the Jew is the hated personage and has been abused more unmercifully than any other white racial group. The effort to spread that campaign to other sections will meet in rare quarters with some support, but in the main in America it falls on very deaf ears. The negro is an American citizen but there is more to race than country, in one sense and while we are both American we are not of the same race and no mingling of the races in any form of equality will not bring out disaffections partisanship and rebellion. It is for this yet fear for our safety and theirs that the South persists in its policy of segregation.

Protest Sent McNutt In Atlanta Job Case

A strong protest to Paul V. McNutt, Federal Security Administrator, was lodged this week by the Atlanta Urban League which alledge discrimination practiced against a Negro junior chemist when he was recently certified by Civil Service for the position of Junior Chemist, but refused the job by Atlanta and New Orleans officials of the Food and Drug Administration.

The protest was made in connection with the effort of Andrew S. Johnson, of Athens, Georgia to get work as a Junior Seafood Inspector with the Seafood Inspection Service of the Food and Drug Administration.

S. C. GRADUATE

A graduate of South Carolina State College, with a B. S. Degree in Science and Chemistry major, Johnson took a Civil Service examination for the position of Junior Chemist on April 3. On May [illegible], he received a wire from L. W. Strasburger, acting chief, New Orleans Station, telling him that he had been certified by the Civil Service Commission for the position of Junior Seafood Inspector and asking whether he would accept the appointment. Johnson immediately wired, saying that he would take the job.

On May 6, he received another letter from Mr. Strasburger asking him to take a physical examination and to state when he would be able to report for duty. Johnso nfilled out all forms and told Mr. Strasburger that he could report for duty at once.

TOLD WORK HARD

Receiving a call from J. J. McManus, chief of the Atlanta Station of the Food and Drug Administration, Johnson came to Atlanta and on May 16 was interviewed by Mr. McManus' office. The office assistant told Johnson that the work was very hard and was very bad on the worker's health.

He said that he, himself, had contacted pleurisy from the same type of work. Before Johnson left, the assistant asked him questions about his graduation, references, present work, major subject in college and the subject he was then teaching.

That afternoon Johnson returned with McManus. McManus also told him that the work was difficult, seasonal and didnt' depend upon his college work as a chemist. He asked if Johnson had applied for other branches of Civil Service work and advised him to take other Civil Service examinations. He then told Johnson that any one of three men might be selected for the job.

DENIED POSITION

Hearing nothing for the next ten days, Johnson wrote Strasburger about his chances for the job. Strasburger replied that they had written his references and had taken full consideration of his scholastic training and Civil Service rating. "After giving full consideration to all the factors concerned," he wrote, "We felt it best not to recommend your appointment."

Further efforts of Johnson to find out why he was disqualified for the job resulted only in a letter from Strasburger telling that he was one of a number of eligibles certified for the job and that another eligible had been selected who appeared to be better qualified than he.

In approaching the Atlanta Urban League for help, Johnson stated that he firmly believed that he is the victim of discrimniation because of color. "While it is true that neither Mr. McManus nor Mr. Strasburger ever told me that I would get the job because of my color" says Johnson, the fact that Mr. Jacobs spent so much time telling me how difficult the job was, means to me that he was trying to discourage me from securing it. Also the fact that Mr. McManus was so concerned that I find out about other Civil Service jobs means that he had accepted it as a foregone conclusion that I would not get this particular job.

CITES QUALIFICATIONS

Johnson says he does not believe he would have received the wire asking him to take the job if the examination officials had not already decided that his qualifications were good. He also does not think they would have asked him to take a physical examination if they had not been pretty certain about the job. He believes that a personal interview was asked for [illegible] because they decided his qualifications were good.

In bringing the case to the attention of Mr. McNutt, William Y. Bell, Jr., executive secretary of the Atlanta Urban League, stated his hope that Mr. McNutt would use every resource to see that the officials responsible for this discrimination should learn that is is inconsistent with the aims of tne life and struggle in which the country is now engaged.

"You will fully understand the severe damage to Negro morale by the ontinued repetition of Nazi like discrimintory treatment of American Negro qualified applicants for work," he wrote.

COMPLAINT TO FEPC

Bell pointed out that as an isolated incident, the run around given Johnson was probably unimportant, but that as a symbol of the attitude of federal officials it assumed large proportions. He asked that the Federal Security Agency affirm its position against discrimination based on race.

"America must take firm steps to rid itself of the cancer of discrimination, especially in the Federal Government," Bell said, "if we are to mobilize all resources for the effective prosecution of this war."

It was also understood that a formal complaint has been made to the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice.

CLAIM ALL-NEGRO SHIPYARD RUSE OF WHITE INDUSTRY

NEW YORK CITY—The jim-crow, all-Negro shipyard of the Sun Shipbuilding Company is a war-time application of "keeping the Negro in his place," the NAACP told the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice last week, in answer to a request from the FEPC to outline the ways in which the segregated plan hurt t he best interests of Negroes.

The Sun Company, located at Chester, Pa., is hiring a large crew of Negro workers in a shipyard which will be separate from the rest of the Sun enterprises.

The NAACP maintained that the project is a violation of the letter and spirit of the President's Executive Order, 8802, declaring that it sets up trade barriers beyond which the Negro worker cannot go.

The NAACP also made the point that Joseph Pew, president of the Sun Company, in putting Negroes into separate unit, divides the war into parts, and implies that the Negro is unable to work harmoniously with other people.

It was again stressed that wheen time comes for reduction in personnel, the jim crow unit could very easily be the first to go.

Finally, the NAACP stated, "the Sun Company, by its acts, is delineating a pattern which is dangerous to the American way of life."

Churchill Asked to Intervene Against Discrimination by Yanks

By WILLIAM J. HUMPHREYS

PM Exclusive

LONDON, Sept. 30.—Brig. Gen. Benjamin O. Davis, the only Negro General in the U. S. Army, has reported for duty in the British Isles, where thousands of American soldiers of his race already are stationed.

The communique announcing the General's arrival said that he had already left on an inspection tour, during which he will give special attention to Negro troops. In this connection the veteran Washington, D. C., officer is expected to give advice on how to make Negro troops feel at home in a land where there are few opportunities of meeting people of their own race.

Gen. Davis

The communique noted that at the conclusion of his tour Gen Davis will report to Lt. Gen. Dwight D Eisenhower, commanding general in the European Theater, and Maj. Gen. John C. H Lee, chief of the Service of Supply in this theater.

Labor Battalions

Most of the Negroes in the British Isles are engaged in the unspectacular but all-important work of the labor batttalions. They handle the masses of Army supplies pouring into this theater and are under Gen. Lee's command.

The work of settling the battalions where most of the natives never have seen Negroes has given the American and British commands some concern. Staff officers on both sides are known to feel that American Negroes after long hours of stevedoring, for example, are fully deserving of every normal facility for leisure and social recreation.

It is realized, however, that fundamentally the problem is an American one, with complications. In almost totally white Britain, there are almost no color bars. But for American officers with thousands of white men from the Southern states under their command, there are color bars. The policy of the British services, therefore, has been to follow the Americans' lead.

This attitude has led to some criticism in the press, and a few liberal and labor members of the Commons have commented privately upon it. In their conversations they have pointed out that the only reason they have not raised the question in the House has been to avoid a possible misunderstanding with the American people. Some feel they have as much right to comment on the treatment of American Negroes, however, as Americans have to comment on the India problem.

Yesterday, the United Press reported Thomas Driberg, Independent, asserted in the House of Commons yesterday that American Forces in Britain are discriminating against their own Negro members.

He asked Prime Minister Churchill to "make friendly representations to American military authorities, requesting them to instruct their men that the color bar is not a custom in Britain."

"The question is certainly unfortunate," Churchill replied, "and I am hopeful that without any action on my part the points of view of all concerned will be mutually understood and respected."

William Gallacher, Communist, said he had received a letter, a copy of which was sent to Churchill, signed by a number of men informing him that an officer had advised them that Negro discrimination was necessary in London.

The liberal and radical press have been frankly outspoken in their disapproval.

In a letter to the editor of the weekly New Stateman and Nation, Dr. Harold A. Moody, president of the League of Colored People, recently accused the government of "endeavoring to establish" a Jim Crow attitude in this country. He added:

"Although I admit that in the case of the Americans the question has to be handled delicately because of ingrained tradition, I feel that our government must somehow, and that quite soon, assert that this country will not stand for any Jim Crow attitude."

"Job Discrimination Must End", McNutt Tells 6000

NEW YORK — "Discrimination — based on anything but a man's sheer worth — must go. Discrimination against every race must go—just as economic discrimination must go," declared Paul V. McNutt, June 28, in an address at a Negro Victory Mass meeting held here under the auspices of the Negro Labor Victory Committee and the National Conference of Negro Youth.

The Chairman of the War Manpower Commission declared the clear national policy of the government was for elimination of all forms of discrimination against all minority groups. He said: "The little people of every race, of every tongue, of every creed and of every economic condition—have a clear national policy which is making and has made headway. Their security; their rights, are on the march."

Will Use Negro

McNutt pledged that his war agency would make full use of Negro manpower. "It is fundamental," he declared, "that the life of no American soldier—of any race or creed or color, anywhere in the world—shall be put in jeopardy because of the prejudice of any employer, any worker—or any employer's or worker's organization."

Citing the recent employment of thousands of Negros in aircraft, shipbuilding and other war industries, McNutt continued: "But we are not using Negroes enough. There are still too many who hire them only for certain service jobs or assign them to work below their best skill. Such employers are protecting their prejudices at the cost of production for victory. America cannot stand that kind of nonsense."

McNutt's speech was broadcast nationally over the Blue Network of the National Broadcasting Company.

At the conclusion of Mr. McNutt's speech, which was broadcast over the National Broadcasting Blue Network, the meeting passed unanimously the 12-point program drawn up the day previously at the Trade Union and Negro People's Conference which was attended by 480 delegates representing over 200 A. F. of L. and CIO unions and Negro community organiza-

The 12-point program included:

(1) The War Production Board immediately train and secure employment for 100,000 Negroes in war industries by Oct. 1, 1942; that funds be appropriated by the Federal government to finance the workers during their period of training.

Negro On Commission

(2) That a Negro be appointed immediately to the War Manpower Commission.

(3) That the WPB order the immediate placement of available Negro workers in war production industries without discrimination; that Jim-Crow projects in war industries be abolished; that machinery with power be established in the War Manpower Commission to enforce this order.

(4) That Negroes be appointed to all government policy and regulatory bodies such as rationing and price control boards, and that the office of Price Administration take effective measures to eliminate discriminatory food, rent and other prices in Negro communities.

Suggest Conference

(5) That the War Manpower Commission, in cooperation with other government agencies initiate a joint national conference of government, management, labor and Negro organizations to convene Labor Day, 1942, to hasten and insure the end of joo and training discrimination.

(6) That legislation be passed immediately empowering the Fair Employment Practices Committee to punish violators of its orders; and that Federal funds be withheld without delay from the industries violating Executive Order 8802 and/or clauses in war contracts which already forbid discrimination.

(7) That full equality and citizenship rights be guaranteed Negro Americans everywhere; that all laws denying Negroes their constitutional and civil rights be abolished immediately; and that the Pepper Anti-Poll tax bill be passed in this session of Congress.

NEGRO WORK BAN IS CALLED DEGRADING

WASHINGTON, June 14—(AP)—A presidential committee ruled Sunday that two AFL unions in Chicago had prevented Negroes from working on big defense projects, and denounced the policy as "undemocratic and degrading," and contrary to orders of President Roosevelt.

In the first such action respecting unions, the president's committee on fair employment practices, created a year ago for the primary purpose of investigating racial discrimination in defense work, sustained charges against Local 597, Steamfitters Protective Association, and Local 120, Chicago Journeymen Plumbers Union.

It directed the unions to "alter or construe" their policies by June 18 so that qualified Negro plumbers and steamfitters could be employed on a basis of equality with others.

The action was predicated on the complaints of the Cook County Plumbers Association and the Cook County Steamfitters Association, both Negro organizations. The former charged that Negro plumbers were unable to get jobs at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station and at the Francis Cabrini defense housing project.

Navy Plant Dismisses Whites Who Struck Against Negroes

DETROIT.—Acting with unprecedented directness Monday, the navy department caused the immediate discharge of four white employes of the Hudson Naval Ordnance plant here as alleged ringleaders in the four-hour walkout last week, started when Negroes were hired for milling machine and other jobs. In addition to dismissing them, officials demanded a thorough investigation of the quartet's activities and background. Local 154, United Automobile Workers, CIO, was the union involved. The plant makes Oerlikon antiaircraft guns and other essential war material.

Previously, UAW-CIO officials had declared that those responsible for the action, which violated the anti-discrimination policies of the union, would be punished. Richard P. Frankensteen, UAW-CIO executive board member in charge of aircraft, promptly upheld the navy department action, declaring:

"We are supporting the plant management and the navy in the discharge of these men. The men came from different departments and they will be investigated further. These discharges have the wholehearted approval of both international and local officials of our union."

Last week's stoppage was the latest in a series of such incidents in Detroit that has drawn government attention. About a week ago, Richard Conder, director of personnel, Chrysler Corporation, fired two white workers, one a shop steward, for inciting a similar stoppage there. On that occasion, prompt UAW-CIO action returned the workers to their jobs also.

Major credit for uniting the forces of labor, management and government to meet the situation is believed due J. Lawrence Dunca, field representative, Negro Manpower Service, who was in the motor city at the time and promptly went into action.

Negro Women Will Not Be Trained At Ellington Field

HOUSTON.—Negroes in Houston and other portions of Texas are getting the run-a-round on training for war industries. Millions of dollars are being allotted in various sections of Texas for the training of civilians for war industries, but Negroes are being studiedly excluded from such training and being rebuffed when they make application for such training to the local officials. The case of Mrs. Albert McGriff is typical of the experiences Negroes have when they attempt to get training for these industries.

Mrs. Albert McGriff, 4801 Oats, Prairie View College graduate, noticed an ad in the Houston Post stating that white woman teachers may be trained for Civilian Pilot Training Courses. Being interested in the course, she called Charles Johnson, who handles the vocational classes in the public schools and asked him about the courses. Her exact conversation with him was. "Is there a possibility of colored women being trained along with the whites for airplane craft and mechanics if they could get enough for a class?" His reply was: "We are offering classes to those people who will be employed If colored people can get employed we will be glad to give you a class."

"The Informer"

'NO JOBS, NO TRAINING

Mrs. McGriff stated then it was her duty to find out whether or not colored women were being employed in the air plane industry in this section and for that reason she called the Informer. The Informer, in seeking the information, called Mr. Johnson and he advised us to call the United States Employment Service For Training Within Industry to see if any plans had been worked out for colored women. Mr. Johnson also said that his department was under three administrations, local, state and national. He explained this by saying, to train persons to work in this area, Houston, would require approval of local authorities; to train workers to work outside this area would require approval of state authorities; to train workers to work say in Los Angeles would require approval from national authorities. This is the axample he gave to explain how it works. "Suppose colored women were employed in Fort Worth; the national government would not allow us to train them because they are outside this area. In other words we can train only persons that are to work in this area."

Houston, Tex.

PROVERBIAL RUN-A-ROUND

In the meantime the Informer called the U. S. Employment Service and the lady who answered the phone said that she knew of no air craft industry here but she did know of the industry in Fort Worth and Dallas and she had no information whether or not colored women were working and asked us to call Ellington Field and ask for Personnel Department. This we did and we were advised to call Ellington Field 549 and this office, when the question was asked about colored women being employed there, asked us to call Ellington Field 472, and when this number was reached and the same question asked, we were asked to call Ellington Field 376. When this number was called we were told to call Ellington Field 549 again and we were told to call 472 and the lady answered the phone, said she didnot have any information on that right now but said she would call back and give that information. As yet no call has been received.

"MAYBE LATER"

In the meantime Mrs. McGriff and several ladies met Dean Bowles of Houston College to see about a similar course. Dean Dupree of the University of Houston informed Dean Bowles that no such classes were possible because the quota had been taken up. The Informer called Dean Dupree and he said that no funds had been appropriated for that tpye of training for colored women; that he had been allowed only one class and the quota had been taken up in that class. He said further that the question of training colored women came up so sudden until they haven't had time to work out a possible solution and that by the time school starts in the fall somethings may be worked out for colored girls.

(A woman at Ellington Field finally called before press time and said that colored women will not be trained at Ellington Field.)

A FIRM STAND

SECRETARY FRANK KNOX of the Navy Department has come in for a lot of personal criticism from the press and Negroes generally, but last week he set an example of what can be accomplished by a government official who takes a firm stand against racial prejudice.

In Detroit on June 17, several thousand members of the United Automobile Workers, CIO, went out on a "wild cat" strike, shutting down 60 percent of the Hudson Naval Ordnance Arsenal because eight Negroes, in accordance with their union seniority rights, had been assigned to machines formerly operated by white workers. Production ceased at 9 a. m., and word was immediately gotten to Secretary Knox and R. J. Thomas, president of the union, of the strike. Mr. Knox sent the following wire to the strikers:

"This plant is engaged solely in vital war production, is entirely owned by the government which bears all operating costs, and has been designated as a military reservation.

"Under such circumstances the refusal to continue normal work warrants assumption the men are disloyal and not only are subject to immediate dismissal, but may be prevented from obtaining employment in other industrial establishments engaged in war work.

"Immediate resumption of work is therefore imperative."

Mr. Thomas also took a firm stand when he telegaphed Al Germain, president of the Hudson local, to tell the strikers that they would be expelled from the union unless they returned to work at once.

"This walkout is a flagrant violation of the constitution of the U. A. W., C. I. O.," his telegram stated. "More than that, it amounts to sabotage of our war effort and plays into the hands of the enemies of our nation."

As a result of this firm stand on the part of both the union head and the Secretary of the Navy the strike was broken after seven hours, with the 4 o'clock shift resuming work.

We need more such examples from high government officials as that shown by Secretary Knox in the face of racial prejudice.

POLITICS IN GEORGIA.

The attorney general of Georgia holds in an opinion that schools used by white children cannot be used to train Negroes for places in war industry even when the white children are on vacation. The training program is sponsored by the federal department of education, but the attorney general asserts that "equitable opportunities" as sought by the department for all citizens, white or black, is a "variable term," and that Georgia is one of the variations. In other words, Georgia is not to be bound by any ideas held by the federal government that the colored man should have a chance to improve his economic status.

This stand will hardly come as a surprise to any one who has observed the demagogic governor, Eugene Talmadge, trying to make political capital out of the race question. The attorney general wants to run for the governorship also, and he apparently feels that the only way he can compete with Talmadge is to become the same kind of rabble rouser. A shortage of trained war workers undoubtedly is developing in the south, as it is elsewhere, but rather than give the Negro a chance politicians of this stripe would let production fall off.

If the four freedoms are good for export they should be equally serviceable at home. The President's committee on fair employment practices may consider the situation in Georgia as deserving of investigation. In doing so the committee will have the active support of many of the state's most distinguished white men and women, if one may judge from the indignation aroused by Gov. Talmadge's acts of intolerance.

La Guardia Names War Council And Flatly Ignores Negroes

NYC's famous "Little Flower," known in the past for justice and fairplay to all races, is slowly but surely withering into a case-hardened symbol that overlooks the "forgotten man." Last Sunday in his radio Talk to the People, Mayor LaGuardia madc this fact clear when he announced the formation of a City War Council of 25 without adding a Negro to the list. The council followed the man' te of the NY State War Emergency Act, effective May 1, and has Newbold Morris, president of the City Council, as its chairman.

The Negro was completely overlooked in the formation, and many believe that at least one out of the twenty-five would have been even a small percentage representation of the Negro population. At press time there is one remaining position, Director of Civilian Protection, but inner circles hold that the mayor himself will usurp the spot. He is quoted as saying: "I am still mayor. I am in command of civilian defense in NYC and I will be in command so long as I am mayor."

The powers of the council are broad with respect to activities connected with civilian defense. In essence it will be a board for survey, planning, coordination and general long-range handling of defense problems. Immed'ate emergencies will be handled by the mayor's own "War Cabinet" and Deputy Mayor Wallander, the mayor's coordinator for civilian defense.

Louisiana Report Says Failure To Train Negro Hurts Progress

Louisiana's Negro population constitutes one of its strongest economic assets and failure to train and educate it properly is hindering economic progress of the state as a whole.

This statement was made by the Louisiana Educational Survey Commission which recently issued a 400,000-word report following an extended inquiry into public school education in Louisiana.

The report, dealing with a statewide survey of public schools, was made under a commission headed by Dr. Henry M. Fletcher of Tulane and created by the state legislature. Some 200 Louisiana committees in all parishes of the state worked with the commission in gathering data.

Louisiana's economic life, with its cotton, cane, oil, lumber and similar industries, especially adapted to use of the Negro, but the state is failing to get the value it should from this section of its population, the report says. This failure, it continued, rests on the failure to train and educate the Negro along the Lines for which he is best suited in this state.

URGE CRAFTS AND SKILLS

"Shiftless Negroes, wasteful Negroes, dishonest Negroes, undernourished Negroes, disease-bearing Negroes and vicious Negroes are a costly liability.

"Honest, intelligent, hard-working, refined, healthy and thrifty Negroes will greatly increase the safety and happiness of the white race as well as of the Negro race."

The report urges educational facilites to train Negroes in the crafts and skills, to teach them to earn their own living instead of being dependent on the community, to make them of greater value as workers in Louisiana industry and agriculture. In other words, it recommends education along lines particularly adopted to the background of the Negro race, pointing out that school courses for whites may not fit the Negroes and that courses now offered for Negroes do not in any way train them to be of value to the community or to themselves.

The report points out that while the caste gulf separating Negro and white activities is far deeper in the northern part of Lousiana than in hte southern, some of the best educational equipment for Negroes is found in Shreveport and in Webster parish. These approved facilities are individual in nature, rather than embracing any local Negro educational system as a whole, however.

Discussing lack of buildings in which to teach Negroes, the survey report said:

"There are certain exceptions to poor school buildings and equipment, such as those in Lake Charles and in Shreveport. In the Milam Street Training school (Shreveport) there are several electrically driven saws and other kinds of tools for carpenter shops, such as drills lathes, joiners, table saws; shoe making tools, and equipment for cooking and sewing."

MORE VOCATIONS

Dealing with school libraries for Negroes, the report says, in part: "Webster parish seems to have the best library facilities in the state for Negroes."

Another excerpt from the report says:

"It seemed agreed that there should be much more vocational education for Negro children and less of academic matter that is out of their reach.

"There should be more courses in brick-laying, plumbing, electric work, auto mechanics, agriculture, home economics and the like. But all such courses require expensive equipment and hence are difficult to provide."

Difficulty in provding educational training which would bring out the Negroe's economic value to the state rests chiefly in the parish school boards, the report said. Parish superintendents were described as "more friendly" toward improving Negro schools, but paying little attention to them, while school boards took money allocated by the state for Negro education and used it for other purposes, the report said.

In summary, the report said it is necessary for Louisiana to recognize the Negro as "one of the South's great economic assets."

"Wholly aside from ethical aspects of the matter, the Negro is an indispensable adjunct to all of the business interests of the state. Proper education can immensely increase the value of these assets. It is to the Negro's mis-education rather than to his education that objections have been made by some groups of white people."

ASK FEDERAL AID

Because of the expense involved, the report urged that the state legislature memorialize congress for federal aid for education and that the legislature pass a law requiring that the state alowance for Negro children be paid to the support of the Negro schools.

It was further urged that the state board of education enforce certification rules and requires teachers in Negro schools to have valid contracts. The number of children per-teacher should be reduced the length of instruction courses increased, health and sanitation problems should be attended to and the Negro curriculum should be revised to meet Negro needs, the report concluded.

The section of the report reviewed here is the only one dealing specifically with Negro education in Louisiana. Other sectons have presented data on both Negroes and whites in various phases of public school education and in each case the data has been divided racially.

Previous sections showed that the average Louisiana public high school senior has only the academic ability of a sophomore under normal standards of education, that the average high school graduate in this state is often hampered by downright inability to read" even after reaching college and that the grade and high school pupils are especially deficient in such fundamentals as mathematics and Engish, as well as reading.

Teachers were found in many cases to be lacking in minimum qualifications for the grades and courses to which they are assigned and the 11-year school system was listed as one of the state's major deficincies in public school educaton. Louisiana is one of six states out of 48 having such a system.

Soldier Balks At Colored Eating Near

White Private Tries To Keep Soldier From Restaurant

OKLAHOMA CITY—"You damn niggers can't eat in here," was the insult which started a fight between Negro and white soldiers here June 15 in the restaurant of the local bus station.

Unprovoked Assault

The unprovoked assault was on Private James Boyd, of Chicago, Ill., who with Privates Cloise Abbott, Topeka, Kans., and Alfred Gordon, Cincinnati, O., was on his way from Fort Sill to Muskogee to report for duty.

The three Negro soldiers had arrived in Oklahoma City by bus at 12:25 Monday afternoon, and were scheduled to take the 12:45 bus to Muskogee where they were to be stationed.

Having been told by the restaurant cashier that they could eat at the bus station, they were walking to the booth to which they had been directed, when the unidentified white soldier walked over to them, pushed Private Boyd and said: "You damn niggers can't eat in here."

Strikes Soldier

The white soldier then struck Boyd on the jaw. They were separated by Private Abott and he and the white soldier began to fight. The fight was stopped when other white soldiers intervened by taking their companion, whose face was bloody, from the cafe.

Meantime the military police arrived, took the Negro soldiers to headquarters where, according to the soldiers, the MP's told the captain in charge that the colored men had started the fight. This was denied by Boyd.

The captain is quoted as lecturing the colored soldiers, telling them: "This is the South and you don't get the same treatment you do in the North."

Privates Boyd, Abott and Gordon were then sent to the Negro section on Second street here to get some food and wait for the next bus which left for Muskogee at 6 P.M. The soldiers were due to report for duty in Muskogee at 5 P.M.

Unemployed Negroes Will Add To Mobile Housing Problem

Unless These Get Jobs, 15,500 Workers Must Be Imported, Session Here Informed

Mobile—already swelled to the danger point by the immigration of workers from all parts of the nation—will have to import 15,500 additional workers and their accompanying problems of family housing, sewerage and schooling, by December, unless the already-available Negro labor supply is put to work.

This was evidence presented at the Friday hearing of the president's committee on fair employment practices, which will remain in Birmingham through Saturday conducting investigations of 12 Southeastern war industries, national defense training authorities and labor unions in a nationwide program to use full manpower for the production of the war machine.

The case which brought forth these facts was that of the Gulf Shipbuilding Corporation, at Chickasaw, which is maintaining a policy of hiring no Negro even as a day laborer except for janitorial work.

The present corporation stands on the site of a similar dockyard of World War I which employed a great number of Negroes in skilled, semi-skilled and manual labor positions.

* * *

ACCORDING TO testimony presented by John Beecher, field representative for the committee, Mobile's population has leaped during the emergency from 114,000 to 145,000, largely due to immigration of workers. Employment in defense industry has grown from 4,000 to 18,000 since 1940.

By December, 1942, employment is expected to have grown to 33,400, necessitating the importation of more than 15,000 workers and their families unless the large available Negro supply of labor is used.

However, testimony shows, only 30 Negroes are being given national defense training, and this in a course begun in the last three weeks.

Morning witnesses included Leo Carter, of the Mobile Metal Trades Council, AFL, who sought to prove that the council has long endorsed plans for training Negroes; Newman Brazier, Negro machinist helper of 16 years experience, who said he was told on applying to Gulf that Gulf "does not hire Negroes;" and a representative of local 70 of International Hodcarriers Union, who testified that Gulf Shipbuilding Corporation's superintendent frequently asks the union for a supply of white laborers, but refuses Negro laborers even though white ones are not available.

* * *

GULF CORPORATION officials and State Director of Defense Training E. R. Plowden were to be heard later in the session.

Case of the Alabama Drydock and Shipbuilding Corporation of Mobile was second on the day's docket.

Evidence in the first case on the hearing schedule — that of Vultee Aircraft, Inc., at Nashville — was presented at the opening session Thursday afternoon.

Vultee has no Negroes on its production lines because, according to company officials, they cannot employ production men who have not had a special pre-employment training course.

The pre-employment training courses offered by the Nashville public school system and state vocational division have been held at white high schools only.

The pre-employment training courses have not been offered to Negroes, according to the state vocational education director, because Nashville defense industries will not hire Negroes and they cannot waste public money training where there is no need.

This setup, pronounced "the old vicious circle," by Mark Etheridge, manager of The Louisville Courier-Journal, was part of the evidence against Vultee, presented for judgment of the committee.

LAUNCHED AT THE Federal Building Thursday with an opening address by Committee Chairman Malcolm MacLean, president of Hampton Institute, who promised a 1944 when every able-bodied man and woman down to the age of 16 would be vitally needed on production lines, the hearings will continue through Saturday with witnesses called for complainants and for agencies against whom charges of discrimination have been placed.

Mark M. Latting, 39, Negro, a college graduate in electrical engineering and a man of 20 years experience, testified that on June 1 he applied for work in production at Vultee. The company interviewer informed him that he was not qualified because of insufficient experience, though he carried letters of recommendation from previous employers including well-known motor manufacturers of Chicago.

George Hastings, Vultee personnel director, stated that no mechanics were employed June 1 because there were no openings.

David Sarnoff, president of the Radio Corporation of America and a member of the committee, asked Hastings, "Do you consider Latting qualified for work at Vultee plant?"

Hastings replied, "No, I don't. He has had no aircraft experience and no pre-employment training."

Said Sarnoff, "Frankly, the other members of the committee may be impressed by that fact, but as president of a company who employs thousands of bench mechanics, I am not. I should consider a man with 20 years experience and these recommendations worth consideration."

* * *

FURTHER TESTIMONY from Hastings, from Cy Record, who is a field representative on special assignment for the committee, and from Dr. E. Q. Hawk, representative of the Seventh Regional Labor Supply Committee, tended to show that:

In greater Nashville there is a population of 241,769, of which 54,837, or 22.7 per cent is Negro.

Vultee Aircraft, Inc., has employed several thousand persons on production and in the company.

Of the total of employes, .8 per cent—less than 1 per cent—are Negroes, and all Negroes employed are in such positions as janitors or maids. None is on production jobs.

The Vultee Company stated that reason for its non-employment of Negroes is that no Negroes are being trained in the required pre-employment training courses of Nashville's vocational education program.

G. E. Freeman, state director of vocational education, reported training courses had not been offered to Negroes in Nashville "because we are told to train where there is a need . . . defense industries have not hired Negroes . . . we could not set up courses without a demand."

Said Mark Etheridge: "It seems to me that we have here the vicious circle."

Said Dr. MacLean: "May I call to the committee's attention the present slow-up in war industry because of observance of the vague clause which provides that training shall be offered where there is a particular need."

* * *

TESTIMONY SHOWED that courses have been offered in automobile mechanics and blasksmithing, but that only in the past few weeks have any been begun in Nashville which would train Negroes for aircraft industry.

In a "statement of company policy," F. C. Bryan, Vultee spokesman here from California for the hearing, stated "Negroes will be given equal opportunity with all other persons on future openings and those who qualify will get jobs."

Cases of the Gulf Shipbuilding Corp. and the Alabama Dry Dock and Shipbuilding Co., both of Mobile, were scheduled for Friday morning, and the afternoon cases were to include contractors engaged in construction at Brookley Field, Mobile, Bell Aircraft and Atlanta national defense training authorities, Atlanta, and national defense training authorities at Macon, Ga.

Committee members are Dr. Malcolm MacLean, chairman; David Sarnoff, R. C. A. president; Mark Etheridge, Louisville Courier-Journal; Earl Dickerson, Chicago city alderman; Milton P. Webster, international vice president, Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters; Frank Fenton, AFL representative, and John Brophy, CIO representative.

The hearings will continue through Saturday.

McNutt Tells Negroes Of Fascism's Perils

Says Discrimination Must Go As Nation Defends Rights

"New York World Telegram" New York, N.Y.

The American Negro, though he has been the victim of discrimination, must enter wholeheartedly into the battle against Fascism or lose even those rights he has won in this country, Paul V. McNutt, chairman of the War Man Power Commission, told a Harlem audience of 6000 persons yesterday in the Golden Gate Ballroom, Lenox Ave. and 142nd St. The meeting was sponsored by the Negro Labor Victory Committee and the National Conference of Christian Youths.

"Man's inhumanity to man has laid heavily upon you," Mr. McNutt declared. "You have suffered grievous discrimination. And when you demand a redefinition—a reiteration—of fundamental American rights, your claims are just and sound.

Worth Defending.

"But in calling the roll of grievances it may be well to remember this: the American way has given to us all certain things which are worth defending. They are things not enjoyed by the little people—be they minority or a majority—in any other nation of the world.

"The little people fight today for their right to fight for themselves," he said.

"Discrimination—based on anything but a man's sheer worth—must go," Mr. McNutt added. "Discrimination against every race must go—just as economic discrimination must go."

Arguments that Negroes cannot do certain kinds of defense work, that "Whites and Negroes just won't work together" and that "unions won't let us hire Negroes" all were refuted by the chairman of the War Man Power Commission.

The meeting had been under fire from other Negro groups in the city which have charged it was Red-inspired. Among those protesting were the March-on-Washington Movement, the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters and the Negro Labor Committee of New York.

Sharing acclaim with Mr. McNutt was Mrs. Conery Miller of Texas, the mother of Dorie Miller, Negro navy messman cited for courage and awarded the Navy Cross after Pearl Harbor.

Business Cannot Afford Artists Who Insult Customers

We cannot feel sorry for those businesses that find themselves embarrassed by the entertainers whom they hire to recommend their products in person and by radio. Manufacturers who know enough to package their goods against moisture, rough handling and the like, cannot plead that they do not know the gratuitous insults to which their colored customers are subjected at times. They have as much right to plan against that as against other difficulties incidental to selling.

We can see that the sponsor of the musical program which advertises itself as the work of the Waltz King, would not ask him whether he was so delicate in his sensibilities that he has to be kept from the ordinary contacts of American life. Nonetheless we shall tune him out from this time on, and buy nothing that he advertises. We can do no less. He has gone out of his way to offend us and we accept the challenge.

Warned by the two possibilities, one that a performer will give offense, and the other that the colored part of an audience will resent it, sponsors of entertainment intended to encourage sales, should insist that their hirelings shall not let their personal conduct lose them acceptability by part of their hearers. They get too much money per appearance for that.

Not so long ago a cigarette company that has a show touring in army camps, had as a feature of their program a gift of their goods to all the soldiers. Somebody kept the colored part of the audience from sharing, at one post. That should be enough for the sponsor to do one of two things; either make sure that all soldiers are alike in getting or stop the giving and make all alike in not getting. Business makes claims to being resourceful. We grant that, and because we grant it, we insist that they shall make plans that do not hurt us either by omission or commission.

Atty. General Rules On Use Of Training Schools

Citing the constitutional provision that "separate schools shall be provided for the white and colored races," Attorney General Ellis Arnall Tuesday opposed a proposal that school buildings in Georgia built for white pupils be used to train Negroes for jobs in National Defense industries.

He declared that use of white schools for training Negroes even at times when they were not in use by white students would be a violation of the constitution.

In a letter to State School Superintendent M. D. Collins, responding to inquiries made of the Law Department by Superintendent Collins and M. D. Mobley, director of vocational education, Attorney General Arnall wrote:

"I understand that the problem of finding adequate facilities for use in training Negroes in vocational work preparatory to absorption in war industry is a matter of concern to the State Department of Education.

"The question arises as to whether public school buildings used for the training of white people for defense industries may also be used for the training of Negroes, and whether equipment used for Negro vocational training may be placed in white schools, at the time not being used by white trainers.

"Article 8, Section 1, Paragraph 1. of the Constitution of Georgia provides in part as follows: 'Separate schools shall be provided for the white and colored races.'

"It is my opinion that this clear-cut constitutional provision prohibits the use of white schools for the training of Negroes. It effectively prohibits the comingling of the races in the schools of Georgia and forestalls any attempt to use white schools for Negroes.

"If additional training facilities are required in the war program for Negroes, separate buildings must be provided for this purpose so that the letter and spirit of the Constitution of Georgia may be observed. In this state, under the Constitution, it is not legally possible to use public school facilities provided for the education of the white race for the education of the Negroes.

"I understand that the Department of Education is interested in what constitutes 'equitable opportunities' for the training of Negres in defense and war activities.

In view of the fundamental law of this state, as found in the Constitution, this term could not be legally construed as embracing the training of Negroes in the public school facilities provided for the training of white people. Equitable opportunities would, after all, be a matter of determination based largely upon the demand for Negro war workers. Equitable opportunities is a variable term, impossible of abstract definition. What constitutes equitable opportunities under one set of facts might not under another.

"So long as your department vocationally trains Negroes for war industry separately from white trainees in proportion to the actual needs of industry for the respective groups of workers, I think you will comply with the laws of this state."

GEORGIA SCHOOLS CLOSED TO NEGRO WAR WORK CLASS

Barred by State Law from Buildings.

Atlanta, Ga., June 16 [Special].—Attorney General Ellis Arnall held in a formal opinion today that school buildings in Georgia erected for the education of white pupils may not be used for training Negro defense industrial workers.

He cited a state constitutional provision that separate schools be provided for white and colored races and added that, in his opinion, the use of white children's schools by Negroes even when the schools are not otherwise in use would violate the constitution.

The attorney general, who is seeking the governorship in the fall election, was asked by M. D. Collins, state superintendent of schools, and M. D. Mobley, director of vocational education, to submit his legal opinion on the matter.

Constitutional Barrier.

"It is my opinion," Arnall said, after citing the constitution concerning separate schools, "that this clear cut constitutional provision prohibits the use of white schools for the training of Negroes. It effectively prohibits the comingling of the races in the schools of Georgia and forestalls any attempt to use white schools for Negroes.

"If additional training facilities are required in the war program for Negroes, separate buildings must be provided for this purpose so that the letter and spirit of the constitution of Georgia may be observed. Negroes Not Embraced.

At the governors' conference in Asheville, Alabama's Frank Dixon added his voice eloquently to others stressing States' rights now against the fear that federal centralizations for war-time may persist in times of peace. It is a cause in which we all need to be enlisted, whether we come from the South or not. It is a part of the cause against Socialism and for preservation of the free enterprising which made this country great. But something to remember with all pleas for states' rights is how often they have been discredited because of their use by men who in their hearts care nothing for the rights of states against federal governments but were concerned only for their own selfish immunity from social and economic regulation in the interests of the rights of others.

States' rights, freedom of the press, the right to work—these are terms whose real meanings should be more precious to Americans now than ever before. But they are terms often abused as rightly used.

Union Protests Jim Crow Ban

ST. LOUIS, June 16. — A Jim Crow action by the Municipal Athletic Association drew sharp protest from the Sports and Social Committee of the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America (CIO) as the union also protested layoffs of Negro Workers at an important war plant.

The athletic association, at a special meeting, voted to bar two UE Negro softball teams from the city softball league. The Negro teams were organized in the Wagner Electric Company to engage in friendly competition with six UE white teams.

"This action strikes at the heart of American sportsmanship and fair play," the sports and social committee resolution read. "Such an act is undemocratic and discriminates against a loyal and patriotic group of St. Louis citizens.

"Our Negro brothers work side by side with us making shells, bomber turrets and all the instruments of war for our country's fight to preserve our long cherished institutions of democracy and freedom. Ruling Forbids Negroes Using White Schools

Arnall Says Separate Buildings Required for War Workers.

The use of white schools for the training of Negroes for war industries cannot be permitted under the Georgia constitution, Attorney General Ellis Arnall ruled yesterday in a letter to Superintendent M. D. Collins, of the State Board of Education.

The ruling, according to the letter, was in answer to inquiries from Dr. Collins and from M. D. Mobley, director of vocational education.

The letter said:

"Assistant Attorney General E. J. (Sandy) Clower and I have discussed the matter which you and M. D. Mobley, director of vocational education, took up with the law department several days ago.

Why Can't We Work? Ask Negro Mechanics

By Art Shields

All over Harlem Negro workers are telling personal stories of discrimination in the war industry plants.

Yesterday this reporter ran into a group of four blacklisted electricians talking together.

They are blacklisted because they are colored—not white.

Any reporter can get a flock of such stories by talking to the men he meets on curbstone or street.

And they'll ask him what these electricians asked me: "Why are we not allowed to help win the war? Why isn't President Roosevelt's order against discrimination better enforced?"

10 CENT LUNCHES

I met the four electricians in a little restaurant on Lenox Ave. near 138th St., where they were eating meager lunches of soup and corn muffins and water.

Ten cents is all they can pay for lunches because they have families to support on WPA wages. They work on a WPA electrical project at Harlem Hospital, where they install motors and do construction wiring.

"The Federal government recognizes us as competent electricians," said William Lomax, 39 years old, of 50 East 112 St.

"We handle the most difficult work, but we can't get jobs from any war industry employer, though we've often applied."

Mr. Lomax has worked at the trade eight years and gone to three training schools. He graduated from the Harlem Evening Trades School and from the Gompers Vocational Training School.

"And I also took a three years' correspondence course in electrical engineering from the American Engineering School in Chicago," he added.

CAN'T GET A CHANCE

But Fletcher's Drydock—the Bethlehem Steel yard in Hoboken, N. J. —wouldn't give him a chance.

"The boss always shook his head when he came to the colored mechanics shaping up for work at Hoboken," he explained.

And the Brooklyn Navy Yard bosses also said No.

Mr. Lomax's main grievance is not the $5.84 a day wage for 15 days' work a month—which is just a fraction of electrical mechanics' wages outside.

His main grievance is that he can't use his skill directly on the war production front.

For he says: "This is my war. Why won't they let me help win it?"

His friend Charles Tillie of 204 West 61 St., the father of three children, has worked at the trade more than 12 years.

"But they always say 'No Openings,' when I apply for work at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, the Wright Airfield (where he applied two weeks ago) and other jobs."

Joseph James of 11 East 118th St., a graduate radio man from the Harlem Evening Trades School and an experienced electrical worker of several years' standing, has been turned down likewise at the Brooklyn Navy Yard and other war industry plants.

Kenneth Hughes of 214 Edgecomb Ave., who was with them, another electrical course graduate, said he considered it useless to ask for a mechanics' job at the big plants.

There are many more like them. They demand action at once.

4,000 Hear Robeson, Pearl Buck Flay Bias

APR 18 1942

NEW YORK — Demands for the fullest inclusion of colored Americans in the war effort, total elimination of discrimination, and the arming of Africans and colonial peoples everywhere against fascist aggression, were enthusiastically cheered by a mixed audience of 4,000 at a mass meeting at Manhattan Center, on April 8, called by the Council on African Affairs.

These demands, embodied in two resolutions, were sent to President Roosevelt by the council from its national office at 8 West Fortieth Street.

Robeson, Pearl Buck Heard

Speakers were Paul Robeson, noted baritone and chairman of the council; Pearl S. Buck, author; Joseph Curran, president of the National Maritime Union; Lillian Hellman, playwright; Herbert Agar, editor, and Max Yergan, executive director of the council.

APR 18 1942

Dr. Channing H. Tobias, of the YMCA National Council, was chairman. Special messages from Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru of India and Sir Stafford Cripps were read.

Links Fascism, Slavery

"Fascism and slavery know no difference," Robeson declared, expressed deep pride in his African ancestry and in the part African culture plays in the culture of world.

Referring to the purpose of the war Mr. Robeson said:

"If the American people really want to see that this is a free America, they must see in this struggle that their freedom is tied up with the freedom, not only of the European peoples, but of the colonial peoples everywhere. . . not only of the 15,000,000 colored Americans, but with the freedom of millions of other colored peoples, and certainly of the 160,000,000 Africans who might stand between Hitler and Dakar, between Hitler and South America, between Hitler and New York."

Distrust Scored

Miss Buck asserted that war unity requires the elimination of distrust. She said:

APR 18 1942

"The cause of uncertainty in the American people is not lack of unity, it is lack of trust in each other. . .The distruct between groups of human beings we must sternly reject not only as an aid to the enemy but as denying our own democracy."

Dr. Yergan set the tone of the meeting in a speech which called for an end to governmental temporizing with the problems of discrimination, the opening of a second front against Hitler, and the fullest mobilization of Africans and all colonial peoples.

Example for Colonies

"Let our country and the administration possess itself of imagination, boldness and courage," he asserted. "Let it rise above pettiness in the treatment of 13,000,000 colored citizens.

"Let it, with one fell swoop, really remove barriers against colored in the navy, in employment, and everywhere else. Let it do that and the colonial world will rise up and acclaim the substance of the Four Freedoms and the Atlantic Charter.

No Bargin for Loyalty

"While our loyalty and enthusiasm for the war is not to be conditioned by the degree to which we have or have not attained democratic rights, it must be clearly understood that discriminations stand in the way of the fullest expression of that loyalty.

APR 18 1942

"Therefore, because of our loyalty, our struggle for democratic rights must be all the more sharp. Discrimination must be removed in the very interest of the most effective fight against fascism. We urge our government to see this need."

Seamen's Courage Praised

Joseph Curran, head of the powerful CIO National Maritime Union, announced labor's solidarity with the colored people in their struggle for democratic rights; he cited the firm stand taken by the NMU in blocking jim-crow activities of ship owners and lauded the courage and bravery of colored seamen when disaster struck their ships at sea.

Miss Hellman declared that "Negroes should insist that governments of varied colored peoples arm these people freely and with confidence that the arms will be used magnificently in the fight against fascism."

Interference Charged By Police; Negro Held In Carnival Shooting

A white Army lieutenant and a Negro private were charged with interfering and threatening a city policeman with a gun in an affidavit filed with Chief M. A. Hornsby Monday by R. L. Rhodes, one of several city policemen who investigated the shooting of a white civilian by a Negro soldier Saturday night at a Negro carnival in West End.

In his statement, Officer Rhodes said the clash with the lieutenant and the private followed the arrest of Private Cornelius Paul, 29, a Negro stationed at Camp Wheeler, in connection with the wounding of John Thomas Asher, of 303 Washington Street, a concession manager.

Private Paul, who was said to have been posing as a military policeman, is being held at the city jail on a charge of "suspicion of shooting another." Mr. Asher, with a bullet wound in the groin, was reported in "fair" condition Monday at Grady Hospital.

"Pistols Cocked"

In his affidavit, Officer Rhodes charged that the lieutenant, identified as a Lieutenant Reade, stationed at a USO camp near the scene of the carnival, and the Negro aide advanced on him and Officer H. E. Daniel with cocked pistols and tried to take their prisoner.

"I told him (the lieutenant) that the soldier was under arrest and in my custody and that I was a city policeman. . . . I told him I was going to lock up the soldier for shooting another.

"He (the lieutenant) then put his 45 in my stomach and told me he was taking the soldier and taking charge of things. I told him to take the gun out of my stomach, that the hammer was back, and he said, 'yes, it is going to stay back.'

"Officer Daniel, who was standing on the other side of Lieutenant Reade, pulled his gun and told him he would advise him to take his gun out of my stomach.

Crowd Scatters

"The Negro military policeman, who had a .45 in his hand, backed off, scattering the crowd and hollered to Officer Daniel not to start anything or he would finish it. The hammer of his gun was also back."

Officer Rhodes said he then told the lieutenant to take the Negro M. P.'s gun, and, that when the lieutenant said the soldier didn't have a gun, he flashed his light on it. The lieutenant, he reported, then said the Negro was not supposed to have a gun and told him to put it away.

Later, the report said, when the parties went to a point where Private Paul was being held by another policeman, the Negro aide had cocked his gun again. He said, at his request, the lieutenant then took the gun and ejected the shells.

Another clash was narrowly averted, according to reports, when Captain of Police Luther Carroll took the policemen to Fort McPherson to continue the investigation.

While there, Lieutenant Reade was quoted as saying that the city policemen, while at the carnival, "were the most scared guys that I have ever seen. They were shaking like a couple of leaves."

"Fists Doubled"

At this point, it was reported, Officer Daniel started after the lieutenant, with fists doubled, but was restrained by Captain Carroll.

The trouble began, according to police reports, when Private Paul and a concession manager got into an argument. The soldier then, according to Officer Rhodes, pulled a double-barrel derringer, put his hand under his hat and fired, the bullet shooting off one of his own fingers.

About that time Mr. Asher came up to investigate and the soldier turned on him, firing another shot which struck Mr. Asher in the groin, according to the report of Officer Rhodes.

Mr. Asher was hurried to the hospital and a few minutes later Lieutenant Reade and his aide appeared on the scene.

President May Propose Parity for War Workers

By RALPH SMITH

The Atlanta Journal Bureau,
Mayflower Hotel,
Washington, D. C., April 25.

THE IMPRESSION persists, and in growing volume, that President Roosevelt will propose "parity wages" for war workers, in the message it is expected he will deliver to Congress on Monday.

The recommendation of the President, it is reported, will serve alike as the keynote and keystone of the administration's program to check inflation, which later will be more drastically and fully disclosed by the Office of Price Administration, in fixing and freezing the retail and wholesale prices of innumerable commodities.

In proposing parity wages, the President, it is believed, will argue the futility and unfairness of attempting arbitrarily to fix and freeze wages, and will therefore suggest to the Congress the advisability of vesting in the Executive full and complete authority to adjust pay envelopes to prevailing conditions and in their relation to the cost of living.

The powers it is represented the President will seek may require a third War Powers Act, it is pointed out, that will confer upon him the unchallenged authority to stabilize industrials earnings with the cost of living.

Will Implement OPA Orders

The recommendations of the President, which are to be more fully disclosed by him in a radio fireside chat, will be followed by the promulgation, probably next week, of OPA orders that will readjust and establish price ceiling on thousands of commodities. These orders will, it is understood, apply to both retail and wholesale prices of practically all commodities and products not heretofore covered by OPA orders.

The effect of the authority to be asked by the President with respect to wages in war industries, considered in the light of the anticipated price controls would be to stabilize the cost of living for the duration of the war, it is declared.

So long as living costs are frozen, as planned, the parity between industrial earnings and the necessities of life would remain on a par with those now enjoyed, and there would be no excuse or reason for wage increases.

Army Specialists Win

Notwithstanding the refusal of the House to approve a provision in the sixth supplemental Army apppropriation for the establishment of an Army specialist corps, such an organization now is apparently assured. The Senate Appropriations Committee approved the proposal, and it is now in the bill, subject to further action by the House.

What is an Army specialist corps, and what do its members do? These are but a few of the countless questions asked of Army officers by Senate committeemen.

"General, what are these people—some 6,000 of them—going to do?" Senator McKellar asked of Assistant Chief of Staff Hilldring.

"I could give you many good answers to your question, senator, but one that immediately occurs is applicable. We have a pressing situation, a pressing need right now along this line.

"We have a post-exchange service in the Army, as you know. Today it is doing a million dollars a day in business. That's big business, you'll grant. Obivously, Army officers, no matter how skilled infantry, artillery, cavalry or what not, cannot be expected to know how to handle the details of such a gigantic business. These officers need advisers."

"What about college educations? Are they among the proposed requirements of these contemplated Army specialists," gruffly interrupted Senator Holman, of Oregon.

Assured that college educations were not to be made prerequisites in the specialist corps, Holman continued:

"Army Specialists Catalogued"

"Well, some of these departments require college degrees, and I am telling you that we have men placed in responsible positions today in these departments, because of their college educations, who couldn't successfully run a peanut stand.

"And are you, general, going to be free to make the selections yourself, or are you going to be required by executive order to put in a certain percentage of Negroes, for example?" Holman persisted.

"We have no restrictions," answered General Hilldring. "The Secretary of War is under no restrictions as to how these specialists are to be chosen. They will be chosen as needed for the needs of the Army."

At the suggestion of Senator Tydings, General Hilldring catalogued the categories in which "specialists" will service, as follows: Exploitation, restoration and rehabilitation of oil wells and refineries; rail, motor, air and water transport; communications, ship loading, road building, administration, electronics, procurement and supply, engineerings (all sorts), machine shop builders and operators; purchasing, mechanical tabulation, morale activities, statistics, biology, law, libraries, motion pictures, aviation, aviators, inspectors, medical science, writers on military and defense subjects, drafting, photography, appraising, clerical and fiscal work, mechanical and building trades, laboratory operation, navigation, physics and natural sciences, black-outs, personnel managers, public relations, aircraft warning, et cetera.

Answering a question, General Hilldring said the specialist corps would include between 5,000 and 6,000 persons; that the cost would be about $2,000,000; that none would be commssioned officers, though their salaries would be comparable to officers' salaries, ranging from $2,300 to $8,000 a year.

A RECENT INCIDENT at Fort Bragg in North Carolina throws an interesting sidelight on army race relations. Several hundred white troops were gathered to hear a lecture on venereal infection by a camp chaplain. The same lecture was scheduled to be delivered to a Negro contingent at a later hour. But shortly after the talk for whites had begun, an officer interrupted the meeting to announce that the Negroes had by some mistake arrived outside the hall. He said that the hall would hold both groups but that he personally objected to a mixed audience and that if one other soldier shared his sentiments, he would order the Negroes to await their turn. Not one soldier objected. The officer reluctantly admitted the Negroes but seated them at the rear with four empty rows to separate them from the whites.

TWO BLOWS HAVE BEEN STRUCK AGAINST racial discrimination in the last week. Secretary Knox has announced that Negroes, who up to the present have served in the navy only as messmen, will hereafter be admitted to some regular units. The President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice has ordered ten manufacturers in the Middle West to stop barring Jews and Negroes from work on war contracts. Of the two actions the second is the more satisfying, for it allows no discrimination whatever and it carries the threat of government intervention if an employer fails to mend his ways. But while such a solution is workable in industry, the problem is more difficult in our caste-ridden navy. Race prejudice runs deep not only among the officers, a disproportionate number of whom are Southerners, but among the men themselves; therefore a widened range of opportunity, even though it falls far short of equality, must be considered a step forward. From now on Negroes will be enlisted in reserve components of the navy, marine corps, and coast guard. Presumably they will be used chiefly for shore duty near home bases, but at least they will be given work previously limited to whites.

ARMY WOMEN'S SECTION IGNORES NEGRO WOMEN FOR PARTICIPATION IN MORALE CLUB

APR 25 1942

Wife of Former Governor of Texas Heads Organization; Asks Mrs. Bethune to Join

WASHINGTON.—(ANP)—Utter disregard for the 300,000 Negro soldiers included in Uncle Sam's armed forces has been the program, perhaps unintentional, of the women's interest section of the war department. This group, which reaches millions of women throughout the country in an effort to sustain soldiers morale, operates through clubs and organizations with membership running over hundred thousands for each group. At the time of its formation, Mrs. Mary McLeod Bethune protested there was no Negro woman identified with the movement, so the organization promptly asked Mrs. Bethune to join.

Responsible for the innumerable pamphlets put out on the soldiers, all attention has been directed to the white soldier and nothing done to make the Negro soldier's lot any easier.

The organization is designed to give factual iformation about the army to the women of the United States. This is done through publication of booklets, known as information kits; talks on club programs; joint meetings; and similar devices.

Heading the organization is Mrs. Oveta Culp Hobbie, wife of the former governor of Texas. Mrs. Hobbie is said to be a dollar a year woman.

Saturday a committee composed of Jeannetta Welch, Dorothy Ferebee and Dorothy Height called on Mrs Hobbie to ask for the naming of a Negro woman in the organization and the complete integration of Negro workers throughout the salaried posts held by whites. Busy with press relations work, the organization has definite need for a colored woman worker and through its executive, who after a year's attempting consented to see Miss Welch and her associates last week, has indicated a willingness to listen to a constructive program for the integration of Negroes.

Negroes Complain Knox Blocked Medal To Honolulu Hero

WASHINGTON, May 10.—(A.P.)—The National Negro congress said today that Secretary Knox had disapproved legislation to award a congressional medal of honor to Dorie Miller of Waco, Tex., Negro mess attendant who won distinction in the Pearl Harbor attack.

Edgar O. Browne, president of the congress, reported that Knox's views were made known in a letter to Chairman Walsh (D., Mass.) of the senate naval committee opposing a bill by Senator Mead (D., N. Y.).

The letter, as quoted by Browne, said that Knox already had written a letter of commendation to Miller and that "in view of the recommendations of the Pacific fleet board of awards and the commander in chief of the Pacific fleet, the recognition already awarded is deemed sufficient and appropriate."

Knox added that the President had authority to award a congressional medal of honor to any individual.

Miller, mess attendant on a battleship, was credited with assisting a mortally wounded admiral under heavy Japanese fire and then returning to help man a gun until its ammunition ran out.

ASK WAR DEPT. TO INVESTIGATE THIS INSULT

Dining Room Service Refused

MAY 17 1942

WASHINGTON, D .C., May 14 —Quite a stir was caused in the capital on Wednesday evening when a story of how nine Negro soldiers traveling northward by train from a southern training camp were unable to get food for 22 hours while passing through southern states, was told in the house by Rep. George Bender (R., O.).

The story, the facts of which Rep. Bender characterized as an instance of the most glaring discrimination against Negro soldiers that has come to his attention, and to the attention of the country, despite the many reports of unwarranted mistreatment meted out to colored men enlisted in the nation's armed forces, has been presented to the war department, which has been asked to make a thorough investigation of the episode and report its findings to congress.

The soldiers, according to the story, wearing the uniforms of privates, boarded the train in Montgomery, Ala., at 6:45 p. m. April 30, on the way home to Pittsburgh, Pa.

At 9 a. m. the next day, the train stopped at Bowling Green, Ky., and a "large group" of white soldiers, who also were passengers, alighted and went into the station for breakfast.

MAY 17 194

Negroes Refused Service

The Negro soldiers were refused service in the station dining room, whereupon they asked for sandwiches and coffee to take outside, but were refused even this small courtesy, Rep. Bender said. At noon after the train journey had been continued, a call for lunch in the dining car was made in every car of the train except the jim crow car occupied by the colored soldiers, according to charges.

"Not until 4:45 p. m. that afternoon, when they arrived in Cincinnati, were these soldiers able to get food," Bender told his colleagues. "That episode is a sad commentary on a nation fighting to uphold democracy abroad.

Negro, White Leaders Assail Discrimination

MAY 10 1942

(Special to The Worker)

OXFORD, Pa., May 9.—Negro and white leaders at a conference on The Status of the Negro in a Fighting Democracy held at Lincoln University today denounced discrimination as harmful to victory and said Jim-Crowism is a weapon of the fascists.

Dr. William H. Hastie, Dean of Howard University Law School, particularly condemned "prejudice-as-usual against Negroes in the armed services" and said:

"Segregation must be abolished. . . . It is important here that white and Negro soldiers be placed together so that white soldiers will realize Negroes are fighting for their country too."

Ewart Guinere, Negro trade union leader from New York City, urged full support of the war by the Negro people and demanded an end to discrimination.

A. Clayton Powell, New York City councilman, also addressed the conference.

MAY 10 1942

Jean Muir, the actress, assailed Hollywood for its treatment of the Negro people and said "it is time to awaken film producers to what they are doing to spread racialism and hatred by depicting Negroes in the traditional manner."

Liu Liango-mo of the United China Relief told the conference that "Jim-Crowism and anti-Semitism in this country are closely connected with fascism. If we can lick fascism and Japanese imperialism we lick Jim Crowism and anti-Semitism at the same time."

Editor, Virginian-Pilot:

I am an American Negro, a carpenter. Last week I was in Norfolk seeking employment. I registered at the Y. M. C. A. there and was advised to register with U. S. Employment Service of that city. It is located at 115 West Tazewell street.

When I entered the building, I noticed two signs, labeled, "White." So, naturally I looked for the "Colored" signs. Seeing none, I inquired and was told that the colored office was on the second floor.

When I reached the second floor, an aged white man setting at a desk, yelled, "What dya want?"

I told him that I wanted to register for work. He then directed that I go back down stairs, go outside of the building and come in through the alley to the back office on the second floor.

May I describe this alley entrance to you? Garbage and trash were lined on each side of the alley leading to the back entrance. Just inside the entrance and up the stairway to the second floor, smelled like the inside of a lavatory. In fact, there were evidences showing that it had been used for such.

By the time I reached the office, I was so disgusted that I did not feel like filing an application for a job. While waiting to be interviewed I learned that there were no lavatory facilities for Negro men or women in this building. It is often necessary to wait from 30 to 45 minutes or longer in order to file an application. This building is downtown in a white business section where there are no public rest rooms for Negroes.

Since this is the U. S. Employment Service, I see no reason why any man should suffer such unpleasant conditions in order to register for a job. I am wondering if the alley entrance could not be done away with and rest room accommodations be provided for Negro applicants. If the alley entrance just must be, then, may I suggest, that a large pointed sign directing colored people to the alley be put up, because no one would think that this alley was the entrance to the U. S. Employment Service.

Jim-Crow in Steel Plants -- End It Now!

MAY 24 1942

By Carl Reeve
(Special to the Daily Worker)

COATESVILLE, Pa., May 23.—The Negro steel workers are playing a prominent role in the steel situation in Central Pennsylvania. In Coatesville there are 1,500 Negroes in the Lukens mills and fully that many more in the Bethlehem mill at Steelton. It is clear to these Negro workers and to everybody else that the steel companies are refusing to carry out the President's Executive Order regarding placing Negroes in industry without discrimination. They think it is time something is done about jim-crow in the steel mills, which hampers war production.

These Negro workers were among the foremost in the building of the union when SWOC was organized. Today they play an important role in all union questions. However, in some cases union leaders have not been aggressive enough in supporting the Negroes in the fight against discrimination inside the mills, for the training of young Negroes for skilled jobs in the mills, and in fighting for the admission of Negroes into the mill.

MAY 24 1942

ONLY 200 HIRED

The failure to hire more Negroes is seen in its most acute form in the Bethlehem, Pennsylvania mill. Out of more than 25,000 workers, less than 200 are Negroes. At the insistence of the workers, a training school has been started which admits some Negroes who are okayed by the company. But the company does not hire those Negroes for the jobs for which they were trained.

In the Central Pennsylvania mills where thousands of Negroes are working, the discrimination inside the mill has not been relaxed in spite of the war urgency. One Negro steel worker told me that he was a licensed crane operator in New York. When he tried to get work as a crane operator, the personnel director of Lukens Steel told him "You know that there are some jobs in the mill that are white jobs and some that are colored jobs. That's the way it's always been and the way it's always going to be."

Negro workers such as this one have had the experience of seeing one young white worker after another trained and promoted over their heads, while they remain at semi-skilled jobs.

MAY 24 1942

The housing facilities for the Negro steel workers in Coatesville are scandalously inadequate. There are a few segregated areas and little choice. There is, for example, one row of houses bordering the main highway. Here the Negroes live in board shacks all of which have outside toilets. The children must play just off the highway. The water for drinking is hauled in buckets. Some of the workers in these houses have worked in the steel mills for fourteen, fifteen, sixteen years or more. Many of them have had to "bootleg" the knowledge of how to run cranes or other machines. Yet inside the mill they cannot gain promotion no matter how good their work may be.

The Negro steel workers are demanding:

1. That young Negroes be given the opportunity to train for skilled jobs.

MAY 24 1942

2. That these jobs be opened to the Negroes in the steel mills and that the vicious practice of jim-crowing be eliminated. The Negro steel worker must be allowed to hold any job in the mill for which he is qualified.

The Negro workers in the founding of the union proved to be among the best fighters. The union will be stronger if more attention is paid to fighting for all the grievances of the Negroes.

Equal Opportunity Dickerson's Plea

MAY 2 2 1942

CHICAGO—(ANP)—Addressing several hundred members of the Rotary club of Chicago at a luncheon held last Tuesday at the Palmer House, Earl B. Dickerson, militant alderman of the Second ward and president of the Chicago Urban league, declared: "The second emancipation must be written at the next peace table. It must give all peoples equality of opportunity."

"Negroes are better off in this country than they would be under Hitler! So are the whites," he exclaimed, then continued:

To have unity in the war program we must have unity as to the war objective. There are those like Bilbo and Reynolds in the south, and others in the north, who talk about preserving democracy but mean preserving the status quo. They are interested in preserving a dual democracy for the benefit of the few at the expense of the masses, in preserving the right to discriminate racially, or to conduct their business without any governmental regulation.

MAY 2 2 1942

"The 14,000,000 nonwhite citizens of the United States have no interest in preserving these things They are vitally interested in preserving the chance for fulfillment of the doctrine of equal opportunity for all, as expressed in the Declaration of Independence, in the bill of rights and in the 14th amendment to the constitution.

"We won the First World war, but we lost the peace because we did not analyze the meaning of the democracy for which we aimed to make the world safe.

"We are all fighting against the infiltration of Nazism, a doctrine of the supremacy of one racial stock over the other. Then why not do away with any similar racialism at home?"

SEARLE DENOUNCES RACE JOB BARRIERS

He Tells Milwaukee Meeting That Is Hitler's Doctrine

MAY 2 5 1942

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MILWAUKEE, May 24—Racial barriers in American industry were denounced by Dr. Robert W. Searle of New York at a meeting today in connection with the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A.

"If we apply the doctrine of the master race to the minorities in our country, then our difference from Adolf Hitler is only in degree, not in kind," he declared.

Dr. Searle, who is secretary of the Greater New York Federation of Churches, spoke at an interracial fellowship and good-will service.

Telling of conferences with industrial leaders on the question of equal employment opportunities for Negroes, Dr. Searle said they had told him that they "believed in" such equality, but that it was not practicable at this time.

"Suppose the men in Australia and Iceland were called to action, and answered that they 'believed in' it, but did not regard it as feasible at the moment," he commented.

MAY 2 5 1942

"We live in a day when life is sternly demanding the payment of our promises," he said. "In our pledge of allegiance to our flag, how often we have said: 'One nation indivisible, with liberty and justice for all'! Now life wants to know whether we meant what we said.

"We miss the significance of the terrible world struggle if we do not see that those words, 'liberty and justice,' are emblazoned on the banner of the embattled humanity which is fighting for its life."

Steamship Lines Told They Must Comply With President's Executive Order 8802

MAY 2 3 1942

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Steamship lines engaged in the transportation of war materials are war industries and come under Executive Order 8802, which outlaws discrimination based on race, creed and national origin, according to an opinion rendered by John Lord O'Brian, general counsel of the War Production Board, to the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice, and anounced Monday by Lawrence W. Cramer, executive secretary of the committee.

Mr. O'Brian studied the status of steamship lines at the request of the Committee and came to the conclusion that, "Steamship lines engaged in the transporation of war materials are to be regarded as defense industries, even in the absence of government contracts."

This opinion was requested in the light of numerous complaints reaching the Committee from seamen and other shipworkers who allege that they have been denied jobs solely because of their race, or national origin.

MAY 2 3 1942

With an earlier opinion by Mr. O'Brian that railroads are war industries within the meaning of Executive Order 8802, the Fair Employment Practice Committee has had its field of operation broadened. The executive order authorized the Committee to receive complaints and correct grievances of discrimination in war industries and the government, based on race, creed, color, or national origin.

MAY 2 3 1942

FIVE FIRMS TO COMPLY

Five additional war contractors have notified the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice that they intend to comply with its recent directions to follow an employment policy which does not discriminate against workers because of their race, creed, color, or national origin, Lawrence W. Cramer, executive secretary of the committee, announced May 20th.

The companies reporting are the A. O. Smith Corporation, Milwaukee; the Buick Motor Division of General Motors Corporation, Detroit; Bearse Manufacturing Company, Chicago; the Studebaker Corporation, South Bend, Ind., and the Majestic Radio and Television Corporation, Chicago. The Heil Company of Milwaukee informed the committee recently of the steps it had taken to comply.

The directions of the committee grow out of hearings conducted in Chicago January 19 and 20, in which the companies took part.

No Negro Staff Officers On 93rd Infantry Division, First All-Negro Army Division Formed In Arizona

MAY 2 3 1942

SAN ANTONIO, Tex. — The first all-colored division of World War II was officially organized May 15 at Fort Huachuca, Arizona, with the reactivation of the 93rd Infantry Division. Under the command of Major General Charles P. Hall, this new division will become a part of Lieutenant General Walter Krueger's Third Army which has headquarters here.

The 93rd Division of World War I was composed of Negro National Guard troops from New York, Ohio, Illinois, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Tennessee, Maryland, and the District of Columbia. It was made up of four infantry regiments, the 369th, the 370th, 371st and 372nd.
